theme of a fugue in four parts. The fugue is carried on with spirit and masterly clearness till the theme has "flown" through all the voices, when, as an accompaniment to its further development, the trombones begin the chorale in augmentation and play it steadily through, with a brief pause between each two phrases. All this time, the fugue goes on, its progress being varied by the usual devices of sequence, inversion, and stretto, and the whole being welded together with surprising skill and grandeur of effect. In connection with the chorale played against the fugue, the thoughts of connoisseurs will at once revert to the Finale of Mendelssohn's "Reformation" Symphony. There, however, the chorale is wholly independent of the fugal theme, whereas, here, the second is part of the first. With regard to unity of effect, therefore, and also with regard to precise form, Mr. Macfarren's music is unique; its like not even being found in Bach, who anticipated most things in the science of his art. A brief dominant pedal, and an emphatic iteration in full harmony of the phrases upon which the fugue is constructed brings the chorus and the first Part of the Oratorio to an end.

PART II.—No. 11. The scene has now changed from the Desert to Herod's palace, and in a duet—Andante con moto, A flat—the licentious monarch and the ascetic preacher of righteousness stand face to face. There is a soft and languid grace about the theme of Herod's opening phrases, "Whatsoever my eyes desire," &c., and not less in keeping is John's indignant appeal (Allegro), "Lord! how long shall the ungodly triumph?" The latter is very suggestive; but hardly more so than the continuation. John, for example, declares the unlawfulness of Herod's marriage in an unaccompanied phrase, almost identical with a familiar "Gregorian;" and its stately non-passion in contrast with the passion that precedes and follows is one of the happiest effects in the work. It would take far more than the space now available to exhaust the beauties of this duet, and reference can only be made to the concluding part, wherein Herod, quite subdued and fearful, joins the Prophet in an ensemble marked by a chaste religiousness of style.

No. 12. The Narrator now tells how Herod gave a supper to his lords, and how, in the meantime, John had been arrested and thrown into prison through the influence of Herodias.

No. 13. The banquet has been enjoyed, and the nobles of Galilee unite in true Eastern flattery of their entertainer. Beginning Allegro con fuoco (E minor), and supported by a full orchestra, including all available instruments of percussion, the tenors and basses declaim in unison, and then antiphonally, a number of short, energetic phrases, for which, as for the music as a whole, a precedent may be found in Beethoven's famous Dervish chorus. The effect is extremely characteristic, and is made more picturesque by highly-coloured orchestration. On the words, "Thy foot shall be dipped in the blood of thine enemies," the key changes to the tonic major, and the voices having a forceful passage in unison, a portion of the overture, including the beautiful second subject, is heard in the orchestra. Nothing could be better than this. It throws light upon the overture itself; and the effect, by contrast with what has preceded, is immensely grateful. A reference to the opening subject supplies matter for a very energetic coda.

No. 14. Salome, the daughter of Herodias, now enters, and the nobles next proceed to chant her praises in a chorus—Andante grazioso, G minor.

Ped.

A musical score for the hymn "Amen". The score is written for four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass) and piano accompaniment. The key signature is one flat (B-flat major or D minor), and the time signature is common time (C). The vocal parts are arranged in four staves, each with a treble clef. The piano accompaniment is written in two staves, with a grand staff (treble and bass clefs). The lyrics "A - men," and "A - - men." are written below the vocal staves. The piano accompaniment features a simple harmonic structure with chords and moving lines in both hands.

Throughout this movement the voices can scarcely be said to have more than secondary rank, owing to the fact that Mr. Macfarren has combined with their music that to which Salome dances. We see not the Estates of Galilee, nor do we hear their words, so much as we see the maiden and hear the strains that regulate her movements. The composer has treated this situation—so delicate in oratorio—with remarkable skill. It was indeed a “happy thought” that led him to seek his dance music among the melodies of the East. By such means he not only secured appropriate themes, but a quaintness and truth of effect that cannot be too highly praised. The first dance melody is piquancy itself, being constructed upon a minor scale having two augmented seconds—between the third and fourth, sixth and seventh degrees. The second melody (major) derives character from the absence of the fourth and seventh notes of its scale. Following this is a graceful and melodious episode in B flat, on the words, “The maid is fair and beautiful;” after which the original key is resumed, piu mosso, and in a vigorous coda the nobles declare that both the king and they are pleased with Salome.

No. 15. By a clever device, Herod (in recitative) begins the utterance of his rash vow on the last note of the chorus, and thus is conveyed a strong sense of impetuosity. A recurrence in the orchestra of the melodious theme above mentioned, by way of interlude, is another feature worthy of notice.

No. 16. Gratified by the success of her charms, Salome now sings an air,—Allegro animato, C major—“I rejoice in my youth.” Abounding in bravura passages and with showy effects, this air, nevertheless, falls below the general level of the work, and we should not be surprised to find it replaced by something more worthy, and, also, of greater significance with regard to the main action of the drama.

No. 17. In this “Dialogue”—Andante mosso, C major—the nobles first mark the retirement of Salome to consult her mother, and speculate among themselves in the composer’s favourite antiphonal form, as to the result. A noticeable feature is the appearance, after “What will she ask?” and as an interlude, of the “Gregorian” phrase originally set to John’s words, “It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother’s wife.” This at once suggests both the Prophet’s offence and the doom being prepared for him. Salome now enters, and in short, detached phrases, as though fearful of the result, prefers her request. An ensemble follows, in which the chief points to be observed are Salome’s calm repetition of the monarch’s vow, and the highly dramatic effect produced by the nobles, who echo the maiden’s words. Towards the close the tempo changes to Allegro, while, with cruel persistency, the nobles ply the argument of their master’s vow; Salome closing the episode with a brilliant cadence, which may be taken to express an insolent assurance of triumph.

No. 18. The King gives vent to his grief in an air—Andante espressivo, F minor—very happily conceived and carried out. Its uniformity of style, however, makes difficult a description in words only, and we must dismiss it by stating that as an expression of poignant grief the song takes high rank.

No. 19. In this recitative the narrator tells how, “for his oath’s sake,” Herod commanded the execution of John, after which, in

No. 20, the scene closes with a chorus of nobles—Allegro energico, C sharp minor—“The wrath of the King is as messengers of death.” Energetic unisons and antiphonal effects abound in this chorus, and, joined to strong orchestral colouring, make up a most striking whole. That the music belongs to a class familiar in Oratorio it is true, but it is also true that Mr. Macfarren has achieved a result which, as regards all the essentials of such music, may compare with the best. How much this statement involves will appear to those who recall the “Woe to him” and “Stone him to death” of Mendelssohn.

No. 21. We are now with John in the prison, and hear his soliloquy beginning “A man can receive nothing except it be given him from heaven”—Moderato, A flat major. The orchestral introduction twice repeats the Church phrase, now familiar in its association with the Prophet, and it further appears in a subsequent interlude. A change to F major, Allegro non tanto, introduces an air, “He that hath the bride is the bridegroom,” which is in turn followed by a recitative, “He must increase,” and a second air in the original key, “The Father loveth the Son.” Much excellent writing distinguishes this number, nevertheless, we cannot but think that it is too extended, and might be compressed with great advantage.

No. 22. The execution of John is narrated in a beautiful and most expressive recitative. The church phrase is here used for the last time.

No. 23. The drama has now ended, and there only remains to close the work with a reflection upon the whole. This is done, in part, by an unaccompanied quartet, “Blessed are they which are persecuted”—Andante, D flat. Very calm and beautiful is the expression of this number; the writing, moreover, shows the hand of a master; and we shall be much surprised if it do not enjoy much favour quite apart from the rest of the Oratorio.

No. 24. The didactic close is prolonged by a chorus, “What went ye out for to see”—Allegro moderato, E flat—one of the most elaborate numbers in the work. An adequate analysis of its many interesting features would alone supply matter for a separate article; and we can only say that unity is given to the Oratorio by introducing the shofar which precedes the overture, and that the whole chorus is worked out in a style at once masterly and effective. Compression would possibly be an advantage, but even as it is the Finale must take rank as a worthy epilogue to a drama which confers the highest honour upon its author.

Our notice of this highly successful Festival would be incomplete were we to omit to record that, after the performance of “St. John the Baptist” on Thursday, the members of the Committee presented the composer with 100 guineas (not from the Festival receipts, but from a subscription made up by themselves), as a mark of their appreciation of the merit of his work. We may also mention that, at the soirée on the following evening, the Choral body gave a testimonial to Mr. Alfred Stone, the indefatigable conductor of the choir, consisting of a gold watch and chain of the value of 40 guineas. In consideration of his absence from indisposition on Tuesday night, Mr. Sims Reeves returned 100 guineas of his fee to the Committee.

ALL who have aided in originating musical performances on an extensive scale must have had much to battle with in overcoming the reluctance to engaging in an enterprise which, although coupled with a much higher object, cannot but be viewed by the majority of the people as a commercial speculation. The Triennial Festivals already firmly established are sanctified by time, and are therefore supported, not only as a pleasure, but as a duty, by those whose power and influence it becomes absolutely necessary to secure; but the timidity in entering upon the organisation of new ones has evidently held back many enthusiastic persons from making the attempt, even in those large cities where choral music has long been so carefully cultivated as to render the task a comparatively easy one. The great success of the Bristol Festival, however, which has this year led the way, will no doubt stimulate other large towns to follow so excellent an example. Glasgow has announced a musical gathering which promises to be in every respect worthy of so important a city; and, like Bristol—which has reflected honour upon itself by the production of Mr. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist"—is resolved to assert the claims of English art by including in its programme Mr. Henry Smart's Oratorio "Jacob." We may now look with confidence for the renewal of those festivals at York, Bradford and Leeds, which were invariably attended with such artistic results; for there can be no question that the musical resources in the North of England are fully equal to the occasion; and for the business part of an undertaking which so largely benefits charity as well as art, there will always be found an ample number of able and energetic persons both ready and willing to act.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE eighteenth season of the Saturday afternoon concerts, so anxiously looked for, not only by the season-ticket holders, but by all lovers of sterling music, commenced on the 4th ult., before a large audience. The programmes of each performance have been, as usual, in the highest degree interesting, the main attraction, however, being in the orchestral pieces, amongst which may always be found some real or comparative novelty. A bright and clever "Festival" Overture, composed by Dr. Julius Rietz, to celebrate the "Golden Wedding" of the King and Queen of Saxony, and a harpsichord concerto by Bach, excellently played on the pianoforte by Herr Pauer, were amongst the welcome items at the first concert. On the following Saturday a new "Meditation," by M. Gounod, charmingly melodious, and replete with poetical feeling, was given for the first time, and so thoroughly won the good opinion of the audience as to be unanimously encored. It is written for a violin, with orchestral accompaniments, but according to a plan still pursued at this establishment, in spite of continual protest, the solo part was played by sixteen violins. At the same concert much effect was produced by Madlle. Plateau's violoncello solo—an air with variations, by Servais—her clever performance being rewarded by the warmest applause at its conclusion, and a recall. A feature at the third concert was Mendelssohn's hymn, "Lord, bow down Thine ear unto me," for contralto solo, chorus and orchestra, which was given on this occasion for the first time. The work, as it now appears, is a reconstruction of an early composition, entitled, "Three Sacred Songs for an Alto voice, chorus and organ," and is as truly religious in feeling as anything Mendelssohn ever wrote. Commencing with a beautiful Andante solo and chorus, the fine Lutheran chorale, to the words, "Hear Thy child, O Lord eternal," follows with excellent effect. The third movement—like the first, for solo voice with chorus—contains some devotional phrases, the charm of which is materially aided by the exquisite colouring of the instrumental accompaniment, and the final fugue is a masterpiece of contrapuntal skill. Madame Patey sang the solo portions of this hymn with much truth of expression, and was well supported by the choir. At the fourth concert, on the 25th ult., the two orchestral interludes from Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Oratorio, "The Light of the World," were performed and received with marked applause. The vocal music at these concerts has been too often entrusted to untried singers, but the programmes have been occasionally strengthened by the names of eminent artists, amongst whom we may mention Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Madame Alvsleben.

MR. F. E. GLADSTONE (Organist of St. Patrick's Church, Brighton, and late Organist of Chichester Cathedral) reminds us that our notice of the organ performances at the Royal Albert Hall, in the last number, contained no allusion to a highly interesting Recital of classical music given by him on the 18th of July. We hasten to remedy an omission, which we need scarcely assure Mr. Gladstone was purely accidental.

AN "Opera di Camera" entertainment, under the direction of Mr. F. A. Bridge, was given at the Town Hall, Poplar, on Tuesday the 14th ult., the artists being Miss Mabel Brent, Miss Fanny Emerton, Mr. Arthur Thomas, Mr. T. C. Travers, and Mr. F. A. Bridge; pianist, Mrs. Elizabeth Stirling. The programme consisted of "Disguises," Offenbach's "Lischen and Fritzchen," and Sullivan's "Cox and Box." The room was crowded, and the entertainment appeared to give great satisfaction. The proceeds were devoted to the funds of St. Mary's Schools, Garford Street.

AN attractive series of Organ Recitals is now being given by Mr. Francis Edward Gladstone in the Dome, Brighton, the chief feature of which is that the works performed will consist almost entirely of compositions originally written for the instrument. The first Recital took place on the 23rd ult.

THE monthly concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given at the Pimlico Rooms on the 3rd ult., and was numerously attended, the Society having recently much increased. Miss Bessie Stroud and Mr. George Carter were highly successful in their vocal solos, the latter being warmly encored in one of his songs. A quartett by Mr. David Strong, "Maiden, wrap thy mantle round thee," given for the first time by Misses Bessie Stroud and Clara Buley, Messrs. Carter and Ellis, was much and deservedly applauded; and Miss Pritchard's pianoforte solos formed an attractive feature in the programme. The part-songs were most carefully rendered and well received. Mr. Garfield was an efficient conductor.

IN addition to the list published in the last number of the Musical Times, the following works have been performed during October, the concluding month of the Daily Orchestral Concerts at the Royal Albert Hall:—

BEETHOVEN. Concertos: in G major (Miss Busby), in E flat (Mr. W. Coenen), and Triple (Mr. Buzian, Mr. Pettit and Mr. Coenen).—MOZART. Overture: L'Impresario.—MENDELSSOHN. Concerto in D minor (Mr. W. S. Hoyte): Trauer Marsch and Wedding March.—CHERUBINI. Overture: Medea.—ROSSINI. Overture: Il Barbiere.—SPONTINI. Overture: La Vestale.—WEBER. Overture: Preciosa, and Concerto: in C (Mr. Oliver King).—SCHUMANN. Overture: Genoveva, and Symphony in D minor.—BRAHMS. Serenade in A, No. 2.—GADE. Overtures: Op. 7, Scotch; No. 3 in C, Op. 14; Op. 37, Hamlet; and Op. 39, Michel Angelo.—GOUNOD. Ballet Music, Reine de Saba.—BENNETT, SIR W. S. Concerto: No. 4 in F minor (Mr. Geo. Wheelton). Caprice in E major (Mr. E. H. Thorne).—LISZT. Hungarian Fantasia (Mr. W. Coenen).—STEPHENS, CHARLES E. Overture: Concert Overture, "A dream of happiness."

IT is with much regret that we announce the death of Mr. John Black, for 63 years with the firm of Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons, and well known and highly respected by the members of the profession. Mr. Black was in his 78th year, and his decease took place at his residence in Brompton on the 20th ult.

THE fourteenth annual Festival of the Ely Diocesan Church Music Society took place in the Cathedral Church of the Diocese on Tuesday, the 21st ult., and thus, in some degree, was identified with the series of services which had been held in commemoration of the foundation of the church, on the five previous days. Whilst speaking of the anniversary services it may be remarked that an admirable illustration of the state of Cathedral Music at the present day was furnished, Sir John Goss, Dr. Wesley, Dr. Stainer, Mr. E. J. Hopkins, Mr. H. Smart, Mr. Barnby, Dr. Garrett, Mr. J. Baptiste Calkin and Dr. Chipp, Organist to the Cathedral, being all fairly represented by their works. On the Tuesday the meeting of the Diocesan Choirs numbered upwards of 500 voices. Those which were surplised being formed into procession, with a distinctive banner at the head of each Church choir, the music of the processional hymn was played over by a military band stationed in the triforium on the north side of the nave, and to this accompaniment the processional hymn was sung with a steadiness which has seldom been attained by other means. From the opening chords it was evident that the brightness of the brass instruments, combined with the vigorous beat of the drum, would be sufficient to keep together any number of voices that could be gathered within the Cathedral walls. A decided difference was observable in those hymns which were accompanied on the organ, that instrument sounding almost invariably after the voices. It is much to be regretted that the organ was allowed to accompany the voices in Mendelssohn's Anthem "Judge me, O God," as it was specially intended by its composer to be sung without accompaniment, in addition to which the voices were clearly able to dispense with it. The second Anthem, Gounod's "Sing praises to the Lord" likewise received ample justice at the hands of the Choirs, as did Smart's Te Deum in F, though on what principle the Benedictus was sung to a chant it is difficult to imagine. At the Afternoon Service the Canticles were chanted to the Gregorian tones, as arranged by Dr. Wesley, and the anthems sung in the Morning Service were repeated. There would appear to be no doubt as to the success of the experiment of accompanying the processional hymns with a military band, for the vastness of the building softened any harshness of tone that might have been otherwise observable, and left simply a bright, rhythmical, strongly marked effect, which proved to be of the greatest value to the steadiness of the music.

THE alterations of Holy Trinity Church, Gough Square, having been completed, and choir stalls erected, the singers were vested in surplices for the first time on Sunday, the 5th ult.

ON the occasion of the re-assembling of the Concordia Choral Society, Theobald's Row, under the conductorship of Mr. J. Carisbrooke Merrick, a presentation of a handsome tea and coffee service was made by the members to their honorary secretary, Mr. F. Budge, as a mark of their esteem for his valuable services, and also to show their good wishes for him on his recent marriage to a member of the Society.

AT St. Stephen's, South Kensington, the Harvest Festival Services, held on the 12th and 19th ult., were as follows:—Early celebration at 9 a.m.; Matins and second celebration at 11 a.m.; Evensong at 3.30 and 7 p.m. The music, which was exceedingly well rendered, included Smart's Morning Service in F; "O Lord, how manifold," (Barnby); Offertory Sentences (Barnby); Lowe's new Communion Service; Goss's Evening Service in A; Ferial Responses; Hopkins's Evening Service in F; "Plead Thou my cause" (Mozart); and a harvest carol, "Holy is the seed time," written for the occasion by the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Albert Lowe, who presided at the organ, and to whom much credit is due for so greatly improving the musical services at this church. The preachers were—Morning, the Rev. J. P. Waldo, M.A., Vicar; afternoon, the Rev. G. S. Flack, M.A.; evening, the Right Rev. Bishop Beckles.

THURSDAY and Sunday, the 9th and 12th ult., were observed at the Church of St. Saviour's, Pimlico, as days of thanksgiving for the safe ingathering of the harvest. The church was decorated with even greater taste than usual, and presented a most festal aspect. On Thursday the day began with the usual early celebration. Matins were sung at eleven and Evensong at eight, followed by an eloquent sermon from the Vicar. The choir then sang a selection of music, including, "As the hart pants," (Mendelssohn), and portions of "The Mount of Olives," "Elijah," the "Creation," "Messiah," &c. A few professional and other friends kindly gave assistance, and the musical portion of the service left nothing to be desired. Great credit is due to Masters A. Coward and A. Serjeant for the manner in which they sang "I waited for the Lord" ("Lobgesang"), and to the former for his beautiful rendering of "I will sing of Thy great mercies" ("St. Paul"). A word of praise is also due to Mr. H. Parkin, for his singing of "In native worth" ("Creation"). The choruses were given with great spirit. Mr. H. M. Higgs very ably presided at the organ, the conductor being the organist of the church, Mr. James M. Coward. The church was crowded in every part.

DURING the past month Mr. George Wheeldon, of Wolverhampton, gave three performances of Sir Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor at the Daily Orchestral Concerts in the Royal Albert Hall. The admirable exposition of the composer's intentions may be set down to the fact that Mr. Wheeldon studied under Sir Sterndale Bennett for some years. It is somewhat satisfactory to find that though we are deprived of Madame Arabella Goddard's presence in England, many yet remain whose taste leads them to select, and whose powers enable them to render justice to, a work which does honour to English musicianship.

M. RIVIERE'S Promenade Concerts have attracted large audiences during the past month, and if the second part of the programmes were equal in quality to the first, we should have nothing but the highest praise for the enterprise. We have had a "Bishop" night, a "Beethoven" night, a "Meyerbeer" night, and we may also say a "Carter" night, for one evening was given up for the performance of this composer's Cantata, "Placida." The classical selections have been extremely good; and to the credit of so "popular" an audience, it must be said that they were listened to with a reverential attention in the highest degree encouraging to those who desire to promote a knowledge and appreciation of high class works amongst the people. The vocal music has been, as a rule, somewhat weak; but several pianists have appeared with much success. Criticism on the merits of all the new comers would not here be possible; but we must commend in the warmest terms the performance of Litolf's pianoforte Concerto, in E flat, by Mr. Willem Coenen. The excessive difficulties of this work were surmounted with an ease which quite took the audience by surprise; and the exciting character of the music, as well as the admirable manner in which it was executed, caused a burst of applause which could only be appeased by the performer re-appearing on the platform and bowing his acknowledgments.

THE first concert for the present season of the Railway Clearing House Musical Society was given in the Dining-room of the establishment on the 14th ult., before a large audience. The principal attraction was the performance of Handel's "Alexander's Feast," the solo parts being entrusted to Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Curtis, Mr. W. H. Westlake, and Mr. A. Young. The chorus singing gave decided promise of future excellence, the best pieces being "The many rend the skies" and "Break his bonds," both of which elicited much and deserved applause. The band will require much practice before it can be sufficiently relied upon to accompany works of such importance; but the concert (which included a miscellaneous part, consisting of vocal and instrumental selections) may be commended as a very fair sample of what zeal and earnestness can accomplish in a short time.

A MISCELLANEOUS concert, under the direction of Mr. George Wells, was given by the Choir of the Beaumont Institution, on Tuesday evening, the 30th Sept. Miss Plater, Miss Jones, and Mrs. Poole elicited warm encores for their solos; and Miss Stokes, Mr. G. M. Smith, and Mr. Albert James were received with much applause. Among the choral pieces were "Stay, prithee stay," (Bishop); "O come unto the woods" (Smart); "Ripe Strawberries," (a part-song by Hatton) encored; "See the chariot at hand" (Horsley), and two part-songs by Mr. Wells, "Night" and "The Troubadour," which were sung with considerable care and expression. Some choruses from "Martha" and "Faust," and a quartett, "Autumn leaves," by Misses Adams and Mason, and Messrs. Matthews and Bandy, were also given. Miss Fanny Henman presided at the pianoforte.

FESTIVAL CONCERTS IN THE PROVINCES.—Mr. James C. Daniel, the well-known concert agent, of Clifton, has lately given a series of concerts under the above title, through several of the principal towns in Wales and round the South and East Coasts, visiting Abergavenny, Swansea, Haverfordwest, Tenby, Llanelly, Merthyr Tydvil, Gloucester, Westbury, Weymouth, Blandford, Bournemouth, Salisbury, Winchester, Southampton, Southsea, Guildford, Worthing, Eastbourne, Hastings, Canterbury, Ramsgate, Deal, Colchester, Bury St. Edmunds, Diss, Lowestoft, Great Yarmouth, King's Lynn, Peterborough, and Cambridge. The party included Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdle. José Sherrington, Madame Poole, Mr. Wallace Wells (who supplied the place of Mr. Wilford Morgan), Mr. Robert Hilton, Mons. Alexander Cornelis, the well-known violinist, and Chevalier Lemmens. The programme consisted of Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Weber's "Der Freischütz," and miscellaneous selections. The artists are all so well known and stand so high in public favour, that we need scarcely say the tour, which commenced on Sept. 2nd and ended on the 10th ult., was a great success in every respect, and we understand that the result was so satisfactory that another tour under the same title is now being arranged.

The third annual series of National Music Meetings will be held at the Crystal Palace on the 23rd, 25th and 27th June 1874. The prospectus announces that, owing to the occurrence of the Handel Festival in the same month, the competition will be confined to the classes for Choral Music and for Military Bands. The Competitions and Prizes are classified as follows:—

CLASS I.—Choral Societies not exceeding 500 Members and not less than 350 each Society, including male and female voices. In the event of the Society containing more than 500 voices, a selection of the members may be made so as to comply with this rule, but no performers shall be included who are not ordinary members of the Society. For the best performance of a selection of choruses, the Challenge Prize, of the value of £1,000, and a purse of £100.

CLASS II.—Choral Societies not exceeding 200 and not less than 150 voices each. For the best performance of a selection of choruses or madrigals, a purse of £100.

CLASS III.—Choral Societies for men's voices, not exceeding 80 and not less than 60 voices each. For the best performance of one or more pieces, a purse of £50.

CLASS VI.—Bands of Regiments of the Line (Corps de Musique d'harmonie), not less than 35 performers. For the best performance of a selection of pieces, a purse of £50.

CLASS VII.—Brass bands, not included in the foregoing (corps de musique fanfare), not less than 30 performers, for the best performance of a selection of pieces, a purse of £50.

CLASS XII.—Certificates of merit. Examination in harmony, sight-singing, or other branches of music.

The whole of the choral music selected for performance by the competitors will be published during the present month by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.; and an edition in the Sol-fa notation will be also issued by Mr. Curwen.

A PROSPECTUS setting forth the merits of an acoustical invention, under the title of the "Kiosk Hollandia," has been forwarded to us from the Hague, accompanied with laudatory notices extracted from various journals. As far as we can gather from the description, it appears to be a "Music-tent" so constructed that the sound of music performed therein is conveyed, as through a gaspipe, to great distances. That the effect is even improved by this process is evidenced by the following quotation: "that the fanfares and harmony-orchesters which sounded too strong till now in many a concert-room, or even offended the auditory-nerve by their crackling, are through this means (propagation under the earth) produced delightfully in the concert room." We of course have no means of personally testing the truth of this; but as it is stated that "harmonious combinations, as well as the solos" may be "laid on" to various concert-rooms simultaneously, there can be no doubt that it may become as valuable to musical executants as the "manifold writer" has proved to authors. The inventor of the "Kiosk Hollandia" is L. J. Lefebvre, of the firm of F. J. Weygand and Co.

THE excellent series of concerts under the title of "Musical Evenings," commenced at St. George's Hall on Wednesday the 22nd ult., with every prospect of continued success. The executants were Messrs. H. Holmes, Folkes, A. Burnett and Signor Pezze for the string Quartets, (which are always a marked feature in the programme), Miss Channell and Mr. F. Westlake being the pianists. Songs were contributed by Miss A. Sinclair, Messrs. Minson and Kemp accompanying with much ability.

THE members of Mr. William Carter's Choir met at the Music Hall, Store Street, on the 27th September, for the purpose of presenting their Conductor with a testimonial, consisting of a complete edition of the works of the Handel Society, accompanied by an illuminated address. The choir was occupied by the Rev. J. Buckley, of Holy Trinity, Brompton, and the presentation of the testimonial was entrusted to Mr. Clarke. The gift was acknowledged by Mr. Carter in a suitable speech; and the evening was brought to a termination by the singing of a selection of pieces by the Choir.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

O pray for the peace of Jerusalem. Trio for two tenors and bass. Composed by Edward Hodges, Mus. Doc., Cantab.

THE name of Dr. Hodges has slept too long in the forgetfulness of musicians, and it is well for art and for devotion—in so far as the former is an accessory to the latter—that his daughter, with truly filial piety, is devoting herself to the publication of some of his music, which should in its very nature command attention and stamp itself on the memory. A native of Bristol, our composer held successively the post of organist in the churches of St. James and St. Nicholas in that city, and in the parish church of Clifton. At that time he produced many works for the service of the sanctuary, distinguished himself no less as an executant on his favourite instrument (in which capacity he was eminently extolled by the elder Samuel Wesley), displayed peculiar talent for mechanical contrivance, and drew hearts around him by the charm of his social intercourse. By-and-bye he went to New York, where he lived for many years, was appointed to the head of musical affairs in the famous Trinity Church, superintended the erection of the great organ therein, and won general esteem by the skilful exercise of his twofold talent of playing and producing. After the death of his wife, he returned to the city of his birth, and there in a few years he expired on the 3rd of September 1867. His obsequies were solemnized with much honour, the musical portion of the service being sung by the Cathedral choir, a part of this being selected from his own works. The piece before us is taken from an extensive anthem, "I was glad," and its merit is such as to make us wish for a knowledge of the entire composition. The trio belongs rather to the older than the present style of Church composition; its character is purely diatonic, but not wholly contrapuntal, for it contains some such free graces as the pleasing use of the consonant fourth in a second inversion, and other points which, though equally good in their way, were totally unknown to the eldest composers of music for the Anglican Church. The organ part is but a duplication of those for the voices, the strongest test that can be of the integrity and the sufficiency of these. Its effect is entirely a vocal one; and as the parts are most pleasant to sing, this effect is sure to gratify hearers and singers alike. Devoutness, an acknowledged characteristic of the music of Dr. Hodges, is the pervading spirit of the fragment before us. This little piece was among those performed at the composer's funeral, from which circumstance it derives special interest for his friends; and there are few things that could better speak the healthful trust which was the author's reputed spring of action in life, nor thus better represent him in death. We have here but an episode from a far more considerable work, and we shall be the better able to judge it when we are aware of its relationship to the context.

I hear along our street. Christmas Carol. Composed by E. Silas.

MR. SILAS has here produced a work which will add pleasure to many a Christmas fire-side. To those who have heard it performed by Mr. Henry Leslie's choir, it is unnecessary to say a word—criticism is out of the question. But to those of our readers who are yet unacquainted with the work, a brief description may be interesting. The poem in its translation by H. W. Longfellow is too well known to need comment with its quaint refrain,

"Let us by the fire, ever higher Sing them till the night expire."

The introductory phrases are given out softly with much dramatic propriety, the burst into a fortissimo at the words above quoted, producing a vigorous effect of contrast. D minor, with its attendant keys, F major and A major, having been freely used, an episode in D major is introduced with considerable brightness of effect at the words, "Shepherds, at the grange where the babe was born." A recurrence of the words "Let us by the fire" is this time united to a new subject treated in the fugal form. Subsequently freshness and variety are gained by two episodes "Nuns in frigid cells at this holy tide," set in the older and more severe church forms, and "Washer-women old, to the sound they beat," to which the composer has wedded a subject equally appropriate and grotesque. With all the admirable musicianship there is an inner feeling, a local colour which stamps it as a true Christmas Carol, and not a mere ordinary piece of music set to words of a Christmas-tide character.

Elegie, pour le Piano.

Par Joseph Romano.

A HIGHLY attractive melody forms the basis of the first piece, which, although called a "Caprice," is written too much on the model of the modern "arrangement" to fairly justify its title. It is difficult to play; but good executants will find it a showy composition for performance in a mixed company. We infinitely prefer the "Elegie," which has a leading subject, in B minor, of much pathos, a characteristic accompaniment for the left hand giving it an additional interest. The phrase, in F sharp major forms a good contrast, and leads well to the energetic passage in the original tonic major, in which key, after an effective coda, the piece concludes. Pianists will, we are certain, be pleased with this composition, for it contains much variety, and is moreover melodious enough to engage the attention of non-musical listeners.

Un doux Souvenir; pour le Piano. Par Franz Abt.

THE title of this piece sufficiently suggests the character of its leading subject, which is most appropriately tranquil and melodious. The air is written with the usual accompaniments, divided between the two hands, the arrangement, however, presenting no difficulty even to a moderate performer. The second theme, like the first, modulates into the relative minor of the dominant, this change, in consequence, falling somewhat tamely on the ear; but the melody is bold and effective. The triplet accompaniment occasionally given to the principal subject on its recurrence affords, perhaps, hardly enough variety to sustain the interest.

The last Watch. Sea song. Written by Henry Farnie. Composed by G. A. Macfarren.

THIS pathetic song has been most sympathetically set by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, who, apart from his musician-like manner of treating the words entrusted to him, invariably seizes upon the dramatic intention of a poet with an earnestness which cannot be too highly praised. In proof of this we may cite the varied manner in which the accompaniments to the several verses of this descriptive piece are written, the rising of the tempest, which decides the fate of the "brave old dog," especially, having a thrilling effect upon the listener. The subject of the song has a flavour of the sea, which requires not the restless triplet accompaniment to establish its character; and any vocalist who has the power, musically, to recite a simple story, will find a prize in the "Last Watch." Our only regret is that singers should choose so little for themselves that compositions like this can be passed over, whilst meretricious songs are "pushed" with a pertinacity which would be most commendable in a worthier cause.

LAMBORN COCK.

Zampa. Fantaisie, pour Piano, sur l'Opera d'Herold, par Théophile Arènes.

OPERATIC Fantasias will always be popular in drawing-rooms; for as they are generally used to accompany the conversation, the familiar melodies selected in these pieces fall agreeably upon the uneducated ear during the few intervals of silence caused either by exhausted nature or the want of subjects to talk about. But for the sake of the executant—who would disdain the performance of mere "tunes"—as well as for the necessity of affording pleasure to the few music-lovers who occasionally hover round the pianoforte, it is important that the airs introduced should be "dressed" for the party, like the guests; and a musical costumier, therefore, must have taste as well as knowledge to ensure an extensive fashionable patronage. A difficulty, however, arises when these pieces are pushed forward into the world of art, and sent round to musical journals "for review." What can be said? As they are written for musical children, by musical children they should be judged; and if they serve their intended purpose, why should criticism on their merits be provoked? Our remarks, however, have been rather called up by the character of the piece before us than by the piece itself. Of its kind it is a fair specimen: the subjects are well chosen, and the embroidery with which they are decked out is chosen by an experienced hand. We only regret that the superficial musical education of the day should create an extensive demand for such pieces.

L'Entretien. A Duet for the Pianoforte. Composed by T. M. Mudie.

THE effect of a sound musical education based upon solid artistic principles never was more forcibly illustrated than in the compositions of Mr. Mudie. One of the early students of the Royal Academy of Music, he gave such strong indications of a creative power, that there can be little doubt he would have advanced to the front rank as a composer had he not, when still very young, received an appointment which absorbed the greater portion of his time and attention. His Pianoforte works, however, are sufficiently numerous to attest the truth of our assertion; and amongst them we must especially commend the little gem now before us. That it is one of the most charming and melodious trifles we have seen for years is not its only recommendation—it is an admirable study for touch, phrasing, and those minute effects of light and shade the inculcation of which with young players is of vital importance. The conversational character of the duet gives an equal amount of interest to both parts; and although the passages are by no means difficult, they require to be studied with extreme attention in order fully to realise the meaning of their author.

Our rest remaineth. Sacred Duetto. Words by Helen Marion Burnside. Music by Henry Smart.

THE sacred feeling of the words is so admirably reflected in the music of this duet, that we have little doubt of its becoming a favourite with singers who desire something beyond a mere "setting" of commonplace verses, with a "second" such as we occasionally hear extemporised by ambitious vocalists in company. The solos for both voices are extremely effective; and the lingering of the contralto, on the words, "That rest, our rest remaineth," before the recurrence of the original subject, is a point worthy of commendation.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CHURCH CONGRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I really thought we had heard the last of that absurd division of music into three styles—sublime, beautiful, and ornamental. I am sorry to say it was brought prominently forward by Professor Ouseley, who quoted it from "Crotch's Lectures" (now out of print), who, in turn, quoted it from "Sir Joshua Reynolds" on Paintings, who, again, quoted it from a well-known French art-critic, to whom, let us hope, the honour due to such a discovery will be duly rendered!

Now as to the absurdity of it. Everybody is aware that the limbs of a logical "division" must be capable of mutually excluding each other. Let us apply this test. It is conceivable, then, according to this division, that ornamental music can exist absolutely without beauty or sublimity, that is to say, consisting of nothing whatever but ornament. Such a thing not only has never existed, but cannot even be conceived of. Similarly, if sublimity can exist to the exclusion of beauty and ornament, it must result that an abominably ugly piece of music must be sublime (not may be), because it happens not to be either beautiful or ornamental; for if the division is logical, music which does not come under any two, must, of course, come under the third remaining head.

Again. Sublimity and beauty are emotional or sentimental effects which music produces on us, whereas ornament is an ingredient of the music itself. Imagine an architect dividing universal architecture into three styles—sublime, beautiful, and gothic!!! Yet this, though simply ridiculous, is so just and fair a parallel that I leave it without a word.

That Dr. Arnold should have wasted his limited time at the Bath Congress in attempting to prop up tumble-down professorial statements is much to be regretted. If he is determined to stick to such illogical divisions for the future, I can commend to his notice the remarkable clearheadedness of a popular lecturer, who is said to have divided the moral virtues into three kinds—round, square, and sugarloaf.

One of the qualities which Dr. Arnold attributes to the sublime style is its "incomprehensibility." Accepting only this part of his definition, I will conclude by saying, that his speech at Bath was most unquestionably—in the sublime style.

Yours obediently,

Z.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BATH.—During the Church Congress meetings at Bath an exhibition of rare and ancient church furniture, &c., was held, which attracted a large number of persons. An organ, built by Sweetland, of Bath, and intended for a church near Hungerford, was erected, on which during the week Miss Pearce, Messrs. Macfarlane, Noble and Cook performed. The recitals gave unqualified satisfaction.

BIRKENHEAD.—The annual Harvest Festival took place on the 9th ult., in Holy Trinity Church, when the building was beautifully decorated with flowers. There was a large attendance in the evening, the body of the church being crowded. The service commenced with a procession of the clergy and acolytes, bearing crosses, and marching to the slow measure of a hymn by Hopkins. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. G. Chapman, of Liverpool, who also read the first lesson, the second being read by the Rev. R. E. Batty, of Birkenhead. After the hymn, "Lo, the summer comes again," a sermon was preached by the Hon. and Rev. C. A. Fielding (vicar of Stapleton), who took for his text St. John, vi. 35, "I am the bread of life." Monk's hymn, "The day is gently sinking to a close," and a processional hymn were then sung, and the service closed with Smart's Te Deum.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Acocks Green Choral Society held its annual general meeting on the 1st ult., when it appeared from the report of the committee that the association had during the past year increased both in numerical strength and efficiency. Mr. T. G. Locker, the conductor of the Society, suggested that during the winter months a short time of each rehearsal evenings should be devoted to explaining the principles of sight-singing; so that new members, with an elementary knowledge of music, might sooner become able readers. Mr. Locker adopts the "tonic," or "moveable do" system, applied to the established notation. It is proposed to give a series of Oratorio and other concerts during the ensuing winter.

BISHOP STORTFORD.—Miss Amy Perry gave her annual evening concert in the Assembly Room, on Thursday, the 9th ult., under distinguished patronage. The vocalists were Miss Ellen Glanville and Miss Dwight, both of whom were encored in several of their solos. Signor Scuderi (violinist) and Miss Perry (pianist) were also highly appreciated. The concert was very successful.

BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND.—The absence of a really efficient conductor has been the cause of the short lives which the several musical Societies formed in this city formerly enjoyed. Mr. R. T. Jefferies, whose name as a violinist is doubtless familiar to many musical circles in England, was appointed to this position about eighteen months ago, and by his abilities and energy has already formed a Society of which this remote city may feel proud. The Brisbane Musical Union now numbers 150 vocal performers and an efficient band of 30 instrumentalists. Besides glees, part-songs, &c., this Society has rendered Locke's music to Macbeth, Romberg's Lay of the Bell, &c., in a masterly way, and Mendelssohn's Elijah, and Bennett's May Queen are in rehearsal; but the greatest achievement was the recent performance of the Messiah, before an audience of 700. The solos, "Rejoice" and "But Thou didst not leave," were admirably sung by Mrs. Wilkie and Mrs. Kelt, and the choruses, "For unto us," "Hallelujah," "Worthy is the Lamb," and "Amen," were especially well rendered, Mozart's orchestral accompaniments being used on the occasion. Madame Mallalieu presided at the piano, Mr. Schofield at the organ, and Signor Benvenuti led the band. The next concert will be given for the benefit of the piano fund, a splendid Erard's Grand, kindly selected by Sir Julius Benedict, having been purchased from England at a cost of nearly £200.

BURY ST. EDMUNDS.—Under the title of Festival Concerts, two entertainments were given in the Athenæum Hall on the morning and evening of Friday, the 3rd ult. The vocalists consisted of Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdlle. José Sherrington, Madame Poole, Mr. Wallace Wells, and Mr. R. Hilton. The instrumentalists were Chevallier Lemmens (Mustel organ and pianoforte), and Mons. Cornells (pianoforte and violin). At the morning performance Rossini's Stabat Mater and a miscellaneous selection of music, formed the programme, and in the evening portions of Weber's opera Der Freischütz were given, with a miscellaneous selection. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington's rendering of the fine scena, "Softly sighs," and her sympathetic singing of "Angels, ever bright and fair" elicited the warmest applause. Madame Poole has a good and pleasing contralto voice, and sang "The Minstrel Boy" so well as to gain a rapturous encore. Mr. Hilton's full and powerful voice was heard to advantage in the bass music, and Mr. Wallace Wells was an efficient tenor.

CORK.—The devotion of the Quarant' Ore, or Forty Hours Adoration, commenced in the Church of St. Finn Barre on the 28th Sept. The ceremonies were performed with unusual splendour, and the excellence of the music was specially remarked. The Mass performed was Haydn's Sixteenth. At the Offertory Miss Murray sang the Alma Virgo, and at the Elevation Miss Barry gave, with great taste, Hargitt's O Salutaris. The choir was under the able direction of Mr. Nunan. The vespers at seven o'clock consisted of the usual vesper music, with the addition of Rossi's Tantum Ergo, and Reyloff's O Salutaris.

DUDLEY.—The annual Harvest Festival was held in the Parish Church, on Thursday evening, the 9th ult.—Preacher, the Dean of Manchester. The service was full choral, the choir of the Parish Church being assisted by the choirs of St. Edmund's, St. James's, and St. Mark's, Pennsett, numbering about eighty voices. The service was intoned by the Rev. Dr. Cosens, vicar. The Psalms were sung to Rimbaud and Humphries, the Cantate Domino to Alcock, and Deus Miseratur to Turle. The anthem selected was by Sir John Goss, "I will magnify Thee, O God, my King," which was finely rendered, each part being taken up with remarkable precision and effect. The alto solo was well sung by Mr. Harcourt, of the parish choir. The musical part of the service was under the sole direction of Mr. G. H. Mainwaring, choirmaster. The festival was continued on the following Sunday, when Macfarren's anthem, "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," was given, and highly appreciated by a congregation numbering between two and three thousand persons. Mr. Harper, the newly appointed organist, presided at the organ with great ability.

DUNHAM, CHESHIRE.—The Harvest Thanksgiving in connection with St. Mark's Church, was celebrated on Sunday, the 12th ult. The sermon was preached by the Rev. F. Wainwright, of St. John's, Altrincham. The processional hymn was "We plough the fields and scatter." The responses were Tallis's, with the Ely confession. The Psalms for the day were taken to Patten, Sir John Goss in E, and Arnold in A, the Magnificat to Humphreys, and Nunc dimittis to Purcell in C minor. The hymns, "Come, ye thankful people, come," and "Crown Him with many crowns" were taken from Hymns Ancient and Modern. A pleasing variety was obtained in the first-mentioned hymn by the children at the west end of the church taking up the refrain of one verse to themselves, accompanied only by the pedal organ. The anthem for the occasion was by T. Tallis Trimmell, "The Lord is King," which was well sung by the village choir. Mr. Charles Theo. Bowland, organist and choirmaster of the church, presided at the organ. The Harvest Thanksgiving at St. Margaret's was held on the 11th ult. Tallis's responses; Canticles by Calkin; Anthem, "The wilderness," by Dr. Wesley; and Offertory Sentences, Barnby, were well performed, the anthem especially reflecting great credit on the efforts of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. J. M. Field, who presided at the organ.

GLASGOW.—On Wednesday, the 15th ult., Handel's Oratorio, Belshazzar was performed, for the first time in Scotland, in the City Hall. The choruses were rendered by the Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society, the parts of Nitocris, Cyrus, Belshazzar, and Daniel being sustained respectively by Mdle. Corani, Miss Alice Barnett, Mr. Whitehead, and Mr. Winn. Mr. G. A. Macfarren's cuts were adopted, and the special organ part, written by him, was played in conjunction with a small but efficient orchestra. Mr. W. M. Miller conducted. The solos were artistically sung, but the choruses met with greater favour from the audience. This Society is to be commended for giving the public an opportunity of hearing two of Handel's almost forgotten works, Athaliah having been introduced into Scotland about a year ago. If these resuscitative efforts are found to be appreciated and adequately supported, Theodora may be looked for in the course of time.

HAWLEY, HANTS.—A very fine toned organ, built by Nicholson, of Worcester, from plans drawn by Mr. Charles H. Lacon, has been erected in the Parish Church, and was opened on Monday, the 29th Sept. The instrument, which contains two complete manuals ranging from C C to G, and also an independent pedal organ of 30 notes, has 7 stops on the swell, 8 on the great, and 3 on the pedal organs. Of the individual stops, the Lieblieb gedact on the swell is certainly most successful, while the Clarabella and open Diapason on the great are wonderfully round and pure in tone. The organ was opened by Mr. W. Blackith, of Basingstoke, assisted by Mr. James Payne, the organist of the church.

LIVERPOOL.—On Thursday, the 9th ult., Mr. W. H. Jude, organist of Emmanuel Church, West Derby-road, gave a recital on the new instrument recently erected in St. Simon's Parish Church, Gloucester-street, by Messrs. Rushworth and Sons, of Islington. The programme comprised a selection of sacred music, which was performed with artistic taste by Mr. Jude; and the builders are to be congratulated upon the construction of an organ so suitable to the purposes of the church. Miss SOPHIA FLORA HEILBRON gave a pianoforte recital on Tuesday, the 7th ult., in the Institute, Mount-street. The programme was an interesting one, the youthful pianist having ample opportunity for the display of her powers. Haydn's trio, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, was sympathetically played by Miss Heilbron, Mr. E. W. Thomas, and Mr. Frank Weston. In Weber's Concertstück, Miss Heilbron gave abundant evidence of her skill as an executant. Mr. Weston, an excellent violoncello player, performed a solo, "O Cara Memoria," by Servais, in which his tone and execution were alike admirable. Miss Marie Arthur was the vocalist. The Philharmonic Society commenced its winter season with a miscellaneous concert, on the 14th ult. Principal artists—Mdle. Marie Roze, Mdle. Justine Macvitz, and Signor Urio. The Sinfonia was Beethoven's, in F, No. 8, which was listened to with great enjoyment, the Allegretto Scherzando being encored. The overtures were The Ruler of the Spirits (Weber), and La Gazza Ladra (Rossini). The choral members gave "The splendour falls on castle walls," a clever part-song by G. A. Macfarren, the chorus from La Sonnambula, "Here we'll rest," and Hatten's part song, "Ever true." The concert concluded with Meyerbeer's March from the Camp of Silesia.

MANCHESTER.—Mr. C. W. Whitmore conducted a concert in St. Thomas's School, Heaton Chapel, on Monday, the 20th ult., assisted by Miss Catherine Pickering, Miss Hancock, Miss Beard, Mr. Coleman, and Mr. T. Brockbank. The programme was miscellaneous, and contained many favourite pieces. Miss Catherine Pickering and Mr. T. Brockbank were highly successful in their solos, receiving several encores. Mr. Whitmore performed four solos on the pianoforte, one being re-demanded. There was a good attendance, and the concert was very successful.

MONMOUTH.—A Choral Society has been formed here under the management and conductorship of Mr. W. B. Broad, the organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Church. The project has met with a most hearty welcome, upwards of thirty members having been enrolled in little more than a week. The first term is being devoted to glees, madrigals, and part-songs, but it is afterwards intended to attempt some works of a more extended character.

NEWPORT.—At the concert of the National Eisteddfod, on Monday the 6th ult., the prizes were awarded by the chairman, Mr. C. Lyne, the most important being £50 to the leader of the Ebbw Vale choir, Mr. Bowen, and ten guineas to Mr. H. J. Groves, the leader of the Newport choir. On the following day the rest of the prizes were given, the Newport choir again carrying off one of £20. Mr. Brinley Richards made an eloquent speech, pointing out the social and moral character of music, and the influence it exercised over the population as a means of recreation and employment of leisure hours. The revival of the "Cymrodorion" Society, an institution for the promotion of works on Welsh history and literature, was announced by Mr. Richards, and the proceedings were brought to a close by a vote of thanks to the Mayor.

NORWICH.—An evening concert was given in St. Andrew's Hall on the 6th ult., by the Local Committee of the Social Science Congress, before a large and fashionable audience. The principal singers were Madame Pauline Rita, Miss Enriquez and Mr. Montem Smith; the solo instrumentalists were Mr. Lazarus (clarinet) and Mr. Kingston Rudd (pianoforte). The programme comprised Leslie's trio, "O Memory," the andante and rondo from Weber's concerto in E flat, for clarinet and pianoforte, Mozart's song, "The violet," and the aria, "Gratias agimus," by Guglielmi, which was exquisitely rendered by Madame Pauline Rita, and Mr. Lazarus, who played the clarinet obligato. Miss Enriquez was very effective in her songs, and joined Madame Pauline Rita in the duet from Rossini's Stabat Mater, "Quis est homo." A fantasia for the clarinet, on airs from Weber's Der Freischütz, was marvellously executed by Mr. Lazarus. The festival choir sang a selection of madrigals and glees in a very efficient manner. Mr. James Harcourt conducted, Dr. Bunnett presided at the organ, and Mr. J. A. Harcourt accompanied.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Sacred Harmonic Society commenced the season on Friday evening, the 17th ult., with a performance of Rossini's Stabat Mater, followed by a miscellaneous selection. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss D'Alton, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Hilton, all of whom were highly successful. The members of the Society sang the choruses in a very efficient manner, and the playing of M. De Yong's band was a feature of the evening. The miscellaneous portion of the programme comprised a violin solo by M. Sinton (encored) and a flute solo by M. De Yong. Miss Julia Wigan created a favourable impression by her ballad singing. There was a large audience, and the concert was a decided success.

PENZANCE.—Costa's Eli is in rehearsal, and the composer has been invited to conduct the performance. Haydn's Creation is to be performed at Camborne on the 4th inst., assisted by the Penzance band; Conductor, Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A.

PLAXTOL.—On Friday, the 3rd ult., a highly successful Amateur Concert was given in the National School-room. A feature of the evening was the singing of Miss Austin, who possesses an excellent voice, her songs, "Il Segreto," and "Edenland," by G. Marras, being enthusiastically encored. The concerted pieces (violin, violoncello and piano) gave great pleasure, and several classical solos were well played by amateurs. Upwards of £14 was taken at the concert, and the proceeds are to be devoted to the formation of a library in the village. This result must be highly gratifying to the rector, the Rev. J. Tate, to whose energy the success of the concert is mainly due.

PONTEFRAC.—On Monday evening, the 13th ult., Dr. Spark gave a most successful concert in the Town Hall. His playing of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" was highly appreciated by the audience. Miss Anna Hiles was the solo vocalist. The part-singing by the members of the Harmonic Union was a great feature of the evening.

REDRUTH, CORNWALL.—A very successful concert, consisting of miscellaneous selections, was given in Druid's Hall, on Thursday, the 2nd ult., under the conductorship of Mr. E. P. Thomas, organist of Wesley Chapel. The choir consisted of 50 performers. The solos were rendered in a highly efficient manner by Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Wadmore. Mr. Malcolm Heywood, R.A.M., and Mr. Robert H. Heath (church organist) were the accompanists.

RETFORD.—The annual Parochial Festival commenced on Sunday, the 5th ult., in the Parish Church of East Retford. The Rev. Arthur Brook, vicar of Holy Trinity, Brompton, preached the sermons, morning and evening, and the musical portion of the services was under the direction of Mr. Hamilton White, organist and choirmaster. The great feature of this year's festival was the inauguration of the chantry of the church, which was opened with solemn and imposing service on the following Monday evening, by the Bishop of Lincoln. On Tuesday an organ recital was given by Mr. Hamilton White, when a well selected programme was done ample justice to. In the evening a concert of secular music took place in the Town Hall.

SOUTHPORT.—On Friday, the 3rd ult., Mr. Best, of the Royal Albert Hall, London, and St. George's Hall, Liverpool, gave two recitals on the fine organ recently erected in St. Andrew's Church, by Mr. Jardine. The programme was well selected, and the instrument, in the able hands of Mr. Best, was heard to the greatest advantage. Organ recitals in churches have become an institution all over the country where good organs and competent performers can be found; and we congratulate the Rev. T. Cross, Mr. Forwood, the churchwardens, and all concerned, upon the success which has attended their endeavours to complete and adorn their church.

STAFFORD.—On Monday, the 29th Sept., the first of a series of Popular Musical Entertainments was given in Christ Church School-room by Mr. W. A. Marson, organist of Christ Church, on behalf of the new Rowley-street School. The chair was taken by the Rev. H. Knight Eaton, vicar of Christ Church. The violin and pianoforte duets of Miss Lucy Marson and Mr. W. A. Marson, and Mr. Hensley and Mr. Goddard, were highly appreciated, and Mr. G. F. Edwards was warmly applauded for his rendering of a pianoforte solo, his singing of some tenor songs being also a feature of the evening.

Other songs, readings, and glees, by the choir of Christ Church, brought the entertainment to a close, when a vote of thanks was proposed to Mr. W. A. Marson and his friends. The entertainment was most successful, and the sum of £13 was handed over to the school fund.

STAMFORD.—Special Harvest Thanksgiving Services were held on Thursday, the 2nd ult., in St. Mary's Church, consisting of the celebration of Holy Communion at 8.30 a.m., morning prayer at 11 a.m., and evening prayer at 7.30 p.m., the sermons at morning and evening prayer being preached by the Rev. Thomas Yard, rector of Ashwell, and the Rev. C. Oldfield, rector of St. Michael's, Stamford. The choir was considerably augmented for the occasion, and the singing in the morning especially was highly creditable. The anthem, "The Lord is my shepherd" (Macfarren), was sung in very good style, as were also the hymns 223 and 320, Hymns Ancient and Modern. The anthem for the evening was, "The eyes of all wait upon Thee, O Lord" (Taylor), comprising a bass solo, taken by Mr. Errington, and an alto, tenor, and bass trio, Miss Phillips and Messrs. Proctor and Errington, a semi-chorus and full chorus. Hymns 360 and 145, were also sung. The offertories were devoted to defraying the expenses of three new windows which have been placed in the church.

STOCKPORT.—The Philharmonic Society gave the first concert of the season on the 6th ult., at the Mechanics' Institute, which proved a great success, the room being crowded in every part. The programme, which was miscellaneous, comprised G. A. Macfarren's Cantata May Day, the Overture to Il Flauto Magico, and Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, besides several glees and songs. Miss Marie Arthur sang the part of the May Queen in a very efficient manner, and was equally effective in Bishop's "Lo, here the gentle lark," with flute obbligato by Mr. Rowles. The band and chorus consisted of about 70 performers, the former being augmented on this occasion by several members of Mr. Hall's band, with Mr. W. Winsall as leader. Mr. T. B. Birch conducted with his usual ability, and the result was an excellent performance.

WALTHAMSTOW.—The members of the Marsh-street Tonic Sol-fa Class, under the direction of Mr. A. P. Burr, gave their first concert on the 21st ult. Principal vocalists—Miss Blanche Burr, Miss M. P. Harding, and Mr. F. A. Bridge. Miss Burr received an encore for the song, "Tell my skylark," and Miss Harding for "The bailiff's daughter." Mr. Bridge sang, "To Anthea," "My sweetheart when a boy," and "Uncle Jack," obtaining an encore for each. The part-singing was much applauded, several of the pieces being re-demanded.

WEYBRIDGE.—The Harvest Thanksgiving Service took place on Monday evening, the 29th Sept., at St. James's Church, which was most artistically decorated with flowers. Evensong commenced at eight o'clock. The opening voluntary, by Mr. H. P. G. Brooke, organist and director of the choir, was Wely's grand Offertoire in D. The processional, "Come, ye thankful people, come" (S. George) was sung in unison; Tallis's Responses; proper Psalms, 65 (chant, Bellamy in F), 107 and 108 (Sir G. Elvey in A), the Canticles, Cantate and Deus (old Latin Tones), arranged by Mr. H. P. G. Brooke; anthem, "O taste and see" (Sir J. Goss); hymn before sermon, "O Lord of heaven" (Wimbleton); hymn after sermon, "The church's one foundation" (Aurelia); recessional, Nunc dimittis (Gregorian tone). The service was well rendered, the Psalms being sung with great expression. The Canticles to Mr. Brooke's arrangement, were joined in by the congregation. Sir J. Goss's anthem was finely sung by the choir. The choir-master is deserving of great credit for the manner in which the musical service was rendered. The Rev. —Irvine, B.A., curate, intoned the service throughout. The Rev. Newton Spicer read the first lesson, and the Rev. Dr. Monsell the second. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Little, M.A. The choir was over forty in number. Mr. H. P. G. Brooke's concluding voluntaries, the "Hallelujah chorus," Mount of Olives (Beethoven), and "The silver trumpets" (processional march arranged by Dr. Rimbault), were attentively listened to by a large portion of the congregation. The offertory, to be devoted to the new district church now building, amounted to about £37. There was a large congregation, including many clergymen. We congratulate the worthy and highly esteemed rector on the great success of his Harvest Festival this year.

WORCESTER.—The new organ erected in Christ Church, Castle-street, built by Messrs. Brunt, of Bristol, was opened on Sunday, the 12th ult., by Mr. William Masefield, jun., organist, of Birmingham. Special services were held on the occasion. Dr. Cathcart, of London, preached in the forenoon, and the Rev. John Henshelwood, minister of the congregation, in the evening. Both services were well attended. The capabilities of the instrument were exhibited to the greatest advantage by Mr. Masefield, and the singing of the choir was highly satisfactory.

WORTHING.—The new church of St. Botolph, at West Worthing, was consecrated by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Chichester, on Monday the 29th Sept. A temporary organ, by Messrs. Whiteley, of Chester, has been erected at a cost of £150, the funds having been raised by a committee of ladies. On the arrival of the Bishop, his lordship was met at the entrance to the church by a large number of clergy habited in their surplices, and the churchwardens. The general confession and prayers in the morning service were intoned by the Rev. R. E. Sanderson. The first lesson was read by the Rev. Wm. Read, and the second by the Rev. F. Watson. The proper Psalms were chanted by the choir, numbering about thirty voices. The following music was given—Tallis's Service; Venite, Boyce in D; Psalms, 84, 122, 132, Gregorian; Te Deum, Henley in E; Jubilate, Crotch in B; anthem, 2 Chron. vi. 18, 40, 41, Griffiths; Hymns Ancient and Modern; Kyrie, Tuckerman in D; Nicene Creed, Marbecke. Considering the short time that has elapsed since the formation of the choir, much praise is due to Mr. J. G. Smith, the organist, for his exertions in bringing a body of mainly untrained voices to such a degree of excellence.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Frederick Earnshaw, late organist of King Edward's School, Southwark, to St. John's, South Norwood Hill. —Mr. Walter J. Markley, of St. Thomas's, Bayswater, organist and choir-master to St. John the Baptist, Highgate Road. —Mr. H. Miller, organist to St. George's-in-the-East. —Mr. F. A SERVICE for the TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in the key of A, composed by FREDERICK LILFFE, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Fellow of the College of Organists, London, and Organist of St. Wilfrid's Church, Kibworth. Price 4½d.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, No. 1, set to Original Chants, price 2d., composed by FREDERICK LILFFE, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Fellow of the College of Organists, London.

"In writing these Chants for the Te Deum I have divided it into its doctrinal parts. The 'first' thirteen verses are a Creed setting forth the doctrine of the Trinity. The 'second' part beginning with the words 'Thou art the King of glory,' and the four following verses, set forth the Divinity and Incarnation of the Son. The solemn verse 'We believe that Thou shalt come,' expresses our belief in our Lord's second coming. A separate Chant is provided for this verse. The 'third' part, beginning with the words 'We therefore pray Thee' is a Litany. The Rev. Thomas Keble was the first, I believe, who suggested this ancient mode of dividing the Te Deum into these several parts, and I have adhered to this arrangement as far as possible; there is, however, one exception, and that is in the first part of the verse, 'Holy, Holy, Holy,' which seems to me to demand a different kind of expression to any of the other verses. I may also say that I had written another Chant of a more pensive character for the 'Litany part,' but it was thought advisable to go back to the melody of the first Chant, in order to avoid many changes."—Prefatory Remarks by the Composer.

Crown octavo, price 3s. cloth; 3s. 6d. roan, gilt edges. Cheap edition, price 1s. 4d. cloth; 1s. 8d. stiff cloth, red edges.

"Dr. Allon has done so much to promote an intelligent use of sacred music in Divine worship that we gladly call attention to his last, and, as we think, most wise efforts in the same direction. Having issued in the 'Congregational Psalmist' a valuable series of Hymn Tunes, Chants, Kyries, &c., he has now published in a little pocket volume a collection of Anthems intended for the use of the congregation, and not simply for the choir. The pieces as a rule require, in singing, a degree of musical culture somewhat greater than that required by Chorales and Chants, but they are on the whole within the reach of persons possessing a practical acquaintance with the art of sight-singing."—The Choir.

NOTICE.

"Church Anthems" forms Section III. of "THE CONGREGATIONAL PSALMIST." Section I. consists of Tunes and Chorales; Section II. Chants, Sanctuses, &c. Each Section is complete in itself, but may be had bound up with the others. A list of nearly 50 editions can be had on application to the Publishers, by whom a liberal discount will be allowed to Teachers and Congregations.

SCHUMANN'S SONGS,

EDITED AND IN PART TRANSLATED BY

NATALIA MACFARREN,

PREFACE.

The present collection is a first instalment of the Songs of Schumann in the order of their production; as his vocal works are extremely voluminous, it does not seem desirable to re-publish all his songs, but wherever there is a connecting link between the different numbers of an Opus, as in the nine Songs of Op. 24, and the 26 of Op. 25, they will all be given. None of the Narrative Songs will be included in this series.

Four of the Songs will be found transposed: Nos. 12 and 16, because the publishers have already two editions of them in the original keys; and Nos. 19 and 29, because they lie beyond the range of voice generally practicable.

In adapting the original English words of those Songs, which Schumann set to translations, the music has been made the paramount consideration, and words have been altered to suit the musical text when necessary; thus Nos. 13 and 31 are called "Some one," and "No one," since the redundant syllable in Somebody and Nobody disfigures the musical phrase. Moreover, considerable alterations had to be made in the Songs of Burns, without reference to the declamation.

The present edition absolutely follows the text of the Composer, rejecting some supposed emendations which appear in several editions; a slight change in the distribution of syllables to notes have been made to accommodate the English text, and a very few evident oversights in the original editions have been amended with the sanction of Madame Schumann.

CHURCH ANTHEMS, ETC., BY THE BEST COMPOSERS, ANCIENT AND MODERN.

EDITED BY HENRY ALLON, D.D.

Crown octavo, price 3s. cloth; 3s. 6d. roan, gilt edges. Cheap edition, price 1s. 4d. cloth; 1s. 8d. stiff cloth, red edges.

"Dr. Allon has done so much to promote an intelligent use of sacred music in Divine worship that we gladly call attention to his last, and, as we think, most wise efforts in the same direction. Having issued in the 'Congregational Psalmist' a valuable series of Hymn Tunes, Chants, Kyries, &c., he has now published in a little pocket volume a collection of Anthems intended for the use of the congregation, and not simply for the choir. The pieces as a rule require, in singing, a degree of musical culture somewhat greater than that required by Chorales and Chants, but they are on the whole within the reach of persons possessing a practical acquaintance with the art of sight-singing."—The Choir.

NOTICE.

"Church Anthems" forms Section III. of "THE CONGREGATIONAL PSALMIST;" Section I. consists of Tunes and Chorales; Section II. Chants, Sanctuses, &c. Each Section is complete in itself, but may be had bound up with the others. A list of nearly 50 editions can be had on application to the Publishers, by whom a liberal discount will be allowed to Teachers and Congregations.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS TO "ANTHEMS SPECIAL AND GENERAL."

THIS Work will be issued before Christmas. The subscription list is closed on December 12th, when the price will be 7s. 6d., instead of 4s.

I have been more than three years compiling this work, and the contributors are the best composers of the present time, the music being New, and not Reprints. I had imagined that the number of pages would have been from 150 to 200, and I fixed the subscription price at 4s. The volume will contain nearly 400 pages, but the subscription price is not raised, and is 2s. under cost price for the first 1,000 copies. All the Saints' days are provided with an Anthem, and every season that can possibly occur in the Service of the Church. The volume will be bound in cloth, with the best paper and printing in London; and those who use Anthems will do well to order a Subscription Copy at 4s. before December 12th, as no person can fail to pronounce the volume to be a marvel of cheapness and goodness combined, and a work that will be useful for all Choirs, both for General and Special Seasons. After December 12th the price will be 7s. 6d. All communications to be addressed to the Editor and Proprietor, Dr. Lloyd Fowle, 48, Hunter-street, London, W.C.

N.B.—Music Publishers will not regret ordering a copy at 4s. At that price it is impossible to send on sale or return, but when once seen the work is sure to command a sale.

DR. FOWLE'S Popular CHRISTMAS ANTHEM, "Arise, shine," is in a twelfth edition. Folio edition, 7d.; class copy, 24d. CHRISTMAS CANTATA (fifth edition), for Choral Classes, 31 pages for 7d. The Christmas March alone is worth double the price of the whole work. Address 48, Hunter-street, London, W.C.

TO YOUNG COMPOSERS ABOUT TO PUBLISH.

DR. FOWLE can give Valuable Information, and undertakes to revise and publish all Musical Compositions in the best possible style. An ARTICLED PUPIL required, who would derive very great advantages. Address Dr. Fowle, 48, Hunter-street, London, W.C.

W. T. BEST.

All the chants are arranged in short score, immediately above the words, and may be sung in the usual four-part harmony, exactly as written. Should unison-singing be preferred, the harmonisation is then available as an organ accompaniment. The “Venite” is printed before the Psalms for each day of the month throughout the book, in order to remove all doubt as to the manner of pointing the words to the varying length of the chants, as well as to secure appropriate keys for the succeeding psalms in the morning office. The “Gloria Patri” also appears in its place at the end of every Psalm, pointed as the rhythm of the chant may require.

May be had separately. THE CANTICLES AND HYMNS OF THE CHURCH, with the Creed of St. Athanasius, 3d.

"The cover is a very beautiful specimen of quasi-mediæval binding; the paper is fine and thick, and both the letterpress and the music are clear and accurate."—Standard.

"It will doubtless take a prominent place among publications appropriate to the season."—Daily News.

"Superb paper, printing and binding, complete in fitting style, a volume, which is not only seasonable, but of value sufficient to make its attraction independent of season altogether."—Graphic.

"Never, we should say, did the humble Christmas Carol find itself so honoured as in this Christmas gift-book."—Sunday Times.

"The united labours of editors, artists, engravers and, we may also say, printers and binders, have resulted in the production of a volume which, for interest and elegance, has rarely been equalled, and still more rarely excelled."—Illustrated Times.

This Work may also be had (without illustrations) in the following forms:—First Series, paper cover, 1s. 6d.; Ditto, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; Second Series, paper cover, 1s. 6d.; Ditto, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; First and Second Series complete, cloth gilt, 4s.; the Words only, First and Second Series, 1½d. each.

NATIONAL NURSERY RHYMES

SET TO MUSIC BY J. W. ELLIOTT.

WITH SIXTY-FIVE ILLUSTRATIONS

By H. S. MARKS, A.R.A., A. HUGHES, GRISET, HOUGHTON, PINWELL, DALZIELS, F. WALKER, FRASER, WIEGAND
ZWECKER, MAHONEY, SMALL, C. GREEN, FRENCH, &c.

ENGRAVED BY THE BROTHERS DALZIEL.

"Here indeed is a book adapted to be a joy, as long as it lasts, in every home where little ones appreciate funny rhymes, pretty tunes and pictures, which in their way form a juvenile gallery of art."—Daily Telegraph.

"As we open this highly ornate work we find ourselves exclaiming—as we once heard a Frenchman, on entering into a newly-furnished room exclaim—Luxe épouvantable!"—Saturday Review.

"Even at the present day, which may be styled the era of elaborately designed children's books, this volume will hold a distinguished place; and it comprises three distinct sources of attraction, namely, the words, the pictures and the music."—Graphic.

"Simple as is the style of these pieces, there is much character and considerable elegance about most of them; while the neatness of the volume and its clever illustrations give it a value as a handsome table-book."—Daily News.

"Without in any way reflecting upon the interior of this book, we pause at the outside to remark that a debt of gratitude is due to the designer of the cover and to the bookbinder. Inside we have all those nursery rhymes which have been in use so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, set to very easily acquired and pleasing airs, within the compass of children's voices, and exquisitely illustrated by the Brothers Dalziel. These illustrations are the most humorous and spirited, as well as the most artistic pictorial representation of the absurdities of the nursery rhymes, that we ever remember to have seen."—Echo.

"The exterior of the book is attractive enough for a drawing-room table, its sumptuous green and gold setting off a design not less novel than handsome. But what is the outside compared with the interior? Enough if we say that a more delightful present to put into childish hands even the exuberant childish fancy could hardly conceive."—Sunday Times.

Price Five Shillings.

Elegantly bound in Cloth, gilt edges.

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

"As a child's book of sacred music, 'Sacred Songs for Little Singers' knows no equal."—Daily Telegraph.

"The music and poetry are well adapted to their purpose of securing the interested attention of very young performers and listeners."—Daily News.

"This little collection is sure to become a lasting delight in the home."—The Hour.

"This volume is, we observe, dedicated by permission to the Queen's youngest daughter, and is assuredly worth the acceptance of any princess in the world."—Sunday Times.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

GLASGOW in 1873 has nobly atoned for the shortcomings of Glasgow in 1860. Thirteen years ago, some earnest amateurs of the big Scottish town tried their "prentice han" at a Musical Festival. They got an Oratorio—Horsley's "Gideon"—composed for the occasion; engaged Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Weiss and other distinguished artists; brought down from London the best orchestra that had ever been heard in Scotland, and, with generally efficient resources, gave four concerts. But the enterprise utterly failed, through being in advance of its time. The Glasgow public were not ready for it, either in point of artistic culture, or that liberality of religious opinion which can regard a performance of sacred music as less than "exceeding sinful." Rudely taught not to be in haste, the amateurs aforesaid waited and worked, doing the latter chiefly by means of the permanent Choral Union. Thirteen years is a long time in these fast-moving days; at all events, it was thought long enough to effect the desired improvement in Glasgowian musical knowledge and taste. So, about twelvemonths back, the idea of a second Festival was started. Of course it met with opposition and indifference. Some pooh-poohed it, others demanded "Cui bono?" and a still larger number waited to illustrate the maxim that "Nothing succeeds like success." But the Festival promoters were not men to be easily daunted. They knew that the time was ripe for their enterprise; and by mixing a good deal of national shrewdness with national perseverance, eventually carried all before them, gaining over to their side not only the Marquis and Marchioness of Lorne, but, after that, the Lord Provost and his Bailies. When a wealthy town like Glasgow heartily "goes in for" a thing, there is nothing that it cannot do, and the managers acted as men quite sure of their means. They resolved to have no half-and-half Festival, but a complete and handsomely equipped one, worthy to compare with the Festivals of England. Hence a scheme of not less than seven concerts, extending over five days; the production of two new works; the bringing down of Sir Michael Costa to conduct his "Eli;" the engagement of a first-class orchestra numbering seventy instruments, and of a group of solo vocalists, which included Mesdames Titians, Carola, Marie Roze, Patey, Trebelli and Edith Wynne, Messrs. Rigby, Lloyd, Lewis Thomas and Santley. All this involved a heavy responsibility; but the managers did not vainly reckon upon adequate support. The public came forward in a most handsome manner; every concert was attended by a brilliant and crowded audience, and the result was a large contribution to the funds of the new Western Infirmary, on behalf of the claims of which the Festival made appeal. Were we not right in saying that 1873 has atoned for 1860?

The Festival began on Tuesday, the 4th ult., with a performance of "Elijah," apropos of which, as no details are necessary, we may make some general remarks. We would begin with sundry forcible expressions of contempt for the City Hall, the only available place for Festival use, were not some enterprising individuals about to erect a building more worthy. The ill-situated, inodorous, ugly, and, in certain contingencies, dangerous edifice which satisfies the "conscript fathers" of Glasgow, will never again witness a Musical Festival, and we can afford, therefore, to let it pass on this occasion. Apart from the Hall, the opening performance showed everything connected with the proceedings as more or less what it should be. There was a capital chorus of 400 good sonorous voices, well trained, and in all respects up to its work. The conductor, Mr. Lambeth, certainly left somewhat to desire, but not more than was expected, in view of the fact that his opportunities of presiding over a large orchestra are rare. Under such circumstances, partial failure is the result of conditions that entail no blame. At the same time, Mr. Lambeth's unavoidable lack of experience is a matter which the Committee of the next Festival will have to consider, if they would place their musical doings in the very first rank. All the minor arrangements, with a single exception, worked well even at the beginning. The exception has reference to a prohibition of applause at the sacred concerts. True, the edict was only partially obeyed; but in so far as it was obeyed, it had a bad effect, depressing audience and performers alike. A similar rule against encores met with rigid observance. We cannot join our contemporary, the Athenæum, in its remarks upon this matter. The critic complains of injustice done to Costa's "Eli," and avers that the audience would gladly have re-heard six specified numbers. We were present on the occasion, and have had fair experience in divining the wishes of an audience, but we detected no such longing as that of which the Athenæum speaks. Assuming that it existed, there could be no better argument in favour of the Committee's rule. Audiences need, sometimes, to be protected from themselves; and six encores in "Eli" would have extended the performance to an unreasonable length, and fatigued everybody concerned. Applause is very well, and very desirable when deserved; but encores are an unmitigated nuisance, and should be stamped out. Over the second concert, which took place on Wednesday morning, we shall pass lightly. The programme was miscellaneous, and such interest as it had belonged to the instrumental selections, which included Bach's organ fugue in G minor, played to perfection on an indifferent instrument by Mr. W. T. Best, the con sordino Entr'acte from Reinecke's "König Manfred," Sir Sterndale Bennett's overture, "The Naiads," the Larghetto and Scherzo from Schumann's first Symphony, the Overture to "Der Fliegende Holländer," and the Romance from Haydn's Symphony, "La Reine de France." Both the Schumann and Wagner music was very indifferently played, conveying an impression that neither the conductor nor his followers knew much about it. The "Eli" performance, under Sir Michael Costa, took place on the evening of the same day, and was a complete success. We shall not discuss the work. Its merits and demerits were estimated long ago, and the judgment is not likely to be altered. But it is our duty to state that rarely has an Oratorio been more warmly received. Sir Michael conducted in his best style, and succeeded in showing that a master of the bâton could make the Glasgow band and chorus work in a fashion beyond reproach. Another miscellaneous entertainment was given on Thursday evening, when the orchestra played the overture to "Oberon," Sullivan's "Overture di Ballo," the "Pastoral" Symphony of Beethoven, the introduction to "Lohengrin," and the overture to "Ruy Blas." Maurer's Concertante quartet for four violins and orchestra, entrusted to Messrs. Carrodus, Collins, Pollitzer and Betjemann, was also a conspicuous feature in the programme. The vocal pieces need not even be named, so devoid were they of special interest. On Friday evening the novelties were produced, and these demand special attention.

First in order of performance was a setting for solis, chorus and orchestra, of Psalm lxxxvi, by Mr. Lambeth, the conductor of the Festival. Any one who takes the trouble to look at this psalm will see that it embodies a gradual change of feeling, from despondency and almost despair, to confidence and gladness. The writer begins, "Bow down Thine ear, O Lord, and hear me, for I am poor and in misery," and ends, "I will thank Thee, O Lord my God, I will praise Thy Holy Name for ever and ever;" the progress from one extreme to the other being by well-marked stages. Upon this feature in his text Mr. Lambeth has seized with happy effect; not only changing the expression of his music, but even its structure. He opens with a chorus (Moderato—D minor), simple in form, unaffected in style, and wholly depending upon a certain subdued intensity of which the music is capable in performance. Even under a self-imposed restraint, however, Mr. Lambeth shows the power of a skilful musician, and creates an expectation of good things to come. The chorus ending in the major of its key, is followed by a recitative (Bass), "Preserve Thou my soul;" after which comes a chorus, with solis (A major), "For Thou, Lord, art good and gracious." The soprano solo first has a plain melody, modulating to the dominant, and repeated in chorus to equally plain harmonies. This alternation is kept up for some time, the tenor voice ultimately relieving the soprano, and the whole ending with an effective ensemble, wherein both solo voices have a share. The ensemble is by far the best portion of the number, and may fairly be classed among good music. A soprano air (F major), "Teach me Thy way, O Lord," has an Allegro episode on the words "O God, the proud have risen against me," which redeems the whole from the charge of being commonplace. This is followed by a tuneful chorale (F major), "Teach me, Lord," for voices in unison, leading to a short soprano solo, accompanied by some phrases of the chorale, in full harmony. The next number is a tenor air (Andante, F minor), "Thou, O Lord God, art full of compassion," in which we find Mr. Lambeth at his best. A curious effect is produced by the voice entering with a minor sixth on the dominant seventh harmony of B flat. We are not sure that we like it, but the device is a novel one, and the discord sufficiently poignant. Apart from this, the song is unexceptionable, and sustains its interest through a somewhat extended development. It is melodious and expressive in a more than common degree. A final chorus, with quartet (D major), "Among the Gods," begins, after an impressive orchestral prelude, in true Handelian style, and is carried on with spirit, and abundant use of all available resources. Having worked up his materials to an exciting climax, the composer suddenly introduces an episode for four solo voices, which leads directly to a unison repetition of the chorale, first by altos and basses, and next by all the voices, which break into harmony when the quartet is once more heard. It will be seen from this description that the Finale is an elaborate one. We will add, that it does Mr. Lambeth great credit, and brings his work to an end so as to leave a marked impression upon all who hear it. The performance was generally good. Mdlle. Titiens, Mr. Rigby, and Mr. Thomas gave the solos with adequate effect, and the choralists exerted themselves manfully on behalf of their conductor, who, at the close, received what is sometimes called an "ovation."

The second and more important novelty was a Cantata—strictly speaking, a small Oratorio—entitled "Jacob," and written specially for the Festival by Mr. Henry Smart. There is no need to enlarge upon its primâ facie claims to respectful attention. Mr. Smart has been too long before the public, and has done too many excellent things, to make needful an assertion of his merits. He has only to produce, and everybody is willing to receive without hesitation. Mr. J. C. M'Caul, who compiled the libretto of "Jacob," had a difficult task to perform; and we cannot compliment him upon entire success. The whole life of the patriarch could not, of course, be treated; and, having to deal with a section only, Mr. M'Caul's obvious plan was to take the events connected with the sojourn in Padanaram and the marriage with Rachel—by far the most interesting recorded in connexion with Jacob. There were, however, many dangers to be avoided, and great precautions to be used. The cause of Jacob's flight to Padanaram could not be touched upon; the incidents connected with Leah were equally inadmissible, and the running away from Laban was scarcely less delicate ground. Thus hampered in the dramatic working out of the story, Mr. M'Caul leaves a good deal to the imagination, and fills up blanks with didactic passages, or supposititious utterances. The result of dividing the book into three parts (respectively named "The Flight," "The Marriage," and "The Return"), with intervals of years between them, is patchy and disconnected. Moreover, no attempt is made to give Jacob's character a dramatic significance, unless it be in "The Marriage," where the words put into the patriarch's mouth betray a sentimentalism almost maudlin. Rachel, too, is but a sketch, and generally speaking, the Oratorio derives no help from any human interest connected with the personages who act in it. But we will not visit the librettist with heavy censure on this account. His task was a hard one, and success in it almost impossible. The case is otherwise, as regards the manner in which some of the songs are introduced without the smallest provocation. When Rachel, for example, first sees Jacob, she bursts into a rhapsody, "This is my beloved," &c.; and when Laban hires Jacob as his shepherd, he begins to sing the well-known verse about the "good shepherd who giveth his life for the sheep." These, and such as these, are faults that even a novice in libretto-making might easily avoid. Mr. Smart is much more successful than his collaborateur. He has written throughout with a keen sense of musico-dramatic effect, and with the hand of one who knows how to make the most of his materials. It is to be noted, that he never unduly strains after effect, or forces himself out of the line of thought and expression which comes most natural to him. The music conveys an idea of one who gives spontaneous utterance to his ideas, and keeps well within his resources when doing so. For this reason, there is no pretence of a distinctive style. Mr. Smart's work is Mendelssohnian to a marked degree; but such an able musician may follow a great master without fear of reproach. There are some who are plagiarists or nothing. Mr. Smart does not plagiarise, and his reflection of Mendelssohn is worthy homage paid by one gifted man to another more gifted.

The action of the drama is preluded by an orchestral movement, opening with a tranquil Andante con moto, in D major, leading to a passionate Allegro in F, which is worked out with great fluency and vigour. What the exact purport of this Introduction may be we cannot tell; but it is interesting enough in itself to at once arrest attention, and prepare the mind for that which follows. At its close, the action begins by an angel (contralto) directing Jacob, in recitative, to set out for Padanaram; immediately upon which follows a didactic chorus (Allegro Moderato—G major), "Blessed are the men that fear Him," having two well marked and contrasted subjects, given in alternation, with due variety of detail. Mr. Smart avoids that blending of the two themes, which is characteristic of Mendelssohn; and his réprise of the first subject has an elegance all its own. The story being resumed, in recitative, goes on till Jacob lies down to sleep in a "desert place," at which point occurs a tenor solo Andante con moto—D minor, "O Thou that hearest prayer." Though not strikingly original, this song is melodious and expressive; the Coda, especially, wherein a change to the tonic major occurs, being remarkably beautiful in its tenderness and grace. Jacob is now asleep: and as a bass recitative tells of his dream, the orchestra illustrates the descent of the angels, with a well-studied and suggestive effect; acute wind instruments sustaining a sequence of descending chords, while the divided violins have a graceful, undulating figure around them. This is continued at some length, but with undiminished charm, till a four-part chorus of female voices (Allegro Moderato—D major), "The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble," expresses the benediction of Jacob by his celestial visitants. The chorus is written with unaffected simplicity, and its last phrase, one of extreme loveliness, re-appears more than once as the refrain of a short tenor solo, which forms an episode in the number. At the close of the solo, the male voices enter, in four parts; and, eventually, the whole eight parts are combined in an effective ensemble. This closes the Angels' chorus; and, when the voices cease, the orchestra resumes its descriptive work. Now, however, the sequence of chords is an ascending one; and the mind follows them up and up, as Jacob may be supposed to have watched the disappearance of his heavenly friends. An agitated solo, for Jacob, "Surely the Lord is in this place," follows the orchestral passage, without break; and, also without break, the solo leads to a chorus (Allegro Moderato—D major), "The Lord is thy keeper." In this number, two distinct themes are fugally treated, with Mr. Smart's well-known skill; a varied effect being secured by massively harmonised episodes, employing the whole force of the orchestra. Thus admirably does the first Part of the work come to an end.

The second Part—"The Marriage"—opens with an elegant quasi Pastorale in E flat, for orchestra, which preludes the scene between Jacob and the herdsmen at the well. Mr. Smart has treated the scene referred to with much dramatic power, and provided a singularly good "entrance" for the heroine of the story, who, appearing in the distance, to the accompaniment of a section of the Pastorale, sees Jacob, and bursts into an impassioned and beautiful air (E flat), "This is my beloved." As regards charm of melody and grace of treatment, the air is one of the finest things Mr. Smart ever wrote, and we shall not be surprised to find sopranos using it apart from the rest of the work. One result is sure—the song will be a universal favourite with the public. The dialogue between Jacob and Rachel having been carried on in recitative, we have next Laban's kindly greeting to the wanderer (a solo in recitative), and then comes the baritone air (in E major), "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep," another example of Mr. Smart's fluent tune, and elegant style. Fourteen years are now supposed to elapse, after which the marriage of Jacob and Rachel is announced, and the newly made husband and wife incontinentally join in a very sentimental—as to style, sensuous—duet (Allegretto moderato—A flat), "Tell me, O fairest of women." Here, not less than in the soprano air, Mr. Smart appears at his best. His love music is love music indeed. Tender, graceful phrases flow from the lips of the singers, while the rich, yet subdued colouring of the orchestra heightens their force and excites the imagination. Not many things in modern music are more beautiful than the più lento "For, lo! the winter is past," which is a masterpiece of descriptive and suggestive art. The duet is followed by a chorus (Allegro maestoso—E flat), "Happy art thou, O Jacob," wherein the gracefulness of the preceding number appears well blended with qualities more impressive and emphatic. This closes the second Part.

An Angel's recitative opens "The Return" by directing Jacob to leave Padanaram and go to his own land, after which the heavenly messenger comforts and encourages the future patriarch in an air (contralto), "Be thou patient" (Andante lento—D major). Although effective and very pleasing, this number has little individuality. It too forcibly suggests "O, rest in the Lord." Jacob's flight and Laban's pursuit having been described in recitative, the interview of the two men is represented in a duet (Allegro assai—G minor) full of dramatic power, especially at the beginning, when Laban speaks in anger. Peace is quickly made, and Rachel, Jacob, and Laban join in a trio (Allegro non troppo—B flat), "Come, let us sing unto God." The interest of this movement is not great, but the chorus (più animato) to which it leads, is another good example of Mr. Smart's contrapuntal skill. Eventually, the trio is combined with the chorus, making an ensemble of rare impressiveness, admirably sustained to the end. On all accounts, this deserves high praise. Preceded by a brief but original episode for orchestra, the Angel now warns Jacob of Esau's approach, and the latter expresses his fear of what may happen, but is reassured in a solo of rare sweetness and dignity, after which the number ends with a brief concerted passage for the two characters. The reconciliation of the brothers is then told in recitative, followed by a short, unaccompanied, five-part chorus (Andante lento—G major), harmonised in a manner as simple as is its design. The Angel again appears, and commands Jacob to fix his abode at Bethel. With this the story ends, but not the Oratorio. We have first a quartet (Andante lento—G major), "Gracious is the Lord," very flowing, tuneful and expressive, after which comes the finale in the shape of a chorus (Allegro Assai—D major), "Oh! praise the Lord." Mr. Smart has not amplified this chorus to any great extent, nor has he brought into requisition his contrapuntal resources, full and massive harmony being chiefly relied upon for effect. That effect is secured by this means nobody will dispute, and the Oratorio comes to a worthy close.

Such, in outline, is the newest contribution to English sacred music, and such is the work which Glasgow received with the liveliest demonstrations of approval. The performance, though not perfect, did justice to its subject on the whole; and, after it

Mr. Smart was called for, and applauded with enthusiasm.

Of the "Messiah," given on Saturday morning, we need not speak; nor is there anything to say of the "popular" concert on Saturday evening, except that the idea was a good one, and well worthy of imitation elsewhere. The precise financial results of this most successful Festival have not yet appeared; but the Committee hope to present the Western Infirmary with considerably more than £1000. It is only right, in conclusion, to acknowledge the uniform courtesy and liberality with which strangers, officially in attendance upon the proceedings, were treated. No such duty as theirs was ever made more easy and agreeable.

A LETTER in the "Sunday Times" of the 9th ult. mentions that at some evening Readings, &c., recently given, the chairman in his prefatory remarks begged the audience to preserve order because "it wasn't a lot of paid people who were going to sing to them, but some ladies and gentlemen who had volunteered their services." As in this gentleman's opinion it is evidently not necessary to "preserve order" when accredited vocalists are engaged, we trust that he attends amateur performances exclusively; for at many concerts we could name, where the music has been entirely rendered by "paid persons," we are convinced that any attempt at disturbance arising from the feeling he has given expression to would be immediately suppressed. Moreover, as we generally find that professional artists can secure the attention of an audience by their talent alone, it seems rather a confession of weakness to bespeak a hearing for amateurs on account of their being "ladies and gentlemen."

To the many who sympathise with the mission of the "Jubilee Singers"—whose performances in London were noticed in the "Musical Times" a short time ago—a book which has recently been forwarded to us, entitled "The Jubilee Singers and their Campaign for Twenty Thousand Dollars," will prove deeply interesting. Besides giving a graphic account of the commencement and progress of the "campaign," this volume contains a sketch of the lives of these vocal missionaries, and also the words and music of their songs. Their object in giving concerts in America and England was to raise funds for building a "Jubilee Hall" in connection with Fisk University, Nashville; and we are glad to find, by the "Republican Banner" of the 22nd October, that on the preceding day the corner stone of the Hall was laid, in the presence of a large gathering of citizens and persons who have been foremost in aiding the good cause. During the ceremony the pupils of the University united in singing jubilee songs; and several speakers afterwards addressed the assembly. At the conclusion the Doxology was sung and the Benediction pronounced by the Rev. Mr. M'Neal, successor of the Rev. J. G. M'Kee, the first missionary teacher among the coloured people in Nashville.

MR. CURWEN'S pamphlet entitled "The Present Crisis of Music in Schools" is scarcely suitable for notice in our ordinary reviewing columns. Since Mr. Hullah's Report on the result of his examination of the state of music in public schools, the war between the "fixed" and "moveable" Do has raged more furiously than ever; and the work before us—which is expressly stated to be "a reply to Mr. Hullah's attack on the moveable Do and Tonic Sol-Fa methods in the Educational Blue-book, 1872—3"— is of course somewhat too personal to be considered as a dispassionate criticism upon the subject. Nevertheless Mr. Curwen has a right to be heard when he states facts, for these are proverbially stubborn things for even a "Blue-book" to ignore. We are told that the test piece of music given to the Tonic Sol-Faists in their own notation contained "between twenty and thirty errors;" and, as far as we know, this has never been contradicted. It is true that the piece was afterwards withdrawn; but by some means, in a partially corrected state, it found its way into the printed Report. All persons who are interested in the subject of musical education must, we think, desire at least that fair play should be guaranteed to the partisans of both the systems now before the public; and this we believe can scarcely be the case when a Musical Examiner, armed with the authority of Government, is not only identified with one method but avowedly opposed to the other.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS AT BATH.

As Mr. Barnby's Paper upon Church Music appeared in our last number, we now give a report of the discussion which ensued upon it.

THE PRESIDENT.—It seems to me that a paper containing so many valuable suggestions, and so much detail as to the better future conducting of our musical services, ought not to be suffered to fall to the ground without a special vote of thanks. From the way in which you have received my words, I take it for granted you have commissioned me to offer your best thanks to Mr. Barnby for his paper. (The vote of thanks was accordingly passed.)

MR. C. L. HIGGINS (Turvey Abbey, Bedfordshire).—I am permitted by the kindness of the committee of this Church Congress to say a few words on a subject which has not been included in the list of matters submitted to your consideration for this year. Yet the subject of Hymnology is one which is closely enough connected with Church music to render it not altogether unbefitting a few moments' thought on this evening. I exceedingly lament the illness of the learned Professor, whose eloquence and great knowledge of ecclesiastical harmony would, if he had been present, have delighted us all. At the same time I will not deny that I am very thankful to have (perhaps in consequence) this opportunity of calling your kind attention to a matter which I do believe to be one of very great interest and importance to the Church. Hymns of praise to Almighty God, and to Jesus Christ our Lord, have always been an element of great power in the Church's work. From their metrical structure they enter easily into the memory. Their rhythm is pleasant to the ear. Their piety and warmth often affect the heart. They are not unfrequently very suitable to the capacity of the little child who loves to learn them from the lips of a dear mother; they are remembered with delight, and accompany as a friend the thoughts which occupy the solitary hours of men and women in the busy, bustling years of middle life; and often have they been found, as the days draw to a close, to supply to the worn and weary spirit sweet thoughts and loving contemplations of peace and hope, and heavenly joy yet to come. A season of real prosperity in a Church has always been accompanied with an increase of songs of praise. From the very earliest times it has been found that when, by the blessing of Almighty God, spiritual truth and life have increased, and the pulses which beat in the Church's heart have been quickened by vital action from the blessed Spring of all life, then words have never been wanting by which the Church has made known her thanksgiving and proclaimed her joy. The history of all great reformations in the Church bears testimony to the fact of which I have spoken. Not to go back to the times of Old Testament story, or to the days of the early life of the Christian Church, the period of the European Reformation in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, and that blessed revival of spiritual energy which has so signally marked the times which are almost and quite within our own memories, confirm very amply my assertion in this respect. What a store of hymns is to be found allied to the days when Germany threw aside the corruptions which trammelled her faith; and the last three-quarters of a century have given us in England a precious legacy of sacred song, the like of which for holy fervour, combined with spiritual perception and chastened thought, has perhaps never sprung uninspired from the human mind and heart since the beginning of time. The Church of England has a grand collection of hymns from which she may select her songs for the Sanctuary. This is perhaps shown by the number of hymn-books and hymnals which distress, and disturb, and distract her congregations. About one hundred and eighty different books are in use in the various churches of our land. In this respect we contrast unfavourably with most of the Christian communities in England who do not belong to our Church. The Wesleyans, the Moravians, the Independents, and others, have each their well-known and accredited hymnals. They use and can use none beside. These books are found to be a valuable means of promoting sympathy and union, and close brotherly regard among the members of the community to which they respectively belong. Now I venture humbly to suggest to this Congress, that inasmuch as it has been an exceedingly great and most precious blessing to our Church that we have had for so long a time a Book of Common Prayer, which has united in one outward form of holy worship all the members of our Church both at home and abroad, binding them together so that they may, though scattered all over the world, as one family, with one voice, pray to our Father which is in heaven; so it would be a very great and almost an inexpressible blessing if the Church could have a book of "Common Praise," which, without being in any way compulsory, but having the Church's recommendation only, might enable those who use it, whether in our own land, or in our various colonies, or in missionary stations, or in the far off islands of the sea, to raise one happy united song of heavenly joy and thanksgiving to our dear Master and King, whose blessed will it is that His Church should be one in Him. This would be a grand step indeed, but only one step towards that which I from my heart long to see, yes and hope to see some day accomplished, namely, a book of sacred worshipping song, which from its large, wide, and extended character, may have some right to be called a Catholic Hymnal. It may perhaps be thought by some to be a thing almost impossible, but why should not the Church of England, by the united voice of Convocation of the Northern and Southern provinces respectfully invite the sister Episcopal Church in America, the Colonial Church, the Episcopal Churches in Scotland and Ireland, and all who are in communion with us, to form a joint committee for the consideration of this great spiritually-practical question. An impossibility is the best thing in the world to have to deal with, when the object to be gained is a real good, and earnest hands, and hearts, and heads are determined upon its attainment. I had the privilege of offering an humble suggestion of this kind to the Church Congress at Southampton, and afterwards at Nottingham; since that time the venerable and learned houses of Convocation have taken up the matter, and have granted a committee for the consideration of this subject. It is with deep thankfulness that I have learned that a report has been prepared under the able care of the late Archdeacon of Coventry (alas! now no more), whose warm and earnest heart impelled him during a time of sickness and sore trial to give his remaining strength to the work. This report has already been presented to Convocation, and I anxiously hope that it will be accepted and acted upon at the earliest possible opportunity. It has been said that such a book, if it could be had, must of necessity be colourless; that all distinct Church teaching must be eliminated; that a book meant to please everybody would satisfy nobody; and a great deal more of a like kind. Of course it is very easy to make objections; there are spots in the sun. But we desire no greater catholicity for the Hymnal than is possessed by the Prayer-Book—and is that colourless? is all distinct Church teaching expelled from that? Thank God, not yet. A very few words more. Time hastens on: the days of the years are perhaps fast drawing towards their close—the shadows lengthen. Soon, sooner than we expect, over the distant hills may dawn the early light of that day whose sun shall never more go down. Now—as we are taught will be the case—anxieties increase; restlessness, and lawlessness, and faithlessness manifest themselves all around. Oh for a larger, wider outpouring upon us all of the blessed influence of the Holy and Divine Spirit that we may work more for God while time and opportunity lasts; and among our works surely the sending forth under the fostering care of the Church, and recommended by those whom God has set over us in spiritual things, a book of Common Praise which shall be comprehensive and catholic in character, distinct and dogmatic in doctrine, loving, tender, and gentle, such as may suit the young and the weak, as well as the learned and strong, would be a work not unsuitable to these wondrous times in which we live, for it would bind closer together in Christian fellowship those who as Churchmen desire to be one in their Lord. Oh, dear sirs, help it on! The work would indeed be a happy one, for it would, by God's grace, be a handbook which would cheer the sorrowing, strengthen the fainting, teach the ignorant, lead into the right way those who are now wandering, make rich with spiritual blessings the poor, and help to comfort with bright hopes of a better life to come many who are now sore tried in this life. Help it on, then, in the love of Jesus, whose dear name it will exalt and magnify, and be assured that it will be accepted in our hearts, recognised in our families, valued in our parishes, used throughout our dioceses, thankfully and lovingly received everywhere as the Church's Book of Praise.

THE PRESIDENT.—Ladies and Gentlemen.—The excellent and interesting paper we have just heard, and which has revived, and, I am sure, quickened, our interest in the subject of this night's proceedings, and for which our best thanks are due to Mr. Higgins, makes me more unwilling to ask at your hands the favour I have reason to prefer, and that is, leave of absence from the conclusion of the meeting. I should like very much to have heard the opinions of those gentlemen who are able to address you on different matters of Church Music; and I dare say we should have had our feelings of love and respect stirred up towards some of our great writers of those beautiful hymns whom we love to honour. The hymns of my own predecessor, for instance, in the see of Bath and Wells, the saintly Ken, and the hymns of him whom the whole Church of England reveres, Mr. Keble, raise feelings of love in all our hearts, and stir up the feelings of Christian love within us. I say I should like to have heard the opinions of our friends who will speak upon this subject; but the truth is, I am obliged to return to Wells to-night, the reason being that one of my sons, who is going on duty to his regiment in India, has got two days' leave. (Loud cheers.) I feel you have now granted me my leave of absence; but before I part from you, I should like to say how very deeply all our feelings have been stirred up by this Congress, and with what unspeakable pleasure we have had communion, and forgotten for a time any of our differences, I feel truly grateful to this immense assembly, which has filled this vast hall, for their behaviour, and the encouragement they have given us throughout. I am not aware what the precedents of Church Congresses are; but you may be quite sure a Congress has not been as successful as this has been without a very large amount of labour on the part of those who have prepared it. There are, on both my right and left, gentlemen who I know have worked for many months, giving the best of their thoughts and time to produce the result which we have now had the benefit of; and I am quite sure you feel as I do, that we owe a very deep debt of gratitude to those hearts and heads and hands which have prepared the Congress. I will just, as I go by, pay my respects to the worthy Mayor; and allow me to bid you farewell and God bless you!

The Bishop of Nova Scotia then occupied the chair, the audience rising and applauding as the Right Rev. President retired from the platform.

DISCUSSION.

DR. ARNOLD (of Winchester).—I came here this evening expecting to hear Mr. Barnby's views on Church Music; but he has only given us his views on the management of choirs, the duties of the clergy in regard to choirs, and his own particular ideas as to whether Oratorios should or should not be performed in cathedrals. For myself, I come from my organ-loft in Winchester Cathedral, intending to give my opinions on the music which is now being performed in churches, and which I think is calculated to do great mischief. I may say, in addressing you, that the Musical Times is a paper well known to all musicians. It is, in fact, the only Church paper we have which has a large circulation with regard to Church Music. The circulation is, perhaps, 15,000 monthly. For some time past the opinions given in the Musical Times on Church Music have been in one direction—Advance, advance, advance! The music has advanced, and advanced in such a manner, that when one enters a church now, one hears such stuff that one is ashamed to go again.

A VOICE.—Which church?

DR. ARNOLD.—Churches generally. I am speaking generally of music now. I wish to speak of Psalmody and Hymnody—"Hymns Ancient and Modern," and the work just published, "The Hymnary." As regards "Hymns Ancient and Modern," there are many good tunes; but the harmonies are very bad in the larger number. "The Hymnary" I consider to be, in some respects, an advance on "Hymns Ancient and Modern" (in the same style, understand me), and calculated, therefore, to do even more mischief; and I am speaking simply and solely in an artistic sense of the music. Of course I expect to be asked to prove what I am saying. A man may be exceedingly popular and yet altogether wrong. In fact the question generally asked now is, Is he a popular person? Well, suppose the question were asked of myself, I should say, "No, I am not a popular man; certainly not." I have never taken the necessary steps to ensure popularity. I have never been able to circulate, to the extent of 15,000 monthly, my views. I will begin to explain to you why I consider these hymns to be bad. I will quote the opinion of one of our greatest Church writers, Dr. Crotch. He was formerly Professor of Music at Oxford, the chair of which is now held by Sir F. Ouseley, a most distinguished musician. Dr. Crotch, writing on Church Music as an art, says: "Music may be divided into three styles—the sublime, the beautiful and the ornamental." Now the sublime style of music is the most elevating and most soul-stirring which can be conceived by mortal man. It requires a high intellectual power to conceive anything of the kind. As a specimen of the truly sublime, I may give you the opening part of "Worthy is the Lamb" of Handel. Where can you find anything finer than that? If you wish another specimen, take "His body is buried in peace." These are specimens of the truly sublime which will last to the end of all time. A hundred or more years have passed, yet we know these are great works and great conceptions in art. The next style, the beautiful, is one degree less in value than the sublime, and it may be explained in this way:—The beautiful combination is the result of softness, delicacy, smoothness, and a certain amount of solidity in harmony. The two are generally combined in fine music. Take Handel's "Round about the starry throne," and you have the combination of the two things. The third style is the ornamental, and it is of less value than the two I have previously spoken of. It is the result of abrupt variation and peculiar melody; and as regards harmony, there are other peculiarities into which I will not now enter. I maintain that the Church Music of the present day, instead of being written in the sublime style, at which each Church composer should aim, is in the ornamental or lowest style of art. I maintain that the greater part of the music in "The Hymnary" is unworthy of Church Music. I am asked constantly, "What can you recommend in the way of Church Music? Do you know anything with a 'swing' and 'go'?" Dear me, I don't take this view of Church Music, but a much higher one. I had a gentleman the other day who attended a meeting with regard to music for a parochial choir festival, and he said he had so much of this extreme music, that he begged to say he hoped we should select no music written within the last 150 years. This is a violent reaction caused by so much "swinging" and "going." As I have not the time to discuss this matter as fully as I should like to do, I think I will write about it. I should like to have had some views of Mr. Barnby's to combat; but really I think you must have learned very little from him about Cathedral Music.

REV. J. A. SEATON (Cleckheaton).—The small claim which I have on your attention to-night, perhaps, may be based upon the fact that for seven years I have been musical secretary and editor, and, to all intents and purposes, choir-master of a Yorkshire Choral Union. The particular musical matter which I wish to enter upon to-night is the relation of the clergy to that special part of their duties, which is commonly known as intoning the service. Most Acts of Parliament have an explanatory clause; and though my speech will certainly not be as long as some Acts of Parliament, nor, I hope, so dull, yet I must begin with an explanatory clause. First, I shall use the term "precentor," not in the sense of that functionary in a cathedral whose luxurious repose of his book upon his stall was—I do not say is—an apt illustration of his own luxurious repose,—I shall use the word "precentor" in its literal sense as a reader of the Church's services, be he precentor of a cathedral, or merely the priest of a parish church. The word "monotone," as its name implies, I shall use for the special mode of musical recitation which is confined to one single note. The word "intone" I shall use with reference to the special mode of musical recitation which involves inflexion and the use of several notes. When at Oxford studying logic, we were taught a convenient formulæ for classifying everything. Everything was either A or not A, and that was supposed to be exhaustive. So I would classify the clergy by dividing them into those who can sing and those who can't. Further than this, I would subdivide each of these classes. First, I take those who can't sing, in order that we may get rid of them. There are two classes of these men: those who can't sing and know it, and those who can't sing and don't know it. As regards the first, I am very sorry for them, but am very glad they do know it. As for those who can't sing and don't know it, I pity them intensely, and I think they stand in need of somebody who should hold the same relation to them which a prominent member of the House of Commons is facetiously said to hold towards the present Government—the relation of a candid friend. Clergy of this kind want somebody who will take them kindly by the arm, and say, "My dear fellow, why do you try and sing the service with a voice like a peacock?" I would ten thousand times rather hear the responses and prayers read (in the popular sense, and not the technical), than badly intoned. I pass on next to those who can sing, and they may be divided into two classes. By the word "can" I mean those who have the power; and by "sing" I do not mean make a musical noise, but are able to sing in tune and time. The first class are those who could if they would, but won't take the pains to learn. The second are those who can and do, and who do it well. As to the first, if they have an ear at all, I would recommend them to monotone the service for six months, and not try to intone it, and then go away and learn to sing in tune and time, and learn what tune and time mean. Moreover, practise with an instrument first, and then try to sing unaccompanied. Having first put the notes down, try to sing a certain phrase of music until you can sing in perfect time, and keep the pitch without an instrument. There is often something very sad even in the beginning of a service. The most difficult thing we have is the Confession. Every sentence gets a trifle lower, until, at the latter end, we are down nobody knows where. Now a little real practice in music would enable the precentor to catch with his ear the slightest depression on the part of the choir, and to sharpen his own next sentence a trifle, so as to raise it. Then, after having learned to sing, and made it a study, go on to intone. As to those who can sing, and do sing well, they have need of one word of musical exhortation and one word of spiritual exhortation. My word of musical exhortation is, that it is a great mistake to think that the responses in the choral service are the easiest part in it. Not very long ago I was in a building where perhaps the finest service in England is sung. Coming home, I was asked what I thought of the service. "The anthem," I said, "and the Canticles were most beautiful; the Hymns were very fair; the Psalms were bad, and the Responses were execrable." The reason of this is that constant repetition begets carelessness, and carelessness begets musical faults of tune and time. And now for my word of spiritual warning. There is an old saying that familiarity breeds contempt. I am sadly afraid that the saying is only too true of spiritual matters; for there is not only the carelessness about the music, but the question of formalism and heartlessness; and this is a special danger for us clergy from our very familiarity with sacred things. But this is no argument against intoning. It is often said those who intone the service cannot do it from the heart. Why, bless my heart! those who read the services may get into just as formal and careless a way, and at least intoning has the merit of concealing all individual peculiarities. Reading the prayers may be just as heartless as the most elaborate singing of them; and therefore the word of spiritual warning I would give to all my brethren is this:—Try ever to be true precentors, leaders of God's praise in God's house.

REV. B. COMPTON (St. Paul, Covent Garden).—I desire to offer to you a few practical remarks, taken from the side of the clergyman rather than of the musician. I desire, first of all, to join heartily in the aspirations of Mr. Higgins, that the time may come when we shall have a universal hymn-book for the whole Anglican communion; but, as he said, there are many difficulties to get over first of all, and I think the best way in which we can co-operate with him is to face those preliminary "hard impossibilities" which he has alluded to. The first kind of difficulty we have to contend with is a very serious one indeed, and it is that anything like a perfect hymn-book actually does not exist at all. I'll appeal to any one who has had experience, either in editing a hymn-book, or in carefully selecting the hymns for public worship, if there are not many occasions and days for which we do not possess good hymns at all. These hymns we have yet to get, and they cannot be produced to order. The second great difficulty which meets us in this endeavour is a worse one still; and here I hope I shall not offend the susceptibilities of any one present, for I am afraid I shall have to express myself about hymns somewhat in the way Dr. Arnold did just now about the music. It is that the taste of our congregations is not yet brought up to the mark of really appreciating what are good hymns and what are not. In bringing this heavy accusation, I will only justify myself by asking you whether you do not find in your collections of hymns many which are utter trash. I must confess that, going sometimes to my brethren's churches, it is perfectly amazing to me how people do contrive to select the very worst hymns out of such an excellent book as "Hymns Ancient and Modern." Therefore I say, that as long as this defective taste in hymns exists, it would be a pity to precipitate matters and stereotype, for we do not know how long, any collection of existing hymns. We want a great improvement in our taste for sacred poetry. The truth is, I believe, that everybody who learns to sing, learns it upon words so utterly unmeaning and so exceedingly silly, that they get out of the habit of necessarily attaching a sensible meaning to the words which they sing. I will not detain you longer upon this; but I wish to offer a few practical remarks upon another subject touched upon by Mr. Barnby. First of all let me, as a perfectly non-musical man who cannot sing, and knows it, thank him most sincerely for his decisive opinion that our hymns should be sung in unison. I speak as a practical clergyman who takes great interest in choir practice, and invariably attends it in his own church. But if anybody knew the trouble of trying to deal with people who want to sing in parts and don't take the trouble to come to practices, and the difficulties which ensue in consequence, they would most heartily welcome such an opinion as Mr. Barnby's; and I only wish it may be spread far and wide, and dinned into the ears of our choirs. I believe most of the audience to-night are laymen, and I would impress upon them the good they may do in getting the incumbent of the parish to attend himself to the musical practices, as far as he possibly can. I do not know why it is, but it certainly is so, that things go wrong if he is not there. Very often, indeed, other people know a great deal more about the matter than he does. But his position is accepted as a sort of authority; and if he conducts it carefully, without intruding his own opinion where it is not wanted, the choir practice will go on in a way it will never do if he does not attend it personally himself. Lastly, let me say a word on the relations, which, I believe, are very important, of the incumbent and the organist. No work is ever well done in combination unless each person sees his own business and sticks to it. The positions of the clergyman and organist are perfectly well defined. The clergyman's business is to make himself thoroughly master, as a scholar, of the meaning of the hymns he wishes to be sung, and the expression he wishes to be given to them, and, on the part of the congregation, to make known to the organist the kind of expression he wants, leaving it to him to carry it out as his skill will dictate. Here, I believe, we who can't sing and know it, really possess some slight advantage over those who can sing a little and know it, because we must at once feel it perfectly absurd to have any musical opinion. All we can do is to exercise the common musical taste which, I believe, every human being has, whatever his ear may be, and ask for a musical rendering of the intellectual expression which we desire to be given. Lastly, from the bottom of my heart, I would impress the exceeding desirableness of every man in Holy Orders in the Church of England having some musical education. If you knew what it is to have none, and to be unable even to "raise a hymn" at any quiet service or children's gathering, you would feel, as deeply as I do, what an enormous advantage it is to have some musical power. I earnestly trust, among the many schemes for the improvement of the education of the clergy, which is grievously wanted in many points, this will not be forgotten.

PRECENTOR VENABLES (Lincoln).—The stirring words which fell from Mr. Seaton have roused the precentor of a Cathedral church from his luxurious ease,—I cannot say from his cushioned seat,—to say a few words upon what I feel to be the duties and responsibilities of a cathedral precentor. Let me say—and I am sure I am speaking for my order—how deeply thankful I feel to Mr. Barnby for the kind views he has so admirably set before us. I rejoice to have heard them, and to know that they will be printed and go forth, and that hundreds and thousands who are not here will have the privilege of reading them. Our Cathedral service has been set before us this evening by Mr. Barnby in its true character as a meditative service. It is not expected to be a service in which all should join; and let me beg those who are present here, who go to Cathedral services, not to attempt to join in music to which they are unaccustomed. As Precentor of our glorious Cathedral of Lincoln, it is my delight to attend the services twice every day for the greater part of the year; and I am sorry to say that my enjoyment of those services is much marred by the presence of those who cannot sing and don't know it, and yet attempt to join in anthems and services. Before now I have had to turn to some one standing near me in a stall, and beg him to reserve himself for the chorus, when I have found him join in Spohr's "As pants the hart." I hope this, the true idea of Cathedral services, will be more appreciated—viz., that it is a meditative service. There are portions where we rejoice to have the congregation joining, such as the chanting of the Psalms. If they cannot sing, let them do it sotto voce, and not spoil that which I feel is a most glorious and instructive part of our worship—the Psalms of David. But in the other parts, let them regard the services and the anthems as a chanted sermon, and let them devote their minds and thoughts to meditating upon the glorious truths set forth in that Creed set hymnwise, the Te Deum, the glorious Canticles, which set forth the mysteries of the Incarnation, and the coming of the Lord as a light to lighten the Gentiles. If they cannot sing, let them meditate upon those glorious truths which are set forth musically. Some hard things have been said to-night of modern music. I rejoice to think, with one who speaks with authority (the present Bishop of Carlisle, who is an accomplished musician, and took, while Dean of Ely, a part in the musical services himself), that the music of the present day is quite equal to anything that has been produced in former years, and, as the Bishop of Carlisle said, our resources are by no means exhausted. In our own Cathedral, we desire to be catholic, and not to adopt any school of music, and run in any narrow road. We take the oldest services, the glorious inheritance we have received from our Aldrich, Farrant and Boyce; and I often have the pleasure of listening to Mr. Barnby's music, and last week heard it with very great enjoyment in my Cathedral; and sometimes I listen also to the music of Dr. Arnold with very great pleasure also. I feel very much indebted to Mr. Barnby for what he said about hymn-singing; for the service has lost one great portion of its use if the congregation attempt, without being able, to take an intelligent vocal part. I would desire that the Cathedral service on Sunday should never take place without a hymn to a simple tune, in which all can join; and I agree with Mr. Barnby that this should be in unison. When one's ears are tortured, as they are, by the attempts of persons to indulge in the horrible screech which is known as singing counter, one longs for the solidity of sound when all are singing with one voice and one word and one note. I am thankful to Mr. Barnby for what he has said, and am thankful to think the time is coming when it will be possible to have musical festivals in our Cathedrals,—a true musical festival,—when we shall have an oratorio, or portion of an oratorio, performed as part of the religious service. There is no place where our glorious Oratorios can be so properly performed as in our Cathedrals,—not as shows or spectacles, for which people should pay money, but as portions of the worship of God, and as a faint prelude to that glorious service in which we trust, through His grace, eternally to join.

CANON WALSHAM HOW.—Just two or three words only upon a few points which struck me during the course of this debate. You have just listened to the representative of a Cathedral service—the meditative service. I stand here as the representative of a purely country parish, where the service must be necessarily, if it is good for anything at all, congregational. Let me ask you first of all to make your service reverential, helpful to devotions of the people. This I think is best done by adopting a low monotone. I do not think taking the G, and having the note given you, a good plan. It is too high for the ordinary congregation. I think most clergy can read very reverentially on a monotone not higher than F; and I think in that way you can get really good responding, and I could never get it without. I have had non-musical curates who were able, except in very long prayers, to keep very fairly on their monotone. Besides the strain on the voices in the responding, there is the difficulty of keeping up the pitch when the note is higher than the natural note: although in the Creed and Confession the thing may be done by the organ playing a soft harmony. I protest against the service in which the clergyman reads up and down all the time, and the choir finishes up each prayer with an "Amen," dropping the half note from nothing at all. It always strikes me as one of the most painful things in the way of a church service, and I really wish those who are obliged, from the natural conformation of the thorax or some other cause, to read up and down, would let the whole thing be said, and not sung. Let me say a word about hymns and hymn-tunes. I should like to mention a plan which I have found to promote congregational singing. I always, in the evening service, choose a very popular hymn and tune for the place before the sermon; and the choir are instructed to cease singing during the last verse but one, leaving it entirely for the congregation. A great many hymns fall in exceedingly well with this, especially such as end with a doxology; and the effect is excellent. The people thoroughly enjoy their verse, and the outburst of the choir in the final verse is most telling. There is one more thing: do let us invite our congregations to join in the practices, if it only be a practice of an hour before the evening service. You can get a great many to come; they do come, and it very much helps the congregational singing. What we want in hymn tunes is really popular music, and yet thoroughly good music. I would, as a great musical composer said to me not long ago—Mr. A. Sullivan—adopt this as a principle in selecting hymn tunes:—let us have thoroughly popular tunes, but never one bar of bad music. That was his dictum, and a very good one it is. I would protest, with Dr. Arnold, against sensuous rhymes set to jingling French love-songs. We want hymns set to stirring music, and we want to train our children to sing. Let us have children's services, with bright sparkling hymns and good music, and we shall attract the children to the Church, and make them love it and its services. The music should be not only good and popular, but also as reverential as it can be. I think we err in that sometimes. I will give an instance: Have you never heard the "Kyrie," that touching penitential prayer after each Commandment, sung to some melody that took a long range, and was very pretty, no doubt, but was very unsuitable to a humble prayer? The "Kyrie" should consist of but a few notes, and should be very penitential in its tone. I have just one thing more to say—Ought not that service, of all our services, which should lift our hearts up to the throne of God most blessedly, to be helped, above all others, by musical rendering, if possible? I know there are difficulties in the way very often; but I do think that we want the helpful voice of singing in our service of Holy Communion. Let me just tell you what I have found to answer very well in a country parish. I have never admitted anyone to my choir, not a communicant, except children; and it ought to be a principle in our choirs, for those who lead the singing ought surely to be patterns to the congregation in their lives. I have always had a capital band of earnest young men, some good singers and some not very good. But all have been communicants. Now I found that some came to Holy Communion one Sunday and some another. There was no fixed rule. So at last I said, "If you will all come on some one Sunday we will have music." They all closed with the offer, and always, once in a month, at an early celebration, we have music. They always come and sing Marbeck's simple unison music, and a hymn, and we end with the "Nunc dimittis." The way in which this has drawn the people is wonderful, very many finding the musical expression of this, our highest act of praise, most helpful to them. This whole subject is one which deeply interests me, and I cannot sit down without joining in the thanks we all offer to Mr. Barnby for his most admirable paper. I am sure there are many present who must have known what it is to have their hearts lifted up to God in some of his beautiful hymn tunes, such as "The endless Alleluia."

THE RIGHT REV. CHAIRMAN.—Allow me to express my regret that your own Bishop has not been here to close this most interesting series of meetings. I am quite sure that all of us who have sons and daughters must sympathise with him, and feel there was quite sufficient cause for his brief absence. Without detaining you longer, at this late hour in the evening, let me express the very great satisfaction I have had, in coming from the other side of the Atlantic, in having had the opportunity of being present. There were one or two subjects, particularly that of the merits or disadvantages of an established or disestablished Church, and the matter of Synods, of which I have personal experience, and upon which I should like to have said a word or two; but having been accustomed for many years to a dryer though colder climate, the damp of this last week has so far affected my throat, that I thought it would be more prudent to keep quiet. I will only say that we on the other side of the Atlantic have not the great advantages you have in coming together from year to year in assemblies of this kind, although, probably, you who have these advantages do not fully appreciate them. It is six years since I had the advantage of being present at a Congress, and it was with great satisfaction I found this Congress being held during my present visit. It has more than answered my expectations. These great gatherings, and the eloquent, able, high-minded and spiritual speeches we have heard, I am sure must be a benefit to us all; and for myself, it will be a benefit to my people when I go back and carry to them something of that I have received here. I will now call upon you to join in singing the Evening Hymn. We have heard a good deal about singing; but I am sure nothing could have been more gratifying than the manner in which the hymns have been sung at all our meetings.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE production of M. Felicien David's Ode Symphony, "Le Desert," at the fifth of the Saturday concerts, though carefully prepared, produced but little effect. The work has but small merit, even the Oriental colour with which the composer has endeavoured to invest it being strained and artificial throughout. Dr. Hans von Bülow's rendering of the concerto in E flat of Beethoven, at the sixth concert, provoked comparisons which we, who cannot allow the display of his memory to form a portion of the exhibition, consider to his disadvantage. He is essentially an astonishing player, but interest too often flags with the listeners when astonishment ceases. Of his executive power there cannot be two opinions; but that he occasionally sacrifices his reverence for the author in the desire to assert his own individuality, is made too evident to us to admit of a doubt. His reception, however, proved that he has gained the unqualified approval of a large portion of the musical public; and whether he may be the "lion" of the day or of years, his attraction at present is more likely to increase than to diminish. A feature of this concert was also M. Gounod's sacred piece, "Abraham's Request," an eloquent composition, excellently sung by Signor Gustave Garcia, and directed by the composer. The Elegy for pianoforte and orchestra, by M. Silas, which was given at the seventh concert, is a work deserving many hearings. It is melodious and delicately instrumented throughout, the pianoforte part (finely played by the composer) being written with a grace and fluency which should render it a favourite with all pianists. M. Silas was warmly applauded both in this composition and two of his smaller works, "Malvina," and a well written Gavotte—and, indeed, so cordial was his welcome that we may now hope to hear more of him and his works in public than we have hitherto done. Sir Julius Benedict's Symphony in G minor, completed expressly for performance at the Crystal Palace, produced a profound impression at the eighth concert, on the 22nd ult. Of the first movement and the "Scherzo," we have spoken when they were given for the first time at the last Norwich Festival. The "Andante con moto" and final "Allegro con fuoco," are well worthy of being associated with the movements already written, the "Andante" being charmingly melodious, and the "Allegro" (a highly effective example of passion without noise) concluding the work most appropriately. The composer was called for at the termination of the Symphony and loudly applauded. We have little to say of the vocal music at these concerts. Amongst many singers of established fame, we have had some whose efforts were not of sufficient merit to warrant special mention.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE third season of this Choral Society was worthily inaugurated on the 30th October, by a performance of Handel's little known Oratorio "Theodora." The exhaustive analysis of this fine work, by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, which lately appeared in the Musical Times, renders any comments upon its merits unnecessary; but we may say that the effect created upon us, by its recent performance, under Mr. Barnby's direction, at the Hanover Square Rooms, was so materially enhanced by its rendering with all the resources at the Albert Hall, that we may hope at least for an occasional hearing of this amongst the many Oratorios of Handel which have lately been rescued from comparative obscurity. The choir showed unmistakable signs of improvement, especially in the soprano department, the freshness of these voices giving much brightness to the whole of the choral music: this was particularly observable in the choruses, "All pow'r in Heaven above" and "He saw the lovely youth," both of which were given with great decision and beauty of tone, "Venus laughing from the skies" (in which a good effect was gained by the altos singing the upper part, instead of the first tenors), "Blest be the hand" and "O love divine," may also be cited as amongst the best of the choruses, the points being so well taken up as to prove beyond doubt that much care had been bestowed in the preparation of the work. The soprano solos were finely sung by Madame Otto-Alvsleben (the well-known song, "Angels, ever bright and fair," being, as might be expected, the most generally admired), and Miss Julia Elton and Miss Dones (the former giving the music of Didimus and the latter that of Irene) gained warm applause throughout. Mr. W. H. Cummings sang, as he always does, with the feeling of a true artist, creating a genuine effect in the air, "Though the honours," and Mr. Thurley Beale in "Go, my faithful soldier" and many other portions of the somewhat trying music of Valens, showed that he is making rapid advances as an Oratorio singer. Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's additional accompaniments to the work were used on the occasion, Dr. Stainer presiding with his well-known ability at the organ. The "St. Matthew" Passion music of Bach, given at the second concert, on the 11th ult., is now (happily) too well known to need comment. The performance of the work, too, by this Society is periodically looked for by the lovers of sacred music, for every member of the choir feels a pride in knowing that, through the perseverance of Mr. Barnby and the willing co-operation of his forces, one of Bach's grandest creations has been firmly established in public favour, and therefore exerts himself to the utmost to develop its beauties. The chorals produced a profound impression, and the choruses were sung with that perfect balance of tone which we have already mentioned; but we cannot like the effect of the cornet strengthening the chorale in the opening chorus; we know that it is difficult to make this subject sufficiently prominent, but it is by the voices alone that the attempt must be made. Miss Emily Spiller acquitted herself fairly in the soprano solos, and Madame Patey in the air "Have mercy upon me" (the violin obbligato delicately played by Mr. Pollitzer) elicited the warmest applause. Mr. Cummings gave the whole of the tenor music with exquisite finish, and Mr. Thurley Beale sang the principal bass part with care and judgment, Mr. Pope displaying a well trained voice in some of the subordinate bass solos. Dr. Stainer played the organ part with the discrimination of a well trained—and therefore unobtrusive—artist; and Mr. Randegger was of the utmost service in accompanying some of the recitatives at the pianoforte. The concerts were conducted by Mr. Barnby, who received a cordial welcome, both from the choir and audience, on his first appearance for the present season.

DAILY EXHIBITION CONCERTS.

WITH the simple desire that justice may be done, do we recur to the story of these concerts. Such an enterprise as that which came to an end in the Royal Albert Hall on the last day of October, should not pass into history without the notice clearly its due. As an enterprise, it was unique in the annals of music. Those annals record many and great achievements—many a speculation daringly in advance of its time—but they may be searched without result for a parallel to the Exhibition Concerts. The conception of the enterprise was boldness itself, and seemed an absolute defiance of all the conditions of success. To propose giving a classical orchestral concert every day, for more than six months, in a huge building on the outskirts of London, must have struck not a few timid or very practical souls as little short of madness. But those who made the proposal, and undertook to carry it out, were no candidates for Bedlam. They knew the risk, and they also knew the certain good that must be gained, whatever else was lost. He who would reap a harvest, first sacrifices the seed, and in full view of this universal truth, were the Exhibition Concerts begun. That they were not supported, even to the moderate extent hoped for, is a fact; it is a fact likewise, that nothing availed to alter their rigidly educational tendency. As a rule, entrepreneurs know how to adapt themselves to the public taste, and can change their tactics as easily as their coats. But under all circumstances, the managers of the Exhibition Concerts kept the even tenour of their way, never swerving an inch from the path at first marked out, and never permitting themselves to lose sight of their original goal. The public came or stayed away—more often they stayed away than came—but every afternoon Mr. Barnby or Mr. Deichmann was in attendance, with his orchestra, and the prescribed work was done as carefully as though the Hall had been full. Who can tell how great was the influence of this unfaltering purpose? It brought a new element into the public demonstration of art—an element above and beyond the question of pecuniary gain, and taking music into account before aught else. Here was something new under the sun, and even the scarcely observant public, giving the matter a single thought, must have been impressed with the phenomenon. Under such circumstances it is with no ordinary pride that the managers of the Exhibition Concerts compare their actual achievements with the promises of the prospectus. Excepting only the operatic recitals, which circumstances made impossible, they did all they undertook to do. One engagement was to perform the standard works of the great masters, and this they fulfilled with a completeness needing no proof. Another was to give special attention to works by English musicians. How they were as good as their word, let Sir Sterndale Bennett, Messrs. Barnett, Sullivan, Macfarren, Cowen, Forsey Brion, Barry, Gadsby, Thouless, Summers, Clarke, and Stephens bear witness. They further engaged to bring forward young native artists, and the name of those who actually appeared is legion, both vocalists and instrumentalists. It may safely be said that never before had native talent, whether creative or executive, such an opportunity as was afforded by these concerts. Proof that talent was actually possessed had only to be given in order to throw down the barriers, usually passed with difficulty, which divided it from the public presence. Who can tell what influence an enterprise thus liberally conducted may have brought to bear. If example be, as Butler called it, an

"imperious dictator
Of all that's good or bad to human nature," surely the Exhibition Concerts must have done a great work, unacknowledged perhaps, but none the less efficacious. Their true and legitimate results will appear when daily orchestral concerts are a permanent feature in the musical world of London. This state of things may be anticipated without presumption, for it is not more wonderful than, ten years ago, would have seemed the prospect of two hundred performances given in six months at Kensington Gore.

THE WAGNER SOCIETY.

THE second prospectus of this Society fully justified the anticipations of those who, looking at the first, saw the absolute necessity of change. Clearness of vision in practical matters does not seem to be one of the attributes of Wagnerian enthusiasts. Otherwise we should never have witnessed an attempt to keep up a Society exclusively by the concert-room performance of Wagner's music. Were the master a writer of purely orchestral or chamber compositions the attempt might have succeeded, as it might, indeed, were he the author of orthodox operatic works. But Wagner's theory is directly opposed to the presentation of his dramatic music in a separate form. That music is part of a complete whole, and was never intended to have, nor can it have, much of beauty or significance by itself. Moreover, the fragments capable of separate performance in a manner at all acceptable, are very limited in number. This fact, the constant repetitions of last season made evident, and no one who watched the action of the Society could fail to see that it must either change its plan or die. The managers have preferred change to death, so that, now, while the Society is still called by Wagner's name, it takes within the scope of its operations, all the great masters from Bach downwards. Judging, however, by the first programme of the new season, the Society will limit itself as far as possible, to works more or less illustrative of "advanced" ideas. This, indeed, is what might have been expected, because it is simply an expansion of the original scheme, and it supplies a distinct raison d'être. The Wagner Society still has a mission,—one which will secure for it the sympathy of all who desire that ideas, promulgated by able men, may have a fair hearing and a deliberate judgment.

The opening concert took place in St. James's Hall, on the 14th ult., and was well attended, but badly managed. It is no business of ours to enquire into the causes; but we hope the managers will do so for themselves, and take steps to prevent such results as those which went far to spoil the enjoyment of the audience. When there is confusion in seating the visitors, and when the conductor has to answer clamorous demands for programmes by stating that he had seen them in the course of the day, and knew they were in existence somewhere or other, things must have reached a very bad pass indeed. Hardly will such blunders be repeated; but it is matter for regret that they were made at all. The programme opened with the overture to Spontini's "Olympe," an opera produced in Paris fifty-six years ago. Apologies of its then failure, the Society's annotator quoted a remark of Berlioz, to the effect that it is the fate of genius to be misunderstood by its contemporaries, and rightly appraised only by their successors. The quotation was singularly infelicitous; first, because Spontini's work was not judged upon its merits; next, because Spontini himself was a very idol of fortune; and, lastly, because there are no signs of his music again becoming popular. Moreover, Berlioz's saying might be applied to any quack by his dupes, and, though it state a general truth, has no particular force. The overture, vigorously conducted by Herr Dannreuther, was vigorously played by the large and sonorous orchestra. Generally speaking, the performance lacked refinement, and this may be predicated of nearly all the evening's doings. Spontini was followed by Joachim Raff, who contributed his MS. concerto in C minor, for pianoforte and orchestra—a work written for, and, on this occasion, played by Dr. Hans von Bülow. Let us say at once, that we are not about to join the discussion of Dr. von Bülow's merits as a pianist. The question, embodying as it does more than personal considerations, is a large one, and should be examined, if at all, at greater length than is possible here. Enough for the present, that Dr. von Bülow's strongest detractors readily admit his ability to present a work like Raff's with adequate clearness and force. The Concerto is a favourable example of its prolific author's talent. There is power in the opening Allegro, the treatment of which shows mastery of effect alike as regards theme, structure and colour. But the greatest impression was made by the Andante quasi larghetto (A flat major), a movement opening with a largely developed, pathetic, and quaintly rhythmic theme, which arrested general attention, and won unanimous approval. As the Andante begins, so it continues, pianoforte and orchestra being employed in a masterly way to develop a series of admirable effects. Whatever may be Raff's weakness, he is strong in orchestration, to prove which, this slow movement need alone be cited. The finale (Allegro) is much less satisfactory than either of the preceding movements. Very elaborate and pretentious, it is less clear and symmetrical than could be wished. On the other hand, it abounds in effective passages for the solo instrument, which result the composer, perhaps, had most in view. Herr von Bülow, who as usual, played without book, did his very best for the success of the work, and was not without reward. Two selections from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" followed the Concerto, and one of them—introduction to the third Act—had to be repeated, for the reason, apparently, that it contains a genuine tune. After Wagner came Berlioz, with his extraordinary overture to "King Lear"—one of the strangest and wildest effusions ever due to the ill-regulated phantasies of youth. This work, we believe, had not been heard here since its very brilliant performance under the late Mr. Alfred Mellon, at one of the concerts of the Musical Society of London, in 1866. Frankly, we see no good that can come from its revival.

If such a thing be legitimate art, then, indeed, the scope of legitimate art is a wide one. Hardly could it and the overture to "Leonora" have even the smallest relationship. Dr. von Bülow's rendering of Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia was a brilliant display of his peculiar powers, and excited much enthusiasm, but it was hardly a fitting prelude to Beethoven's C minor Symphony, with which the concert ended. Feeling this, perhaps, many of the audience went away, and left the great master to pour forth his strains to comparatively empty benches. Beethoven, however, can survive ill treatment. Above and beyond all possible influences, he stands serene, with something yet to gain, it may be, but nothing to fear.

BACH'S SACRED CANTATAS.—Allusion was made by Mr. Barnby, in the Paper on Church Music which he read at the Church Congress at Bath in October last, to the numerous Sacred Cantatas by J. S. Bach, which might be used on Church festivals and during special seasons. Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. have already published two of these with English words, viz.: "God's time is the best" and "My spirit was in heaviness," and a third is in preparation, "O Light Everlasting" (O Ewiges Feuer), as well as Bach's setting of the Magnificat. They propose to continue the series (the translation and adaptation having been undertaken by the Rev. J. Troutbeck), and thus open to the English Church a treasure-house of sacred music of the very highest character.

SCHUBERT'S MASSES.—Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., will shortly publish a new edition of the five Masses by F. Schubert, in C, F, G, B flat and E flat, adapted to the English Communion Service. In each case a separate Kyrie Eleison has been arranged, to suit the responses to the Commandments. The accompaniments have been newly arranged for this edition, from the full score, by Mr. Berthold Tours. The Masses will also be published with Latin words, thus making them available for the use of both the English and the Roman communions.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh has appointed Thursday, the 18th inst., to lay the first stone of the National Training School for Music. The Building will be on the west side of the Albert Hall. The Society of Arts, which has been mainly instrumental in promoting the establishment of the School, intends to celebrate the occasion by holding a conversazione and concert during the evening of the same day in the Albert Hall.

The Tuesday evening entertainments at the Public Hall, South Norwood, have commenced for the winter season, under the management, as heretofore, of Messrs. J. Baucutt and W. Blount, and are attracting large audiences. The entertainment on the 11th ult. was exceptionally good. Miss Fielding was encored in both her songs, and Mr. F. Russell was equally successful. Two glees, "A Spring Song" (Pinsuti), and "O who will o'er the downs" (Pearsall), were well sung by the company, "The Chough and Crow" being given in response to an encore for the latter. Miss H. L. Walford supplied the literary portion of the programme in a manner that created much enthusiasm. A solo on the English concertina, by Mr. Hogwood, was highly effective, as was also a piano-forte selection, played with brilliancy by Mrs. Cleaver. Messrs. Naylor, Blount, E. James, and J. Holt also took part in the entertainment.

We have received a cutting from the "Port Elizabeth Telegraph" containing some remarks upon an advertisement which appeared in the August number of the Musical Times, for an organist and choirmaster to the parish church. As it is obvious that a journal has nothing whatever to do with strictures upon its advertisements, our correspondent can scarcely expect us to give insertion to his communication. Locally, the paragraph may have much interest; but we doubt whether the majority of our readers will care whether there is any "competent professor resident in the town or neighbourhood," whether the new organist will be able to make "an income of from £400 to £500 per annum," or whether the population of Port Elizabeth is or is not "15,000."

THE Brompton Cricket Club gave a concert at the Vestry Hall, Chelsea, on the 12th ult., to a large and appreciative audience. In the instrumental department, Messrs. Arlidge (Flute), Augarde (Clarinet), and Henry Lahee (Pianoforte) gave some effective solos; and the vocalists who were heard to most advantage were Miss Marion Stringer, who received an enthusiastic and well-merited encore for one of her songs; Miss Fanny Cozens, Mr. F. H. Cozens, Mr. F. Clifton and Mr. Blakeman. Messrs. Sydney Cozens and C. E. Sheriff, in Rossini's buffo duet "Sir! a secret," and Mr. F. Thornton in two buffo songs, gained much applause. But the feature of the evening was Sir John Goss's Glee, "There is beauty on the mountain," which was well sung by Misses Stringer and Cozens, Messrs Sydney Cozens and Sheriff; the same quartett giving, later in the evening, an excellent rendering of "O who will o'er the downs so free." Messrs. F. H. and Sydney Cozens divided the duties of conductor.

WE understand that North Wales is about to follow the example of the South, by sending up a choir to compete at the Crystal Palace Music Meetings next year.

Two Welsh Festivals have been given at M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts, which were in every respect highly successful. Miss Mary Davies, who has lately been elected to a scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, fully justified by her excellent singing the right to the distinction which has been conferred upon her; and a Welsh tenor, Eos Morlais, gained lavish demonstrations of applause. Some characteristic music was contributed by the "Pennillion" vocalists, prefaced by a few introductory remarks from Mr. Brinley Richards; and, we need scarcely say that "Let the hills resound" and "God bless the Prince of Wales" (both conducted by the composer), aroused the usual enthusiasm.

WHILE Mr. David Lambert, a well-known bass singer of cathedral music, was officiating on Sunday, the 2nd ult., in the Durham Cathedral choir, and the chanting of the Psalms of the day was just about to commence, he suddenly fell, striking his head against his desk. Mr. Lambert's father, who was a witness of the occurrence, ran from his pew to his son's assistance, and lifted him up, but he was quite unconscious, and died immediately. The Dean at once stopped the service.

THE first of a series of Winter monthly concerts was given in St. Thomas's Hall, South Hackney, on Monday evening, the 10th ult., with every prospect of continued success. The principal artists were Madame Frances Brooke, Miss Emma Beasley, Miss Denham, Mr. Henry Pope, Mr. Percy Hamilton, Mr. John Gill and Mr. Prenton. Madame Frances Brooke was encored in a new song, "The Tempest;" Miss Emma Beasley was highly successful in the pieces allotted her; Mr. Henry Pope sang remarkably well "The Raft" and "The Village Blacksmith;" Miss Denham was twice recalled for her excellent rendering of the "May Song," from "Antony and Cleopatra," and Mr. Prenton gave, with much spirit, "Simon the Cellarer," which was loudly redemanded. Miss Frost and Mr. Walter Hastings were the accompanists.

FROM an interesting account in the "Times" of the "Liszt Jubilee," recently given at Pesth, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of this artist's career, we make the following extract:—

"The festivities began with a serenade before the residence of Liszt in the Fish-Market. Not only in the square, which is of itself of a good size, but in the streets adjoining, a large crowd had collected at dusk, the windows of the houses had been illuminated, and were occupied by sightseers; two military bands were stationed in the centre of the square, which had been cleared of the booths and stands of the fishermen which you see usually there. They performed three of Liszt's compositions—the Stephen March, the Goethe March, and the Coronation March. At the end of every one of them the crowd broke out in cheers, which were kept up vigorously until the Master appeared at the window, when they began again with redoubled energy. These cheers were the welcome on the part of the "people," and it was, perhaps, not the worst either, for probably no other crowd of the same size could have given expression to its feelings so unanimously and so energetically. Later in the evening the Municipality gave a fête in the Grand Hotel of Pesth, the Hungary, where, besides a number of notabilities and native guests, the foreign admirers who had been attracted by the festival were likewise present, the lady admirers being the most prominent among them. A gipsy band was there, of course. At the banquet which followed, toast came after toast, enthusiasm rising more and more at each. Next day the Literary and Artistic Association sent its greeting and congratulations through its committee, at its head the most popular dramatist of Hungary, who delivered an address. Later a deputation of the town came to present Liszt with the document by which the town grants three stipends, each of 200 florins, to pupils of the National Academy of Music, conferring on Liszt the right of presentation for his lifetime; and at 10 a.m. the ceremony of presenting him with a laurel wreath in gold, which had been got up by subscription, was performed in the Great Hall of the Redoute, used for all such occasions, as the most spacious locality in the town. In the evening, Liszt's Oratorio of 'Christ' was performed before a large audience, most of whom were enthusiastic enough to enjoy the treat, which lasted four and a half hours. The third day was taken up by a banquet given by Liszt's admirers, and by a festive representation of one of the popular pieces in the National Theatre, at which all the foreign guests made their appearance, although, as the play was performed in Hungarian, they can scarcely have derived much enjoyment from it."

A VERY good musical performance was given by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read, at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, on the 31st October. An air, with variations by Hesse (excellently played on the organ by Mr. W. Allen); the solo, "It is enough," from "Elijah" (carefully rendered by Mr. Edward Long), and the chorus, "There is joy," from Sullivan's "Prodigal Son," were most deservedly applauded; and sufficient evidence of the careful training to which the students are subjected by Mr. Edwin Barnes, the professor of music at the Society's schools, was given throughout the concert to warrant us in awarding the utmost praise to the system pursued in the institution. The chair was occupied by the Rev. Walter Peile.

THE Harvest Festival was held at St. John's, Waterloo Road, on the 14th ult., the most noticeable feature of which was a new hymn, written and composed by Mr. C. Castell, the organist. The whole service was admirably performed by the efficient choir of St. John's, under the superintendence of the Precentor, the Rev. S. Little, curate.

MR. F. A. BRIDGE'S Concert and Operetta Party appeared at Beaumont Hall, on the 15th ult., the artists being Miss de Seale Penson, Miss Fanny Emerton, Mr. Arthur Thomas, Mr. T. C. Travers, and Mr. F. A. Bridge; Pianist, Miss E. Stirling. The first part consisted of a concert, the second of Sullivan's comic Operetta, "Cox and Box."

A CONCERT, in aid of the building fund, was given at All Saints' School, Kensington Park Road, on the 20th ult. The vocalists were Madame F. Lancia, Miss A. Dwight, Miss D'Alton, Mr. Stedman, M. Pierre Méjanel, and Signor Caravoglia, all of whom were very successful in their songs and concerted pieces. Mr. Otto Booth gave a violin solo, and Mr. E. H. Birch, besides playing a piano solo and joining Mr. Booth in a duet, accompanied the whole of the vocal music. Mr. H. C. Hullett conducted.

AN evening concert was given on the 24th ult., at the Bow and Bromley Institute, under the direction of Mr. Henry Parker, at which the following artists appeared:—Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Estelle Emrick, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Frank Elmore, and Mr. Thurley Beale; Cornet-piston, Mr. Reynolds. The concert was highly successful, and the able exertions of the clever concert-giver and his supporters were much appreciated by a crowded audience.

THE third of the "Musical Evenings" was given at St. George's Hall, on the 19th ult., before a large audience. Schubert's posthumous string Quartet movement, in C minor, was well played, but coldly received; the string Quintet of Beethoven, in E flat (Op. 4), however, exciting the hearers to an enthusiasm which—considering that it contains five movements, and was placed at the end of the programme—affords ample proof of the growing taste for the highest chamber music. One of the principal features of the evening was the performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's pianoforte Sonata, "Maid of Orleans," by Mr. Walter Macfarren. Each movement of this charming work was given with an artistic feeling and a just appreciation of the intention of the author, which elicited the warmest applause, and a re-call for the performer so earnest and spontaneous as to deserve a record in these days, when such compliments are too often bestowed rather as a duty than as a recognition of merit. Mr. Macfarren's rendering of the pianoforte part of Schumann's "Fantaisie-Stücke—in which he was joined by Mr. Henry Holmes (violin) and Signor Pezze (violoncello)—was also deserving of the highest praise; the "Romance" and "Humoreske" especially, being given with a perfection which appeared thoroughly appreciated by the listeners, who could scarcely be restrained from attempting an encore. A smoothly-written solo for the Viola, by Mr. Henry Holmes, was excellently played by Mr. Burnett, and Miss Abbie Whinery contributed some well-selected vocal pieces, accompanied by Mr. Stephen Kemp.

A TESTIMONIAL, consisting of a splendidly illuminated address on vellum, and signed by all the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music, has been recently presented to Mr. G. A. Macfarren, congratulating him upon the success of his Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," at the Bristol Festival. The presentation took place at the Academy, Sir Sterndale Bennett, the Principal, surrounded by a large body of the Professors—many of whom had been Mr. Macfarren's fellow students—prefacing the proceedings by a speech which, though brief, was happily expressive of the feelings of his brother artists. It is now definitely announced that "St. John the Baptist" is to be given this season by the Sacred Harmonic Society; and coupled with this statement, we are told that Sir Michael Costa has withdrawn his Oratorio "Naaman," to make room for the new work; a graceful act which we are certain will be fully appreciated, not only by the composer, but by all who desire that our native artists shall be ensured a fair hearing. The Oratorio will be shortly published by Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.

ON the 7th ult., the St. George's Glee Union gave its monthly concert at the Piccolo Rooms. The principal vocalists were Miss Janet King, Miss Clara Buley, and Mr. Howells, all of whom were highly successful. Mr. Tamplin's brilliant execution of a solo on the harmonium was warmly received. Amongst the glees and part-songs "Oh! my love is like a red rose" and the "Carnovale" were the most admired. Mr. Garside conducted.

THE second of the "Monthly Popular Concerts" at Brixton, so ably conducted by Mr. Ridley Prentice, took place on the 18th ult. Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3) displayed to great advantage Mr. Prentice's qualifications as a classical pianist; and he was also highly successful in the pianoforte part of Lady Thompson's Trio in D minor, in which he was ably assisted by Mr. H. Holmes (violin) and Signor Pezze (violoncello); and in Mendelssohn's duet Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violoncello, with Signor Pezze. The vocalists were Miss Purdy and Mr. Ernest Law.

HERR VON BULOW'S first Pianoforte Recital this season, was given at St. James's Hall, on the 19th ult., and attracted a large audience. A Fantasia by Hummel (Op. 18), Bach's Italian Concerto, Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 109), and Sir Sterndale Bennett's Sonata the "Maid of Orleans," were the principal features in the programme; and we need scarcely say that all these works were given with the artist's usual fluency and marvellous executive power, the applause however, being so indiscriminately bestowed as to leave us to imagine that Bülow-worship is rapidly becoming a mere fashion. The whole of the pieces selected were, as usual, recited entirely from memory; a practice which, perhaps, has the effect of making musicians feel even more nervous than those listeners who are unaware of the excessive difficulty of this self-imposed task.

THE Brixton Choral Society performed Mr. Sullivan's Oratorio "The Light of the World," for the first time since its production at the last Birmingham Festival, on the 24th ult., with much success. The principal vocalists were Madame Florence Lancia, Madame Poole, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. J. R. Alsop, and Mr. R. Stroud. Mr. Sidney Naylor presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Byrom at the organ. Mr. Sullivan was called for and enthusiastically applauded at the conclusion of the first and second parts. The work was ably conducted by Mr. William Lemare.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

The Cathedral Psalter: containing the Psalms of David, together with the Canticles and Hymns of the Church, and other Hymns for Special Occasions, pointed for chanting by S. Flood Jones, M.A., Precentor of Westminster; J. Troutbeck, M.A., Minor Canon of Westminster; James Turle, Organist of Westminster; J. Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., Organist of St. Paul's; and Joseph Barnby. Approved by the Dean of Westminster and the Dean of St. Paul's.

WE are glad to read on the title-page of this Psalter that it is approved by the Deans of Westminster and St. Paul's, for their joint approval shows that it is the result of a combined effort to secure for those two great churches uniformity of "pointing," a matter of greater moment than it has hitherto been considered, at least in London. We say at least in London, for in other parts of England successful endeavours have been made to bring about uniformity in this matter among the parishes of a Rural-deanery for example, or an Archdeaconry, if no Diocese has as yet been gathered whole into the net. As to the origin of such movements, we cannot recall an instance in which the Cathedral of the Diocese has neglected to take its proper place in endeavouring to promote them. We may mention York, Manchester, Chester, and Lincoln as cases in point; the most remarkable success attending such efforts being, perhaps, in the case of York, its authorized Psalter, whatever be its merits, having obtained a circulation far beyond the limits of the Diocese from which it sprang. But in London, hitherto, no such endeavour has been made. We trust we shall not offend too much against the maxim to let bygones be bygones, if we remark that from indifference, or what not, the mode of pointing which reserves to itself the style and title of "The Cathedral Traditional" has survived in London long after its death and burial in most of those remote country places which the enlightened metropolis sometimes affects to despise. The Traditional mode is sublime in its disregard of those aids to precision and uniformity which constitute pointing. There is indeed a principle upon which it is supposed to proceed, but in the application of the principle each member of the choir is left to his own memory or discretion, and our own ears have frequently proved to us how widely traditions may differ, and with what pertinacity differing traditions may be simultaneously adhered to. The book that lies before us gives evidence of a change for the better, which will affect not only Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's, but through them the churches of the Diocese of London. It is a matter of importance, as we have already said, to the two great Churches immediately concerned, to secure uniformity of pointing, if for no higher reason, for the sake of orderly and intelligible chanting, not only in their own daily services, but also on those special occasions, which we believe are likely to increase rather than to diminish in frequency, when their choirs will form a united body. And we think we do not rashly forecast the future when we predict that uniformity between St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey will be felt throughout London, and that meetings of parish choirs, such as that which recently took place at St. Paul's, now so often hindered and spoilt by a painfully evident want of agreement in the mode of chanting, will be promoted, and possibly even suggested, by the very existence of a book such as this. And now we turn to the work itself, the publication of which has drawn forth the foregoing remarks. The names of the Editors are a guarantee for conscientious and intelligent work, for, as we need not remind our readers, they are all more or less distinguished, some of them remarkably, in connection with Church music, and with this branch of it in particular. We are pleased to find that they have avoided the chief snare into which most of those who have undertaken the task of pointing the Psalms have fallen—that of pointing every verse in a mechanical way, after a cut and dried pattern. They have worked on principle, nevertheless, for a study of their work shows that they have endeavoured to preserve, as far as possible, the proper accent and emphasis of the words. We say as far as possible, for no one who knows anything of the difficulty and delicacy of the work of pointing can fail to acknowledge that in many cases a choice of evils is all that is left. The Editors have evidently remembered that their business was to place before the choir and congregation a help towards singing the Psalms, in English, in an intelligent manner, with as much freedom as is compatible with the restraint of the form of the Anglican chant. We can see that there has been care to weigh and compare parallel verses, and to try to form a correct judgment in cases of doubt. Not that their conclusions will always be unanimously accepted, even by those whose fancies or prejudices do not prevent their accepting the principles of this book as sound. There are, of course, allowable differences of opinion as to the setting of words to music (for the task is nothing less than this), even within the limits of the principle we have indicated, but we suspect that a well-considered reason could be given for the pointing of each verse. We observe that by the use of an accent (somewhat too small, we venture to think) the Editors reproduce the imaginary initial bar immediately before the mediation and cadence of the chant, which is the special feature of the pointing of the late Dr. Stephen Elvey. This principle we have always considered, to be sound, and after a pretty wide examination of existing Psalters we have come to the conclusion that Dr. Elvey has a claim to be regarded as the father of the improved pointing which now prevails among us, and that the Church of England owes him a debt of gratitude which is scarcely sufficiently acknowledged. We can cordially recommend this book, and even in the few instances in which we differ from its conclusions, we feel that there is much to be said on both sides. We wish it had the imprimatur of the Bishop of London, as well as that of Deans Stanley and Church, for no doubt his sanction would go far towards commending it to the clergy of his Diocese.

The Crusaders. A Sacred Cantata, by Henry Hiles, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

THE antecedents of this accomplished musician teach us to expect matter of interest in a work from his hand of the extent of the present. The groundwork of his labour has been written and selected by Marian Millar, and the poem shows well for her skill and judgment. The first piece is a Chorus of Pilgrims, toil-worn in their march across the desert, hoping for refreshment from the waters of the oasis, but reaching the place of their yearning to find the springs dried up, and yet persevering in their pious journey. There is pleasing sweetness in the music of this number, and it is agreeable to sing; it wants, however, definite melody, and still more fails in contrast, while a redundancy of modulation distracts the hearer's attention, and conveys little expression. No. 2 is a Recitative for Godfrey, we presume of Boulogne, who is represented by a tenor; it rebukes the faint-heartedness of them who are sinking in the great cause, and points to the coming Templars, who have undertaken the duty of enfranchising the Holy Sepulchre and smoothing the way for the devotees who would approach it; the freedom that especially distinguishes recitative is wanting here, the voice being so shackled by accompaniment that dramatic declamation is impossible, while some truly charming phrases of Cantilena—that for instance on the words “Oh put your trust in Him,” &c.—are effectless because of their incoherence. Nothing is more fascinating to a composer than this style of half expressive, half rhythmic, and quite planless melodiousness; but few things are less attractive to an audience. No. 3 is a March of the Templars, or it might better have been designated a Hymn, for it is a piece of smooth vocal harmony; strange to say, it comprises parts for female voices, whereas the admission of the feminine element among the Knights Templars, would have been entirely against the rules of the order; and strange to add, the smoothly flowing character of the music is as much at variance with all that is traditional of the stern, austere, pleasure-denying habits of those champions of the Cross. No. 4 is another Recitative for Godfrey, which is interspersed with phrases for the chorus representing the Crusaders’ army, but including parts for ladies’ voices; it is in the same manner as No. 2; it contains some highly spirited passages, but the too frequent use of the high A for the solo voice frustrates its own effect, and will wantonly weary the singer; the subject is the announcement of the battle cry. No. 5 is an Evening Prayer for chorus, full of devotional spirit; it consists of two verses, in the second of which the accompaniment is varied from that of the first. No. 6 is defined as a Scena, wherein Godfrey is oppressed by misgivings of the faithful endurance of his host, but is encouraged by some graceful strains sung by Nuns, naturally assigned to ladies’ voices, and the piece culminates in an adaptation of the old Latin hymn “Conditor alme,” sometimes called “Creator alme siderum,” to English words, the tune of which is allotted to male voices only against the plain counterpoint of the instrumental accompaniment; this piece has more variety of colouring than anything which has preceded, and its good effect is in proportion. In Nos. 7 and 8 a new feature is introduced in the libretto by the appropriation of certain Scriptural passages, and in the score by the introduction of a Solo, soprano; they present Agnes the chief Nun, at her devotions, in a Recitative and Air, the latter of which has a special charm. A Pilgrim March constitutes No. 9, which is one more specimen of the form and manner of a hymn; it is to some extent contrasted against the others by being in a minor key, considerable brightness is given to the closing strain, by the change to the major, and the second verse is judiciously relieved by an accompaniment in triplets. Again some biblical words are employed for the final number, a Solo for Agnes with chorus, so reserving the sacred texts for the Nuns and the companions of their meditations; this is the most largely developed piece in the Cantata, the fugal point on the words “Our feet shall stand within thy gates,” giving it expansion and consequent importance that is shared by none of the others. The title of the work led us to look for the heroic as well as the religious quality in its composition; and we regret, for the sake of the general impression the Crusaders is likely to make, to find that quality most sparingly employed. Quietude is the predominant character of the composition, and apart from the doubtful fitness of this character to the representation of all we have read and all we have fancied of the Crusaders, for mere effect’s sake we think it might have been desirable to contrast this by an occasional outbreak of fire and energy.

Te Deum, &c., by Theodore Distin.

THE author of this work has been long, and variously, and always honourably before the world. Associated with his father and his three brothers, he helped them to win, and shared their reputation for performances on brass instruments, that were unique in excellence as in character. He was next known as a singer on the stage, in the concert room, in a church choir, and at festive meetings, and as such he holds and deserves esteem. He has also been successful as a lecturer, aiming more at the entertainment than the instruction of his auditors, and succeeding in his aim. Now we meet him as a composer and readily perceive his merit in this capacity. He seems to write, however, by the light of feeling rather than of knowledge, from familiarity with music rather than from the study of its principles. There is a curious discrepancy between the matter and the manner of the pieces before us, between the sound and the look, between the elements and the structure. All the ideas, with the melody and harmony in which they are vested, are, in the latent sense, modern. These are presented in the notation that prevailed before the Commonwealth, of four or three minims in a bar, and there is something apparently incongruous between the phrases of the newest idiom and the white surplined aspect of the signs or characters in which they are set down. The old cathedral books have further been the writer’s model than for his notation: like many of the contents of those volumes, the Service before us is divided by double bars into manifold sections; it has no obvious musical design; and, as if to complete its resemblance to those respected prototypes—when one voice starts a point before the others, the word “Lead” prepended to the phrase indicates the responsibility of that particular part in the score. While the vocalist’s experience is manifest in the formation of all the phrases, there is a remarkable disregard of rhythm and of verbal accent—faults from which one would have supposed the practice of a singer would especially have guarded him. Were we side by side with the composer, some grammatical points might be proposed for his consideration; but to particularize them here would be as little edifying to the general reader as satisfactory to him. The Service comprises the Te Deum, Jubilate, Sanctus, Kyrie, and Nicene Creed, among which as a whole we prefer the last. The work is dedicated to the accomplished organist of Lincoln’s Inn, Dr. Steggall, of whose choir the author is, we believe, a member. It is sure to please a large number of hearers, and therefore likely to circulate beyond the learned precincts in which probably it was first performed.

“Benedicite, omnia opera.” By Francis Edward Gladstone.

THIS is a setting of the canticle for voices in unison, with varied harmonies for the organ, by the late organist of Chichester Cathedral. The very fertile author is less successful in the brief work before us than in other compositions which it has been our lot to notice. Granted, his task is one of musical difficulty; but the reviewer’s business is with the results, and not with the tortuous paths through which they have been reached. The form is, with important modifications, that of a double chant; at least, there is a reciting note, which is followed by six rhythmical bars for the words of blessing and laudation, set syllabically, in each half of the so-to-speak chant. There are five varieties of harmony to be alternated at the discretion of the accompanist, and the whole is somewhat changed for the final “Glory.” The melody, in our esteem, is not happy, and is certainly unsuited to congregational singing. It is as impossible to define in words what constitutes the negative of beauty as what evidences its presence, so part of the above statement refers to taste rather than rule; it is fact, however, that the chromatic semitone C♯, is not easy of intonation to a multitude, and its effect in the position of its occurrence is not to our liking. The harmonies are such as any one with moderate fluency on the organ might extemporise, but few, we think, with moderate judgment would write. They contain many chromatic chords, some of most startling character in relation to the context, and the whole having small affinity in their whining, crawling, lugubrious nature, to the unbroken jubilation of the words. The fitness, or otherwise, of the music generally to the occasion may be according to various opinions, but there is one incident in the “Glory” of an F♯ in the bass followed by an F♮ in an inner part that nobody can approve.

Thirty-six original Hymn Tunes. By Charles Joseph Frost.

THIS is a work of real merit; the tunes are melodious and vocal, and the harmonies for the most part fresh and pure. Not quite immaculate are they however—witness the occasional 4ths in consecution between the top part and the bass, a progression that sounds as ill as any course of 5ths, if not worse. True it is that no ancient canon exists against consecutive 4ths; but this is easily accountable. When those old highly respectable laws were enacted against the succession of 5ths and 8ths, the fourth from the bass was only admitted as a discord needing preparation; under this dispensation, it was of course impossible that two following 4ths could occur, and it would have been wanton therefore to legislate against them. Now that the 4th is employed as the inversion of the 5th, and thus proved to be available as a concord, the possibility has arisen of writing two in succession, but the desirability has not come therewith; on the contrary, the bad effect must be obvious to anyone who listens dispassionately to the progression—anyone, that is, but the composer, who can never be dispassionate about his own productions, and who, in many cases, thinks a passage over and over again which he has written, until his sense may be numbed to an impropriety that he would perceive in the music of another. One more subject calls for remark in these tunes, which evidently is not easy of comprehension, and all the more requires to be carefully considered by those who write. This is the division of the bars, which should be so arranged that a rhythmical period close on the strong accent of the first note; whereas, in several of these tunes—all, for instance, set to verses with eight syllables in each line—the close is deferred to the third of the bar, and the strong accent thrown thus upon the antepenultimate syllable. It should be no justification of this error, that elder and best reputed musicians have strayed in the same direction; there must be a right and a wrong; it behoves all artists to aim at their discrimination, and every independent thinker will write rather according to precept than example, according to conviction of propriety rather than to precedent of its infraction. The G sharp, taken by leap over a chord of A, in the third bar from the end of No. 10, "Bread of the world," (Eucharistica) is, we presume, an engraver's error for A; every writer of merit deserves the benefit of such a doubt as this, when an inexplicable harmony appears in his music. That too great prominence may not be given to these theoretical strictures, let us repeat that there is great merit in the "Original Hymn Tunes," and that if folks must have novelty in this most extensive class of music, they are fortunate in the musician who can supply specimens by the three dozen, and give interest to each. The tunes were written for the choir of Trinity Church, Weston-super-Mare, of which church and choir the author is organist.

Jesu pastor bone (Offertorium, or for Benediction); Duet for Soprano and Tenor. By Rosario Aspa.

THIS sacred duet has a smooth and tranquil subject well adapted to the words, and is moreover so carefully and appropriately harmonised as to justify us in recommending it to the attention of vocalists desirous of increasing their store of modern religious music. We scarcely like the scale passages at the conclusion on the word "Jesu," especially as they are not in character with the preceding portion of the composition; but singers, perhaps, will hardly agree with us, the high A flat being a climax too effective to be objected to.

The morning stars sang together. Anthem for Christmas, composed by John Stainer, Mus. Doc., M.A.

It is at once difficult and unnecessary to enter upon a lengthy criticism of a work after it has already gained the suffrages of many. But the appearance of a new and cheap edition of Dr. Stainer's anthem would seem to afford an excuse for addressing a few words to those who are as yet unacquainted with it, and especially to such as complain of the scarcity of anthems for Christmas and other Church Festivals. After an examination of this work the principal impression left by it is that of a thorough embodiment of the joys of Christmas—bright, jubilant and heart-stirring. In the first movement the choirs appear to emulate each other in recounting in antiphonal strains how "all the sons of God shouted for joy," and unite in setting forth the great central fact of Christmas teaching, viz., the Incarnation of our Blessed Lord. Such, broadly, is the first movement. The second, a quintet, "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem," is to some extent in admirable contrast with it and may be fairly characterised as one of the most effective specimens of smooth vocal writing to be found in any modern anthem. An episode in this movement, "I will extend peace to her like a river," should not pass without particular mention, as it adds considerably to the charm of this graceful movement. The chorus which follows is founded upon the subject of the first movement, but with some difference of treatment—the reminiscence being by no means unwelcome. A commendable instance of careful thought is shown in a repetition in the concluding bars of the phrase embodying the doctrine of the Incarnation, as though with a view to keep the fact well in the minds of the hearers that to them was born, as on that day, "A Saviour which is Christ the Lord." It is possible that technically this anthem is not altogether equal to some of Dr. Stainer's subsequent compositions, for there are not wanting indications of its having been a comparatively early work. But whatever constructional shortcomings there may be, they are more than counterbalanced by the spontaneity and freshness which have been largely instrumental in earning for it its present popularity. In short, Dr. Stainer may fairly be credited with having in this anthem produced a work which though it is essentially modern, yet embodies the best traditions of the old school; and while it is not too difficult for average church choirs, is not unworthy of the best efforts of our cathedral singers.

Arise! for the day is passing. Song. Words by Adelaide Procter. Music by Roland Rogers.

THIS song is a proof how difficult it is to be simple. Mr. Rogers has written a remarkably quiet melody, but has twisted his arpeggio accompaniment about (especially in the symphony) so as to render it really awkward to play. Then the somewhat unsatisfactory change from D to F major and back again gives a patchiness to the composition which cannot be overlooked, supposing that crudities are to be pointed out rather than passed over in reviews. If the composer will accept of counsel really well meant, we should recommend him to study attentively the works of the standard authors before he again attempts to write himself.

I waited patiently for the Lord. Sacred Song. Words from Psalm xl., verses 1, 2, 3 and 11. Composed by Miles Bennett.

THERE is a vagueness of design in this song which will detract much from its effect. It commences with a flowing theme, carefully harmonised; but the Recitative which succeeds it, ending upon the chord of D major, and followed by two bars stopping upon the dominant seventh in B flat, is to us particularly displeasing. The best part of the composition is the phrase to the words, "Withhold not Thou Thy tender mercies," which is appropriate and eloquent; but the accompaniments are generally restless, and will somewhat distress the singer. We must protest, too, against the musical treatment of the line, "And He hath put a new song," the accents in which should certainly not be upon the words which we have placed in italics.

Fair and False. Song. Written by B. S. Montgomery. Music by J. L. Hatton.

IN spite of the many songs especially written to suit the requirements of vocalists who do not aspire to do more than sing a pure melody with feeling, there can be no question that a really good English ballad is a rare composition. The sickly, sentimental phrases usually set to morbid lines, expressing either suffering or death, have nothing in common with the flowing melodies constantly written by Bishop, Horn, and many others we could mention, who, had they lived at a time when songs, instead of being dragged into comedies, farces and melodramas, were kept for their true place in English Opera, might have founded a style which could not fail to develop into a school of which we might now be proud. Mr. Hatton, however, in our own day, is one who has fully earned a right to take his place amongst the best of our native song writers, for not only has he proved in his innumerable compositions that he has the rare gift of melody, but he is such an accomplished musician that an artistic skill is always apparent in the treatment of his vocal works which ensures for them as cordial a welcome from the educated as from the uneducated listener. To say nothing of his part-songs, which have now a world-wide celebrity, the many solos he has written are thoroughly English and never fail, if tolerably well sung, to receive, as such, a general and hearty recognition. The ballad which has given rise to these remarks may be warmly commended to all who are searching for such a composition as we have described. The poetry, re-published from Once a Week, is faithfully reflected in the music; and the accompaniments throughout lend an additional colour to, without disturbing, the melody. A modulation from A flat to D flat gives a depth of expression to the final phrase of the song which, although only one of its many beauties, we cannot refrain from mentioning.

Day Dreams.

An Indian Lullaby.

Composed for the Pianoforte by George B. Allen.

THE construction of the first of these pieces proves that Mr. Allen's "Dreams" run in the conventional groove. A brief Introduction leads to a somewhat commonplace theme, the arpeggio ornaments to which are first ascending, then descending, and finally running an octave above those at the commencement, the subject on its third appearance being played in octaves, and the passage marked "Grandioso." Surely it is time that some newer pattern than this for "Drawing-room music" should be sought for. The "Indian Lullaby" has a characteristic melody, and there is some novelty in the treatment of the piece. We like very much the effect of the three-bar rhythm in the principal phrase, and can commend the care and attention which has evidently been bestowed in preserving the feeling of the subject when surrounded by embellishments. This little sketch is the best we have seen signed by a composer whose name is somewhat more familiar to us through his vocal than his instrumental works.

Long ago. Musical Sketch, for the Pianoforte, by Virginia Gabriel.

AN unassuming little sketch, which may be recommended to young players who desire to cultivate the art of singing with the fingers. The theme is attractive, but extremely simple, and the piece contains sufficient modulation to prevent monotony. Nothing is attempted in the way of ornaments, a merit which lovers of pure music will at least be thankful for.

DUFF AND STEWART.

Le Rêve d'Arcadie (Scene à la Watteau); Morceau de Salon, pour Piano, par Frederic Archer.

CONSIDERING that even the dedication of this piece ("A son Ami, T. Riseley, Esq.") is in French, it appears a pity that this language should not have been preserved throughout the title-page. The words, "London: Duff and Stewart, 147, Oxford Street," and "Ent. Sta. Hall," quite vulgarise it, and we fear may prevent the circulation of the composition in the "salons" for which it is intended: this should be looked to, should it reach a second edition. Musically speaking, we have much praise for this little sketch. The leading subject, in D major, is extremely melodious and graceful; and the second theme, in the subdominant, with an effective pedal bass, is perhaps even more attractive. The passages, although well written, are not difficult, and the pastoral character of the piece, apart from its tunelessness, will be certain to ensure for it a cordial welcome.

A little Cloud. Song, for Contralto or Bass. Words by F. E. Weatherley, B.A. Music by Ciro Pinsuti.

THE success of Signor Pinsuti's song, "The Raft," has no doubt incited him to turn his attention more to the setting of dramatic subjects; and the composition before us, although not affording him much scope for the exercise of his ability in that direction, evidences the possession of a power which should not be frittered away upon the commonplace songs of the day. Mr. Weatherley has here provided the composer with some verses admirably suited for music, and in their illustration every advantage has been taken of the varied character of the poetry. The change from the placid subject in C major to the tonic minor, and the return to the major, with the agitated demisemiquaver accompaniment, is in excellent sympathy with the words, the alteration of rhythm from triple to duple, also materially aiding the effect. To contraltos or basses in search of good music we conscientiously recommend this song as one of the best of its kind.

The dreamy land of flowers. Song. Words by Charles Hall. Music by King Hall.

WITH every allowance for the "dreamy" character of the poetry of this song, we presume that the words mean something; and yet we have in vain attempted to understand the line, "Breath spells by radiant night." Few amateur vocalists, however, as a rule, let their audience know what language they are singing in; so that listeners to Mr. Hall's song will probably not be puzzled as we are, but will have their attention directed to the music, which is really very good. The composer has written a vocal and melodious theme, and accompanied it like an artist, the modulations being especially well written and effective.

Sweetheart. Song. Written by J. Levey. Composed by W. F. Glover.

WE have no fault to find either with the melody or accompaniments of this song: it is easy to sing and easy to play; but as effusions of this character keep better music from our drawing-rooms, we can scarcely recommend it. Moreover, we cannot but wonder by whom these songs are interpreted: if by male singers, such maudlin love-verses as those before us would scarcely, we think, advance the intellectual appreciation of a youth out of his "teens," and if by ladies, they cannot but become positive nonsense.

AUGENER AND CO.

"In the beginning was the word." Sacred Cantata by Leo Kerbusch, Mus. Doc.

A WORK, this, of some pretension, and of at least equal fulfilment. It is a setting of the first fourteen verses of St. John's Gospel, for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, the orchestral parts being arranged for the pianoforte, and the arrangement having indications of the chief features of the instrumentation; and it will occupy about half an hour in performance. It is dedicated to Sir R. P. Stewart, in his official capacity of Musical Professor in Dublin University, and it bears tokens of having been written as an exercise for the Doctor's degree—but this last is an assumption. It is printed with the Lutheran as well as the English version of the text; and there seems reason to guess that the music was originally written to the former. The first piece is a Chorus, in which are some simple and effective imitations. A bass solo with Chorus, "In Him was light," is a piece of steady writing, modelled more or less on some of the Mass music by South German writers of from fifty to a hundred years ago. No. 3 comprises a Recitative for tenor, "There was a man sent from God," leading into an Air for the same voice, "He was not that light," which, being in the key of G minor, is continued as a Chorus when the key changes to major at the words "That was the true light," the plaintive expression of the beginning is agreeably relieved by the comparative brightness of the close, and the whole piece has considerable interest. The most attractive number is that which next follows, "He was in the world," a Duet for soprano and contralto, which is highly melodious and has some successful vocal combinations; it suffers somewhat from being in the same measure—and that a conspicuous one, $\frac{12}{8}$ —as the preceding movement, and from being also in very nearly the same tempo; admiring it as we must, we cannot pass without a protest its exceptional plan, which consists of a contralto solo in the key of B flat, then a soprano solo in the little analogous key of F minor, and lastly an ensemble in F major, closing thus a 5th higher than it opens. We admit the desirability of recurring to the opening strain, admit the impossibility of the higher voice singing it in the same key in which it has been given by the lower, and further admit the difficulty in design thus introduced; the ingenuity of the artist would have been shown in this difficulty's solution, his immaturity is proved by his giving way to it. There is also to notice of this piece that its chief melody should have begun upon the half instead of the full bar, when, besides having the true musical accentuation, it would, we think, have given a better emphasis to the words. Another Recitative for tenor, "But as many as received Him," introduces a Chorus, "Which were born not of blood;" this is a piece for eight voices, an indispensable incident in a Doctor's exercise, but the several parts are more employed in alternation than in combination, a device by which the music is greatly animated, but the composer's power of part-writing little tested. No. 6, the final piece, is a Chorus, "And we beheld" preceded by a soprano Recitative "And the word was made flesh;" here we have the inevitable fugue which proves the contrapuntal qualifications of a candidate for University honours, and it is a good specimen of scholarship; as a whole, the Cantata is certainly to be commended. It would be presumptuous to judge of the orchestration from the pianoforte copy, but the signs this presents show the composer to have some good ideas of effect. There are times and places in which this work would be welcome, and we recommend it to the attention of persons who control such occasions.

SCHOTT AND CO.

Compositions and Arrangements for the Organ. By Frederic Lux.

ORGAN students who have visited Germany speak largely of the writers for their instrument who are at present active in that country, and Dr. Spark has done much to make us stay-at-homes acquainted with the merits of some of these, by the inclusion of some of their compositions in his Organist's Quarterly Journal. Some more than ordinary interest is excited, then, by the receipt of a number of pieces from the land most famous in old times and in new for the development of the organ, bearing the name of an author that is wholly unfamiliar—excited but not fulfilled. Our first consideration is, as to what demand these pieces by Herr Lux can supply in any country where the organ has not a very different regard and different use from those which it holds in England. To speak most broadly, they are in form and in merit to be compared with the more difficult writings for the pianoforte of such musicians as Hüntner and Burgmüller. Now, players whose aspiration and content soars to and rests upon music of this calibre would, we believe, rather represent it on the pianoforte than the organ, finding sufficient exercise for their wits in the exercise of their fingers, and having small interest in the drawing of stops, and finding an incumbency in the free pedal part, which to them increases more the difficulty than the effect. The music is totally out of the range of church use; very few chamber organs are sufficiently extensive to yield all the varieties of tone it requires; and for concert performance—a somewhat contradictory definition of what is intended for a solo instrument which is not to be concerted with any others—it has scarcely enough charm to win an audience, nor enough display to satisfy an executant. Our next consideration must be as to the matter and form of these several specimens of our new author. The Morceaux de Concert sur la Prière de Robin des Bois is an introduction and variation on that melody in Agathe's grand scene in "Der Freischütz"—how strangely the title of the opera is distorted in its Frenchified form!—of which the phrasing has been ruined in England by the false punctuation of our popular version of the words—

"Softly, sighs the, Voice of evening."

The variation, in which the pedals are most conspicuous, is singularly difficult, because of the figure that runs through it having two leaps in the same direction; and it is not showy in proportion, because nobody unacquainted with the technicalities of the organ can be aware of how much is overcome in the execution of this figure, and nobody whose ear was not so accurate as to distinguish between sharps and naturals, raised keys and level, can hear when this difficulty is at the greatest. The Marche

Célèbre de la 1re Suite de Fr. Lachner is a characteristic but very slight movement; it is effectively adapted for the organ, but in the absence of Herr Lachner's score, it is impossible to say with what fidelity to the original. The Fantaisie de Concert sur "O Sanctissima" Chant Religieux is a bravura development of the somewhat trite and decidedly commonplace, if not vulgar tune, known here as the "Sicilian Mariners' Hymn," the religiousness of which exemplifies for once, "What's in a name," its sacred pretensions being all in the name and none in the notes. The Concert Variationen für die Orgel über ein Thema (The Harmonious Blacksmith) von Händel claims particular notice, as much on account of their dedication to our distinguished countryman Mr. W. G. Cusins, as of their being founded on an air which is universally known among us. Three things in the title page call for comment: first, the preference of the German mode of spelling Handel's name to his own, as if to deny to a man the right of spelling his name as he likes, even though this be different from the liking of his forefathers, while there are abundant autographs extant to prove that, though from time to time he changed it, the greatest owner of the name finally, and for many years, spelled it "Handel," and their evidence is confirmed by the printed works and newspaper advertisements issued under his own authority; second, the ascription to Handel of the authorship of the old French melody, dating at least from the reign of Henry II. of that country and Henry VIII. of ours, which he, Handel, employed in his Suite in E for the harpsichord; third, the preservation of the title which Lintott, of Bath, once blacksmith and afterwards music seller, gave to this French air, in memory of his own present and past callings, somewhere about seventy or eighty years ago. One thing invites comment in the music before us: this is the effrontery of Herr Lux in placing himself in direct comparison with the old master, whence he comes not forth with advantage. There is a show of labour and a consequent stiffness in the present variations that contrast ill with the spontaneous grace of those that are in the hands of school girls and concert players, and welcome from both to all English hearers. There is something amusing in the "Introduction Choralmässig," wherein the dear old French love song is formalised into a hymn tune, with pauses at the end of the phrases, and an affected solemnity in the harmony, making it as unlike the charming theme which daily recurs to our recollection as the same can ever be unlike itself. Grammatically there is nothing to blame in the piece; imaginatively, there is nothing to admire. The Romance de l'Opéra Casilda du Duc Ernest de Saxe Cobourg is the last of the series before us. Its interest is in its being the composition of our late Prince Consort's brother; its effect is in its being judiciously arranged for the instrument, and, to say the truth, the setting is of more worth than the jewel. In all these pieces Herr Lux evinces a good knowledge of the instrument for which he writes; but he shows nothing to justify the assertion which has many a time been thrust in our teeth, that we English debar ourselves from mines of priceless treasure in our ignorance of the writings of living Germans for the organ. Here is no attempt at melodic invention, here is little fancy in the figures of the variations, and counterpoint is utterly out of the question. There is music by Herr Merkel and by Herr Ritter, which amply repays any amount of attention that may be given to it; but the present productions are of another texture.

WEEKES AND CO.

Six favourite and popular Hymns, set to music by Arthur Wellesley Batson.

It is curious as true that folks dispute whether a song or hymn be a musical or a literary production, and this in the very teeth of "Songs without Words," of the psalmist's ejaculation "I will sing a new song" of the first line of the Eneid wherein Virgil figuratively declares "I sing," and of the obvious derivation of both words which refers of course to tuneful vocalisation. The author of the present pamphlet—it may not be defined by a more extensive description—takes the literary side of the question, but, so strong is habit, we are surprised to find under the title of "Jerusalem the golden" anything other than the "favourite and popular hymn" which has had an acceptance equal to that of any opera song, any dance, or any Christy Minstrel melody (tunefully speaking) that has permeated the streets of London. Now, in this case particularly, all the favour and popularity rests with the tune. It has been sung in places of worship of every denomination wherein English words are admissible—cathedrals, parish churches, and chapels of all kinds of nonconformists; it has been played on barrel organs throughout the length and breadth of the metropolis; it has been arranged as pianoforte Fantasias by several of the most fashionable writers for the instrument; and we feel that the mystical imagery of the poem to which it is set could not have been received to the extent it is by simple as much as gentle, but that it has been borne into favour by the popularity of the music. Others think otherwise; but our conviction is that the multiplication of tunes to one poem is injurious to hymnody, and tends to render its practice by congregations or other large bodies difficult, if not impossible. The excuse for a second setting of a well known poem is of course when one tune so entirely transcends the other in merit as to expel it from general use and obliterate it from general memory; such has been the case with Croft's fine tune to the 104th Psalm, which has entirely superseded the elder, also meritorious, tune to the same words. It is not to be expected that any of the settings in the collection before us will thus arrive at a supremacy above pre-existing popular favourites, and one may ask therefore what is their "right to be"? This right is clearly not proven by superior fitness to the words, in the new music to Lyte's poem "Abide with me," in which the weak syllable that begins each line, except the last, is set to the strongly accented first note of a bar, and in the last line of each stanza the fault is reversed, the accented syllable being set to a weak note. The said last line, which is the same in every stanza but one, has this curious reading, the musical accents being indicated by italics:—

there being no breathing place for the natural comma after "helpless;" and in the one excepted stanza, the sense is thus equally rendered ambiguous:—

O Thou who changest not, abide with me.

It would have been well had the leap of the bass been avoided, from the chord of $\frac{4}{4}$, between bars one and two, in No. 1; and again, in No. 4, if the B bass that closes line 4 had not been anticipated in the previous bar, and the rhythm had not been consequently confused. With these two exceptions, and with that of line 4 of No. 6, the music of the whole is charming, its melody graceful and its harmony a brightly coloured specimen of the modern style. The settings are scarcely appropriate for multitudinous singing, but with carefully trained choirs they will produce a most pleasing effect.

Little May's Musical Drawing Slate.

We can well imagine the horror of "Little May," who has been promised a "Drawing Slate" (for the prefix "Musical" may very likely be concealed until the last moment), and finds, on receiving it, that instead of the pretty trees, houses and sheep on which she resolved to concentrate her energy, she is expected to form all sorts of musical signs—to write the names of the notes, in and out of the staff, to put down the turn, shake, pause and the many other "things to be remembered" which accompany this most solemn toy. It is true that in the first page we have a floral device, with a large number of musical instruments scattered about—including a pianoforte, upon which the name of the firm, "Weekes and Co.," is prominently printed—but this little picture is only the gilding of the pill; and we much doubt whether the most good-humoured child in the world can be deluded into the belief that tracing the musical characters upon a transparent slate is "drawing." As a rule, we do not think that young people should ever be trained to receive instruction as amusement. When study is over, recreation may follow, but the two cannot be combined. Geography taught by "conversation cards," and the names and value of the notes by a "round game," may look very well in an advertisement; but attempt to use either one or the other for its intended purpose, and it will inevitably result in a failure. "Little May's Musical Drawing Slate" is good of its kind. The lessons are well set, the exercises on the names of the notes, &c., are carefully arranged, and the printing is clear. We do not doubt that the system is faithfully carried out; we only doubt the soundness of the system itself.

R. LIMPUS.

"The Lord is my portion." Anthem by F. E. Gladstone.

THE most interesting part of this piece is the first strain, which is given first by solo voices and repeated by the chorus. What follows, by far the larger part of the anthem, is correctly written, but has little attraction. A practice prevails throughout, in which the writer is by no means singular, but which still is open to question of its propriety. This is, the setting of a longer note to the second and unaccented syllable than to the first, in such words as "portion," "blossom," "olive," and the like, enforcing by syncopation the unnatural accent thus induced. Too many inferior singers pursue this practice with serious detriment to our greatly abused English language and to the vocal effect; but if it be incorrect, its use by singers justifies not its adoption by composers, who should rather give than take the rule in such matters. The only thing that can be defensively urged is that, in speech, we do not dwell on the first syllable of such words as are above quoted from the anthem, wherein the strongly accented first syllable has a short vowel. Admitting the truth of this, it must still be protested that we do not dwell either upon the second syllable when we speak, and that to do so when we sing distorts the word, gives often a stronger prominence to a short vowel in the one syllable than that which is avoided in the other, and gives a colour of truth to the else groundless assertion that ours is an unmusical language. It is less against good sound and pure sense, in such cases, to elongate the first than the second syllable in words of this formation, and it is practicable also in many cases to have a rest after the second syllable; either of these, or anything else, would be better than what we cannot but esteem as a vulgarism which it is the duty of the musical declaimer to correct. It is not here intended to place on the shoulders of the author of this Anthem all the burden of other folks' short-comings, executive and productive; the instances adduced from his work suggest the consideration now given to the subject; but many worse present themselves to the ears and eyes of all who listen to singing or read vocal music. The Anthem gained the five guinea prize of the College of Organists in 1870, and so comes before the world with strong credentials.

Andante, in A major, for the Organ, by F. E. Gladstone.

THIS is another of the prize pieces of the College of Organists, and the late organist of Chichester Cathedral is again the winner. Unluckily—for such things are always matters of luck and not of malice—it begins like a Russian melody which has been familiarised in this country by its employment in one of the earliest pieces of Thalberg for the pianoforte, and also by its inclusion in a violin fantasia of the late Ferdinand David that Herr Joachim used to play when he visited us as a boy and excited the wondering delight of all who heard him. There is abundant other matter in the present Andante, all of interest, and well disposed for the organ, which proves the graceful and cultivated mind of the author. Practice in writing, and the careful observation of the forms in which the masters of the art cast their thoughts, will improve the composer's command of the principles of plan, wherein this piece shows him to be defective.

WILLIAM MORLEY.

La Harpe Enchantée. Morceau de Salon, composed for the Pianoforte by F. V. Kornatzki.

HARP music for the Pianoforte, like Pianoforte music for the Harp, can scarcely perhaps be pronounced legitimate, but the public has to a certain extent accepted it; and where there is a demand, there is pretty certain to be a supply. This "Morceau" is so exceedingly like the innumerable pieces of the same character that it is difficult indeed to say anything new upon its claims to the attention of arpeggio players. The melody (as usual) is in 6-8 rhythm, and is sufficiently graceful for purposes of embellishment. Of course it is monotonous; but this is one of the charms of these "character pieces;" and there is just enough modulation to prevent a sense of weariness. In any "Salon" where compositions of this class are admitted, "La Harpe Enchantée" will, we think, be warmly welcomed; for although it will not elevate, it certainly will not deteriorate, the taste of those who devote themselves to this style of music.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND CO.

Seven Songs, set to music by Franz Hüffer.

WE are decidedly of opinion that when a composer uses his pen out of the lines of the staff, it should be to write about the works of others, and not about his own. Herr Hüffer thinks differently, and therefore prefaces his songs with a page of letter-press, which, although in the English language, is headed "Avis au Chanteur." In this he tells us that it has always seemed to him "strange and deplorable" that the best of our lyrical poetry has "scarcely ever found congenial interpreters in the sphere of music." Modestly he says "What matters it if my own attempt at an artistic rendering of English lyrics remains abortive as long as there is a chance that a composer of the future may be roused by my stammering to do for Mr. Tennyson and Mr. D. G. Rossetti what Schubert, Schumann, Liszt or Robert Franz have done for Heine and Lenau?" Very true; but surely our lyrical poetry is open to all composers, and we can scarcely be made to see why the fact of Herr Hüffer failing in a self-imposed task should "rouse" a better man to succeed in it. The music of these seven songs is written on a model which we do not desire to see imitated; and if the composer thinks that his word painting at all resembles the thoughtful and imaginative settings of Schumann or Schubert, he is greatly mistaken.

Gavotte, for the Pianoforte. Composed by J. P. Gott-hard. Edited and revised by Dr. Hans von Bülow.

ALL who were fortunate enough to hear Dr. Bülow play this charming Gavotte will be delighted to find that it is now published under his editorship. Such genuine and healthy music cannot fail to make its way, for it will be cordially welcomed by those who love this class of composition for itself, and may create a taste for such works amongst "fashionable" performers whose digital powers have hitherto been developed to the exclusion of their mental capacity.

PATERSON AND SONS.

"Lord, we worship Thee." Hymn for 4 voices, adapted from Chopin.

WE had flattered ourselves—vain thought—that the objectionable practice of adaptations for Church use had died out, that such associations from secular sources as must encircle Anne Catley's Hornpipe, the Dance from "Le Divin du Village," the Prayer from "Der Freischütz," and that from "Masaniello," were no more to be brought into the sanctuary. Here, however, is proof that what was the custom of the Primate of York in the days of the Conqueror has still its followers; but the present appropriation has an advantage over some others, that, in its original pianoforte shape, the fragment from Chopin is little known, and hence it will recal few recollections of chamber use when it is employed in worship. The voice parts are picked out from the fuller original form of the theme, which latter is assigned to the "Organ or Pianoforte." Not very vocal are the said voice parts, and the arrangement betrays some harshnesses (the progression of bass in seconds with top part for instance, $\begin{smallmatrix} A & G \\ G & F \end{smallmatrix}$, bar 12) which are veiled, though of course not cured, by the author's filling up for the pianoforte. The accompaniment as it stands will not produce a good effect on the organ. The "words," as they are modestly called by the anonymous author, prove ability in the defeat of the difficulty of a very peculiar metre.

MUSICAL STANDARD OFFICE.

"The Gentiles shall come." Epiphany Anthem, by Charles Joseph Frost.

A SMOOTH and very pleasing composition is this, which is sufficiently facile to be within the capabilities of almost all choirs. The compass is remarkable of the two solo parts in the episode that effectively relieves the choral portions which begin and end the Anthem; that for the tenor, particularly, ranging down to B below the staff, is beyond the reach of most singers who profess to have the voice to which it is assigned. There is some confusion from the twofold use of the word "Thou" in the texts brought together from "Isaiah" and one of the "Psalms," it being addressed to a mortal in the one, and to the Deity in the other; but the applicability of both passages to the occasion the Anthem is intended to illustrate, is a reason for their both being employed, though scarcely a remedy for the unclearness springing from their juxtaposition. The music of this composer always gives cause for welcome, and the present piece is by no means the least meritorious of his productions.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MOVEABLE DO.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—No better confirmation could be afforded of the truth of your opinion that "there can be no question that the 'fixed Do' has had its day" (see Musical Times, September, page 215) than the fact that the challenge thrown down in your columns by "Orpheus" has met with no response. There are, however, two things, which, if they do not wholly prevent the acceptance of the rival method, at least hamper its facility very considerably, to which, with your permission, I should like to direct the attention of your readers. The first principle in the creed of the "moveable Doist" is the incontrovertible one that it is equally easy to sing in all keys, but it is not so generally understood that it is also equally easy to read music in all keys, and, consequently, in almost every book for teaching sight-singing, we find at the outset a large number of exercises in the key of C. Thus the pupil gets to associate the Solfa syllables so exclusively with certain places on the stave, that a real difficulty awaits him as soon as he begins to sing in any other key. I am well aware that this is a purely mechanical difficulty, and by no means to be compared with the intrinsic absurdity which pervades the fixed Do system; still I am quite sure that a great deal of labour is spared to both teacher and pupil when music in all keys indiscriminately is used from the first. By this means the difficulty of moving the Do is really annihilated by being grappled with at once, and pupils (even very young ones) can thus be easily taught to sing at sight any music which does not abound in remote modulations, even before they are acquainted with the rationale of the key-signatures, if the pitch of the keynote and its position upon the stave be merely pointed out to them; for the simple expedient of altering the vowels in the syllables to express the "accidentals" (first suggested, I believe, by Forde) is very readily acquired, only needing a minute's explanation at the commencement of each new piece, and is quite sufficiently illustrative to render practicable any of the five most usual modulations and the chromatic alterations within the scale. By singing at sight it must of course be understood that I do not mean artistic performances at first sight, but the power of discovering for one's self the tune of the music to be sung independently of instrumental or other external aid. As no one can more heartily than myself endorse that part of Mr. Hullah's "Report," which condemns as "an ignorant misapprehension or a wilful misrepresentation," the notion that music can be acquired in sport, I ought perhaps to say that I hold my plan of making my pupils sing at sight first and learn the intricacies of notation afterwards, to be quite as sound as the time-honoured one of first learning to read, and afterwards studying the powers and classification of letters and words, or that still older one of learning to speak before being taught to read. In these days of book-knowledge and paper-examinations there is a danger of attributing too much importance to what questions a pupil can answer, and too little to what things he can do.

Fearful of trespassing unduly upon your valuable space, I must reserve my remarks upon moving the Do within the piece and upon the misuse of accidentals till another month.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
Long Melford, Nov. 17th, 1873. A. ORLANDO STEED.

REV. E. YOUNG'S SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—If there be, in your court of criticism, anything analogous—though in an inverted order—to the “Prisoner! what have you to say why judgment should not be pronounced?” I would crave permission for a couple of words.

For what you have been pleased to say of the music of my Morning and Evening Services, I abstain from all expression of feeling, lest I seem to take a judicial act for a personal favour. The qualifying statement that I have “small regard for the melody save of the top part,” I can accept with equal complacency, though, as to the particular illustration you adduce (at the words “have seen the salvation, &c.”), I must express my own astonishment that I should have been bewitched—I can only suppose when half asleep—into the exchange of the G A of my first printed edition, for the	B A you justly signalize. May I say, notwithstanding, without contumacy, that whilst admitting that all choral parts should be decently singable, I have no sympathy, save for scholastic purposes, with the current demand for what I scruple not to call the carpentry of counterpoint. So far from it, in an unpublished “Creed of Church Music,” I have made bold to insert a distinct article to the effect that “Every emphatic note in a melodical phrase suggests, and demands, if harmonized, its own harmonic combinations—combinations modified by the expressional character of the phrase in which it occurs, and essentially subordinate and subservient to it: that all combinations, however otherwise effective, yet not so suggested and subservient, are, in principle, unnatural, illegitimate, and disloyal; and that consequently, to speak of harmonization as the interweaving of four or more distinct melodies, is to impeach the prerogative of the Queen note, and talk treason to the laws of sound.” I may add that I should exceedingly pity singer or hearer who could lose his interest in the Tune regnant for any distinct observance of the stratified melodies accompanying it. I except, of course, the basses of grand old Handel, of which it may be said that they are not artificially super-added, but twin born with the treble—the two essential parts realizing that account of married couples not perhaps too common—

“They were so truly one, that none could say,
Which of the two did rule, or whether did obey.”

Else for all the “double, double, toil and trouble” of making four simultaneous voices have each its own say, I must confess myself something very like a downright heretic.

But let me at least stand clear from something else I never intended. In a sort of Epilogue to my Morning Service, I argued the non-necessity of a continuous uniformity of key in things sufficiently separated by other things. Let those who hold to the contrary purge themselves of all complexity in Psalms and Hymns. For myself, meaning only a license for transposing, for congregational convenience, two of three pieces from their original to a lower key, I must not be held to bail for any “abrogation of my own principle,” if, in another case, where no such license is called for, I quite follow the custom, and write two Canticles in the same key.

From the one remaining misapprehension, I must yet more earnestly ask acquittal. I have used emphatic words as to what I deem—for purely devotional purposes—sound and unsound in our Liturgical music. It might of course be taken for granted that to the best of my poor ability, I had obeyed my “own rede.” But it did not follow that the true character of Church music was “presented, and only presented in my own composition. I go further. If—though I have loved and lived music for more than half a century—I was an ordained minister of Christ before I ever dreamt of becoming a musical composer, it is not, I trust, a very audacious thing to speak out my conviction, in season and out of season, on a subject, not only inexpressibly dear to my own heart, but indissolubly bound up with matters to which, as a clergyman, I am pledged and plighted by holy vows. Let my words be “weighed in the balance,” and cast away if “found wanting;” but let it not be for a moment thought that, because asserting essential principles, I am either vaunting myself, or intentionally abusing others.

At all events, I have given hostages to criticism; and if you, Sir, ever find it in your editorial convenience to print what I have dared to write, he who cordially respects your office and your conduct of it, will do his best to submit, in all humility, to the consequences.

I am, Sir, &c.,

EDWARD YOUNG.

[A later letter from the Rev. E. Young aims further to vindicate the writer from the supposition of having both enunciated and broken a principle as to uniformity or variety of key in the setting of the several numbers of a Church Service. His cause is well enough pleaded in the above; so, to print his second letter would be a superfluity. It may be repeated, however, that the reviewer of his Morning Service concurred with the view set forth in the preface to that work, and is ready, at convenient opportunity, to support, under certain limits, the tonal diversity in question; but while supporting, by no means to insist upon its use.—THE WRITER OF THE REVIEW.]

CHURCH CONGRESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In 1860 I delivered a lecture at the Athenæum, Torquay, entering into a dissertation on Dr. Crotch and the well-known division of music into the styles—sublime, beautiful and ornamental. Your correspondent “Z” evidently had not the advantage of having been present on that occasion. The sight of a sciolist in logic rushing into the domain of music is somewhat amusing; he first pedantically traces out the supposed origin of this division of styles, mentioning that Reynolds, Crotch and Ouseley had adopted it; which I maintain they would not have done, if it were so absurd as he erroneously supposes. Everybody, he says, is aware that the limbs of a logical division must be capable of mutually excluding each other. Must they? He has read a little, but not much. “Exceptions to this rule,” observes one of our best living logicians “are often unavoidable.” Let us apply an example, as he would give it, of communicant species. In enumerating the species of correspondents to newspapers, we for instance might mention, musicians, logicians, and hypercritics; yet some musicians may be logicians, and some logicians hypercritics. I presume “Z,” who deservedly places himself at the bottom of the alphabet, would divide music into these three styles—the sublime, the ridiculous, and the logical; which would effectually exclude each other, and would completely satisfy him. As he claims credit of clear sightedness, would it not be well for him henceforth to look before he leaps.

As you, Sir, have allowed an anonymous writer to ridicule my assertions at Bath, I trust your sense of justice will cause you to insert the enclosed “incomprehensible” speech in your next impression. Believing that an attempt is being made by your musical adviser to destroy the foundations of our grand old Church school of music, and knowing that many of our most able and experienced musicians have the same belief, I have every intention of disproving to the best of my ability his erroneous arguments.

I am, &c.,

The Close, Winchester,

GEORGE B. ARNOLD.

November 19th.

[In order to permit a letter and its reply to appear in the same number of our journal, we have resolved in future to allow any correspondent commented upon the privilege of reading and answering a communication which concerns him, during the month; and thus the letter from "Z" is inserted immediately after that from Dr. Arnold. On our part we may say that, in a correspondence addressed to the Editor, we are at a loss to comprehend what can be meant by the term "your musical adviser." Surely it may be assumed that an editor has sufficient knowledge of the art to which his journal is devoted without having recourse to an "adviser." That we are assisted by others fully capable of forming and maintaining an opinion is freely admitted; and if this opinion should not happen to coincide with that of Dr. Arnold, our columns are at all times open to the expression of his own views upon the subject. It may be well too, when he favours us with a communication refuting our "erroneous arguments," to name a few of the "able and experienced musicians" who are ranged upon his side; for, although we have an extensive knowledge of the profession, we were unaware, until the receipt of Dr. Arnold's letter, that we had so many powerful opponents.—Ed. Musical Times.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—If Dr. Arnold will look again into the author from whom he quotes the remark "Exceptions to this rule are often unavoidable," he will find that it refers to the old rule, "The members of a division must not be mutually contained in each other." But I neither said nor implied that the members of a division must exclude each other, but I did say that they "must be capable of mutual exclusion." By italicising the word must instead of the word capable, Dr. Arnold shows that he misses the point of the sentence. In other words, I said, "capable of mutual exclusion," whereas Dr. Arnold would like to make me say "mutually exclusive." Can he not see the difference? If I were to say that he was capable of standing on one leg, should I convey the impression that he never stood upon two?

In order to prove that members of a division need not be "capable of mutual exclusion," Dr. Arnold is so kind as to provide an example in which this capability is self evident. He divides newspaper correspondents into "musicians, logicians, and hypercritics." Now I can conceive of a musician who is not a logician or hypercritic; and of a logician who is neither musician nor hypercritic; and also of a hypercritic, who is no musician or logician. These three classes therefore are capable of mutual exclusion, although often communicant, and the example goes to prove the truth of what I said.

In short, two or more qualities which cannot be conceived of as existing separately, can never differentiate the members of a division; and if Dr. Arnold will give the page of the book and its author's name in which the contrary is stated, I shall be obliged.

My objection to his division of music into Sublime, Beautiful, and Ornamental, was, that neither member could be conceived of separately. I never heard any ornamental music (such as dance music), without meeting some scale passage, or modulation, or rhythm, each of which is in itself beautiful. Nor have I ever heard a sublime passage without feeling how much its sublimity depended on the beauty of the key-relationship of its progressions.

In conclusion, the words "sublime, beautiful, and ornamental," are invaluable to musicians; because by them they are able to describe tolerably well the character of much music which they hear; but this is no reason why a doctor in music should mount a platform and solemnly propound them as a logical division, as if he were enunciating such a truism as "there are two sexes, male and female." Dr. Arnold's division was bad, absurd, mischievous—and none the less so because it was in 1860 told to the good folk of Torquay by him, and none the less so because Crotch and Ouseley have "lectured it."

INTERPOLATIONS IN THE COMMUNION SERVICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In all old Liturgies the Sanctus ended as follows, "Hosanna in the highest. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest." (St. Matt. xxi. 9).

In 1552, these words were omitted, and "Glory be to Thee, O Lord most High" put in their place. Blunt says, in his work on the Prayer Book, that the reason of this change may have been because it was a custom to turn to the altar at the Benedictus and make the sign of the cross, or because the words were inconsistent with the preface from not being, strictly speaking, a part of the angels' song.

The "Agnus Dei," sung by the choir whilst the clergy were communicating, as well as the sentences of Scripture forming what is called the Post-Communion, are of very ancient origin.

And so is the custom of singing "Glory be to Thee, O God" before the Gospel, and "Thanks be to Thee, O Lord," (or similar words) after it. They are found in the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom. These responses were allowed in the first Prayer Book of King Edward, and last session Convocation agreed to recommend their re-insertion.

The legality of now using all these traditional sentences is, of course, doubtful, but considering that all of them are taken either from the Bible or Prayer Book, there is no moral objection to them, and I presume that from a legal point of view they are as lawful as metrical hymns.

I am, Sir, yours obediently

W. J. L.

[If the above refer to some recent reviews in these columns, wherein the passages mentioned by our correspondent are noticed as interpolations in the Communion Service of the Church of England, such reference is no refutation. Whatever may have held place in the Prayer Book of Edward VI., or in earlier Liturgies, whatever Convocation may have agreed to recommend, the Book of Common Prayer as it stands is the critic's only text book, and, in describing a musical setting of the office in question, he may but look to that as the authority for what words are available to the musician. We willingly, however, print the letter of "W. J. L." for the sake of its antiquarian information, which will be interesting to many of our readers.—Ed. Musical Times.]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

ROBERT GRIFFITHS.—Our correspondent will see that a paragraph in the present number referring to Mr. Curwen's pamphlet renders the insertion of his letter unnecessary.

PARANETE, who has written twice to us without furnishing his name and address, is informed that communications thus unauthenticated cannot receive attention.

MUSA.—Our correspondent's question should be addressed to a professor of singing.

S. R.—Siege of Rochelle.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BARBADOS.—The first of a series of ten fortnightly promenade concerts, given by the local professor of music, Mr. M. E. Dooley, assisted by the Band of the 98th Regt., and several ladies and gentlemen of the Island, took place on the 18th September, before a large audience. The programme was carefully selected, including overtures, pianoforte and clarionet solos, songs, duets, part-songs and choruses, all of which were well rendered.

BASINGSTOKE.—Two concerts were given in the Town Hall on the 28th Oct. by the choirs of Basingstoke and Hartley Westpall, in aid of the organ fund of the latter place. The choir of forty voices, under the direction of Mr. H. Blackth, was very efficient. The programme, besides part-songs, included selections from Mendelssohn's St. Paul, and Handel's Acis. Mrs. Fowler was encoired in "But the Lord is mindful of His own," as was Master Whitehouse in "Let me wander not unseen." Mr. O. Christian was highly effective in his solos "O God, have mercy," and "O ruddier than the cherry," and Mr. Blackth was loudly applauded for his performance of Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique."

BELFAST.—The first concert of the Belfast Musical Society for the present season, was given in the Music Hall on the 7th ult., and proved, both from an artistic and social view, a most successful opening of the winter campaign. The artists were Miss Leonora Braham, Herr Elsner, and Mr. W. Penry Williams. Miss Braham showed herself a singer of great promise, and Herr Elsner played a solo on the violoncello in a most artistic manner. The chorus and orchestra of the Society acquitted themselves admirably in selections from Haydn, Mendelssohn, Cherubini, Bach, Weber and Wagner. Mr. James Thomson conducted. The hall was well filled by the subscribers and their friends.

BELCHÂMP WALTER, ESSEX.—On Tuesday the 4th ult., a most successful concert was given in the Schools, under the conductorship of the Rev. Robert B. Earée. The programme was well selected, comprising amongst other pieces, Haydn's 1st and 5th Symphonies (four strings, flute and piano), and Himmel's Fanchon overture (strings and piano). The part-songs were Hatton's "Belfry Tower," Macfarren's "Troubadour," Barnby's "Sweet and low," and Pinsuti's "Good night." The solo vocalists were Miss Wix, Miss Smythies, Miss Earée, Miss C. Andrews, Mr. L. Andrews, and the Rev. R. B. Earée. One of the chief features of the concert was a pot-pourri of Scotch melodies, arranged as a violin solo, and most admirably played by the Rev. O. Raymond, the Vicar of the parish. The proceeds of the concert amounted to £19, which will be handed over to the school fund. The programme attracted a large audience, comprising most of the local clergy; and thanks are due to the Rev. R. Earée for the musical treat provided for the parishioners.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Handsworth Amateur Orchestral Society gave its second open rehearsal on Monday evening the 3rd ult., at the rehearsal-room, St. Matthias' Schools. The programme consisted of a well selected number of vocal and instrumental pieces, which were executed in a very careful manner, and to the entire satisfaction of a large audience. The band of the Society has greatly improved, and much credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Jackson, organist of St. Bartholomew's Church, for the progress made since February last.

BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND.—The musical portion of the residents here cannot complain of the scarcity of entertainments recently given. A deservedly successful series of concerts given by Jenny Claus, the lady violinist, assisted by Mons. and Madame Rekel, was immediately followed by the arrival of the eminent pianist Madame Arabella Goddard, who, assisted by Miss Christian, R. A. M., and Mrs. Smythe, gave three concerts at the School of Arts to crowded houses. Madame Goddard's performance is too well known to require any comment; but of the two ladies who assisted her with their vocal powers it was universally acknowledged, they were to very many the principal attraction, good vocal music being generally preferred here to instrumental, however well executed. The third concert of the Musical Union took place on the 2nd September, before a large audience, the programme consisting of Bennett's May Queen, Locke's music to Macbeth and a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental solos, etc., was admirably rendered; the Erard's grand, lately imported by the Society, was used for the first time, and greatly admired. The Kennedy Family have also been delighting their Caledonian brethren with "Two hours at home." The new organ at St. John's Church was opened on 13th August, the choir being considerably augmented by the members of the Musical Union; the processional and recessional hymn was 136 (Hymnus A. cientis et Moderni). The proper Psalm, chanted to Shepperson in D, was followed by Ebdon's Nunc dimittis, and the responses were by Tallis. For the Anthem the greater part of the Messiah was very well performed. The church was thronged, many hundreds being unable to gain admission.

BRIGHTON.—Mr. F. E. Gladstone gave the second of his series of Organ Recitals at the Dome on Monday the 10th ult. The taste for high class performances is evidently on the increase, and it will be fostered by such admirable performances as these of Mr. Gladstone, upon so fine an instrument as that at the Dome. The programme comprised a Choral Song and Fugue of Dr. Wesley's, two little gems by H. Smart, Bach's Fugue in D major, an Andante by E. Silas, an elegant composition by Mr. Gladstone, "In modo di Minuetto," and a "Cantilene Pastorale" by A. Guilmant, in which the most charming effects were produced by the player with the vox humana stop and trumpet swell, and there was no resisting the call made for its repetition. The slow movement from Mendelssohn's Sonata (No. 6), was exquisitely played, as was also an Offertoire by Lefebure-Wely.

BURSLAM.—The Potteries Tonic Sol-fa Choristers opened their season on the 30th October, with a miscellaneous concert in the Town Hall, which was filled with the élite of the district. The principal vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mlle. José Sherrington, Mr. Raynam, M. Jules Lefort and Mr. Hilton, all of whom elicited numerous encores. Mons. Alexander Cornelis, solo violin, was vociferously recalled; and the Chev. Lemmens rendered good service on the pianoforte and Mustel organ. The choristers, under the direction of Mr. Powell, opened the first part of the concert with Brinley Richards's new part-song, "Let the hills resound with song," and the second with the "Rataplan" from La Figlia del Reggimento. The concert was a great success.

CAMBORNE.—A performance of Haydn's Creation was recently given by the Camborne Choral Society, in the Assembly Rooms. The music was well rendered by soloists, chorus, and orchestra; the singing of Mrs. R. Rowe in the part of Gabriel being particularly worthy of comment. The tenor part was undertaken by Mr. Treleven, and the bass by Mr. Hitsmith, both of whom were very successful in their efforts, as was also Miss Hall in the music of Eve. The Penzance orchestral band, under the leadership of Mr. W. C. Hemmings, was as efficient as usual in the accompaniments. Mr. G. J. Smith presided at the organ, and Mr. J. H. Nunn, A. R. A., conducted.

CROYDON.—A singing school has been established at the Literary and Scientific Institution under the direction of Mr. E. Griffiths, F. C. O., the music master of the Whitgift Middle Class Schools in this town. The classes are arranged for study and practice in every branch of vocal music, and are very successful. Examinations are contemplated at the end of each season to grant certificates of competency to those who may desire them, the papers etc., being set by eminent musicians not connected with the town. At the Whitgift Schools, concerts will be given by the pupils and friends as usual in the week before Christmas, the works for performance being Haydn's Spring and Van Bree's St. Cecilia's Day with full accompaniments.

EDINBURGH.—A most attractive and well attended concert was given in the Music Hall, on Saturday afternoon, the 15th ult., by the Choral Union, when Acis and Galatea was performed. There was an excellent orchestra, conducted by Mr. Adam Hamilton, and the solo singers were Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Whitehead, Mr. Darling and Mr. Santley. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, commencing with Beethoven's Symphony in A major. Professor Oakeley's song "Tears, idle tears" (sung at the last Birmingham Festival) was exquisitely rendered by Miss Wynne, and Miss Agnes Drechsler Hamilton received an enthusiastic recall for her excellent performance of a violin solo. The first festival of the Edinburgh Diocesan Choral Association took place on Wednesday afternoon the 19th ult., at St. Paul's Episcopal Church. The festival consisted of an evening service at four. Although admission was by ticket, the church was crowded to excess half-an-hour before the service began. The choir numbered about 192, of whom 32 were from St. Peter's Edinburgh; 22 from St. John's, Alloa; 20 from St. Mary's, Dalkeith; 20 from St. James', Leith; 18 from All Saints, Edinburgh; 14 from St. Andrew's Home Mission Church, Edinburgh; 11 from St. Columba's, Edinburgh; 7 from Dalmahoy; while the St. Paul's choristers, including the female voices, amounted to 48. The female members of the St. Paul's choir took their places among the congregation, but in the front seats. The choir and clergy entered by the west door (including the male singers of St. Paul's choir, who were surpliced for the occasion), giving in unison, as a processional hymn, "We love the place, O Lord." The service was well intoned by the Rev. A. W. Hallen, of Alloa, and the Rev. W. Douglas, to whom St. Paul's is greatly indebted for the high efficiency of its present choir. The chants to the Psalms were Anglican, and sung partly in harmony and partly in unison, the pointing being according to the sense, and not on the old syllabic system. The 98th Psalm was taken to Elvey in F, and the 111th and 150th to Oakeley in B flat. The chanting was in all respects above the ordinary standard. The Magnificat was taken to Wesley's well-known Service in F, the closing portion of which was particularly well rendered, and we had "The strain praise of joyful praise" to Troyte No. 2, in place of the Nunc dimittis, the "Alleluia" of which were sung very impressively. The anthems were Farrant's "Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake," and Sir George Elvey's "O give thanks unto the Lord," both carefully rendered. The hymn before the sermon was "Our God for ever worketh," recently written by Mr. Davenport Adams, and set to music by Professor Oakeley. An appropriate sermon was preached by Provost Powell of Inverness. The effect of the music was greatly enhanced by Professor Oakeley's beautiful organ accompaniments. The annual general meeting of the University Musical Society was held on Saturday afternoon the 22nd ult., in the Music Class-room, Park Place. There was a large attendance of students. The chair was occupied by Professor Oakeley, the President, and there were also present Principal Sir Alex. Grant, Sir Robert Christison, Bart., Professor Kelland, Dr. D. Christison, Dr. McKendrick, secretary, and Mr. Small, treasurer of the Society. Professor Oakeley, who was received with loud and prolonged cheering, made a most able speech, tracing the progress made by the Society since its commencement in 1867, until the present time, and expressing a hope that a still larger number of students would join this winter. After a vote of thanks to the President and congratulations on his recovery, the proceedings were brought to a close by a performance of music on the organ, by Professor Oakeley.

JARROW.—On Thursday the 6th ult., Handel's Oratorio Samson was performed in the Mechanics' Hall, by a company of about 80 instrumentalists and vocalists. The solo singers were Miss Annie Penman (encored in "Let the bright Seraphim"), Miss Emmeline Moore, Mr. D. R. Mitchelson, Mr. T. Moore, Mr. J. Duke and Mr. E. Tibbo. The concert, which was conducted by Mr. J. Hickman, proved one of the most successful that has taken place in Jarrow, the large hall being quite full.

LIVERPOOL.—The eighth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 28th of October, and was one of remarkable excellence. The principal artists were Madlle. Alvsleben, Mrs. Scott Fennell, Mr. Edward Lloyd and Mr. Santley. The whole of the first part was devoted to a very spirited rendering of Beethoven's Choral Symphony (No. 9, in D minor), which was well sung by soloists and choir, in spite of the high pitch of the orchestra. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous; the overtures being those to The Midsummer Night's Dream (Mendelssohn) and Zampa (Herold). The choral members sang very well a charming part-song of Hatton's, "The Sailor's Serenade." The concert was highly appreciated by a crowded audience. The ninth subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 11th ult. Principal artists, Madame Sinico, Signor Aramburo and Mr. Perkins. The "Sinfonia" was Mozart's in E flat, and was admirably performed. The overtures were those to L'Alcade de la Vega (Onslow), and Tannhäuser (Wagner), which last went magnificently, and was loudly redemanded, but not repeated. The concert concluded with the March from the same opera. The choral members sang "Fair as a bride" (Rossini), and Mendelssohn's "Hunter's farewell," with four horns and trombone accompaniment, very well, and the solo artists were much applauded. Madame Sinico's rendering of Beethoven's grand scena "Ah perfido," was exceedingly fine.—On Thursday the 13th ult., the annual tea meeting and concert was held at St. Matthew's Church, Hill Street, the chair being taken by the Rev. T. W. Moeran, Incumbent of the church. The schoolroom was tastefully decorated with evergreens, etc., for the occasion. The principal vocalists were the Misses Macdonald, Oxtan and Truscott, and Messrs. Nicholson, Oxtan, Sowden and Sanderson. Hatton's quartett, "Softly fall the shades of evening," was most effectively sung by Mrs. Bishop, Miss Truscott, Messrs Sanderson and Sowden, and other part-songs were very fairly rendered by the choir. Mr. J. B. Ellison presided at the pianoforte.

MANCHESTER.—The Athenæum Musical Society gave the first concert of the season on Friday the 31st October, at the Memorial Hall, Albert Square. The programme was one of peculiar interest, and the performance of more than average excellence. A Cantata by the conductor of the Society, Dr. Hiles, formed the principal portion of the first half of the concert. It is entitled The Crusaders, and is written for solo soprano, and tenor, and a chorus. The music is admirably adapted for Choral Societies, the most effective numbers being, "Evening shadows gently flowing," the March of the Templars, and the Pilgrims' March. The remainder of the programme calls for no special remark, being composed of the usual choral works.—On the 13th ult., Mr. Charles Hallé gave a fine performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul, with Mesdames Alvsleben and Enriquez, Messrs Lloyd and Merrick as principals. Both the ladies sang well, and Mr. Lloyd (who is a great favourite here) acquitted himself excellently. The choruses were finely given. On the 20th ult., Dr. von Bülow made his first appearance, before a crowded audience. His pieces were Beethoven's Concerto in E flat, Chopin's Allegro de Concert in G, and Liszt's two studies "Dans les bois," and "Ronde des Lutins," in all of which he was much applauded. Miss Edith Wynne was the vocalist. Amongst the novelties performed at Mr. Hallé's concerts were the following: two movements from Raff's symphony "Im Walde," the scherzo from Gade's symphony in C minor, a Concertstück by Volkmann, and a Fantasia by Liszt, for pianoforte and orchestra, on Hungarian airs. At Mr. de Jong's Saturday evening concerts, we had, on the 15th ult., Handel's Judas Maccabæus, with Madame Sinico, Miss Mary Thorley, Miss Alice Fairman, Messrs Pearson and Wadmore as solo vocalists. Mr. Bridge (Cathedral organist and choromaster at these concerts) rendered efficient aid at the organ. On the following Saturday Madlle. Carlotta Patti, Madame Fanny Huddart, Signor Camero and Mr. Federici, with Mons. Theodore Ritter as pianist, attracted a large audience. The orchestral pieces which were given in irreproachable style, included Beethoven's overture to Egmont, Gounod's ballet music from La Reine de Saba, and the March from Wagner's Tannhäuser.

MONTEURO.—On Saturday the 15th ult., an audience was assembled in the Guild Hall, on the invitation of Messrs Methven, Simpson and Co., to listen to a recital on one of Mason and Hamlin's concert organs, by Mr. W. H. Richmond, organist of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Dundee. Mr. Richmond played through a programme of classical and popular music including Mendelssohn's "War March of the Priests," and selections from the Lobgesang; and also improvised, showing with much skill, the various effects to be obtained from the instrument. Much credit is due to Messrs Methven, Simpson and Co. for the treat they afforded the music lovers of the district.

PARSONSTOWN.—Mr. Arnold, the newly appointed organist, gave his first concert in the Printing House Building, on Friday evening the 7th ult., to a crowded audience, when he was kindly assisted by Mrs. Willington, Mrs. Brereton, the Misses Brereton, Mrs. Biggs, Richard Biggs, Esq., M.A., Fred. Witny, Esq., the students of Chesterfield College, St. Brendon's Church choir and others. The vocal music was highly appreciated, many encores being awarded, but the gem of the evening was Beethoven's Sonata, for piano and violin, by Mrs. Biggs and Mr. Arnold, which created quite a furor. There was a large audience.

PLAISTOW.—On Tuesday evening the 18th ult., a concert in aid of the new organ fund, was given in St. Andrew's Girls' Schoolroom, by the choir of St. Andrew's Church, assisted by friends. The programme consisted of pianoforte selections, part-songs, songs, and duets, all of which were satisfactorily rendered by Miss Musk, Messrs Stevens, Edwin Stevens and Sharp. Miss Brown accompanied, and Mr. Sharp conducted. We may mention that St. Andrew's Church, with its capacious chancel, and noble altar, presents one of the finest interiors of any modern church in the country; the services are full choral, and are rendered in a manner which reflects the greatest credit upon the Vicar, the Rev. Mr. Godsell, and the choir-master Mr. Sharp. A new organ is most desirable, the one now in use being a small and inefficient instrument.

PLYMOUTH.—The Vocal Association, under the conductorship of Mr. Lühr, purpose giving the Messiah during the present month, Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise in February, and Mr. G. A. Macfarren's new Oratorio St. John the Baptist in April 1874, band and chorus, consisting of 250 performers.

PUDSEY, NEAR LEEDS.—On Wednesday the 29th October, the new Organ for the Congregational Church, built by Messrs. Brindley and Foster of Sheffield, was opened by Mr. J. V. Roberts, Mus. Bac., Oxon, organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, Halifax.

RAMSGATE.—A concert by the members of the Canterbury Cathedral Choir, assisted by Miss Dixon, took place on Tuesday evening the 18th ult., in St. George's Hall. The programme was miscellaneous, including many favourite songs, duets, glees and part-songs. Miss Dixon, Mr. Gough, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Plant and Mr. Williams were highly effective in the music allotted to them, receiving several encores. Mr. Hurst presided at the pianoforte. The hall was well filled.

READING.—On Wednesday evening, the 12th ult., a concert was given at the Town Hall. The band and chorus comprised about 40 performers, and the principal artists were Miss Agnes Larkcom (soprano), Mrs. A. F. Rippon (contralto), Mr. J. Robinson (bass), Mr. H. J. Hendy (pianoforte), and Mr. A. F. Rippon (violin). The opening overture, Rossini's Semiramide, was admirably performed, and the chorus "Now tramp o'er moss and fell" (Bishop), the solo being sung by Miss Agnes Larkcom, was given with spirit and precision. Other songs were contributed by Mrs. Rippon, Miss Larkcom, and Mr. Robinson and Mr. Rippon played a violin solo in a masterly style. There was a large audience.

ROTHERHAM.—On the 31st October a competition for the post of organist at Rotherham Parish Church took place in that edifice, Dr. Edwin George Monk, organist of York Minster, being the judge. It having been decided to open the office, at a salary of £50 per annum, for competition, over forty applications were received. Subsequently the number was reduced to four, and as the regulations were very strict, only three of these were forthcoming on the day of trial. The conditions were as follows:—1, an organ composition, to be played by the candidate, the selection left to the performer; 2, chorus by Handel, the selection left to the performer; 3, an organ movement to be played at first sight; 4, a chant from a figured bass, and a psalm tune, in vocal score to be played at sight; 5, a short extemporaneous prelude, in any key appointed by the judge; 6, each candidate may be asked to give a lesson (of about ten minutes' duration) to a church choir. The candidates were not allowed any assistance in turning over the pages of their music, or in the management of the organ stops. Dr. Monk discharged his duties as judge with the utmost impartiality, and at the close of the contest gave his award in favour of Mr. Butcher, who has been six years organist at St. Luke's, Liverpool. This is the third occasion on which he has been selected as the best candidate in competitions for the office of organist.

SCARBOROUGH.—The anniversary of the opening and dedication of All Saints' Church, has been marked this year by an octave of services, beginning on All Saints' Day and extending (by a pardonable expansion of the ecclesiastical period just mentioned) to the evening of Sunday the 9th ult. The music in this church has steadily improved and developed since the appointment of the Rev. R. Brown-Borthwick as Vicar—rather more than a year ago—and under the very energetic and able direction of Dr. Naylor, the choir-master and organist,—alas! as yet without an organ. Since the solemn and devotional rendering of the Passion-music in the Messiah last Maundy Thursday, of which an account was given in our paper of May last, the All Saints' choir, then ably aided by volunteers from other churches, has learned by careful training and steady practice, to "go alone," and not only this but to sing with accuracy and spirit some of the best anthems and services of the most modern type, by Barnby, Goss, Hopkins, Stainer, Sullivan, S. S. Wesley and others. The chanting and hymn singing of Dr. Naylor's choir are remarkably good, and the services increasingly popular. On this occasion, however, neither hymn or anthem seemed large enough to express, in All Saints' Church, at All Saints' tide the exalted sentiment and the high spiritual thought suggested by the place and occasion. And, as at once the outcome and the exponent of these aspirations, a really grand Cantata entitled The Communion of Saints, was written for the occasion, by Dr. Naylor, and after diligent and accurate preparation, was sung by the All Saints' choir, as the anthem, on All Saints' Day and the eight successive evenings. In the opening chorus, the unity, which is the basis of communion, is brought forward with great force and interest by the masterly treatment of St. Paul's noble words in Ephesians ii.—"One Lord, one Faith, etc." This is followed by the tenor solo "Be ye therefore followers of God," sung on each evening by the Vicar with much taste and feeling; it is perhaps in point of pure melody the gem of the whole work. After an unaccompanied quartett and a treble solo, a vigorous and striking choral recitative for men's voices, introduces the old All Saints' Hymn, "Let all the saints terrestrial sing," with its old tune, "French," or "Dundee," newly harmonised by Dr. Naylor. Of these harmonies, varying for each verse, it is not too much to say that they exhibit an amount of musical skill and a real genius for choral effect which will, we venture to predict, earn a well-deserved fame for the composer. The congregation who sat during the remainder of the Cantata were invited to stand during the singing of the hymn, and to join in unison with the first and third verses. The fourth verse, written in eight parts, begins pp, with an effective transition from the original key (F) of the hymn into A, and the jubilant "Alleluia," which illustrates the rejoicing conveyed by the words is heard in well-written counterpoint in two of the parts. We have not space to enter fully into an account of the fine bass solo which follows, or of the exquisite quartett with "The new Jerusalem" for its leading theme, but must sum up our remarks by observing that the final chorus of doxology, "Unto Him that loved us," has a massive grandeur about it, and a vigour of movement that is quite Handelian; and on each of the four opportunities we had of listening to the Cantata, we felt that it is a true contribution to the sacred music of our country, as well as a most forcible illustration of the great facts of our religion of which it treats. It was accompanied by Dr. Naylor and Mr. G. B. Thackway on the harmonium and pianoforte, except on the last evening, when the Scarborough Spa band occupied the (at present empty) organ chamber; but their apparent unacquaintance with music of this order did not allow them to do justice to the excellent instrumentation of the composer, or the uniformly steady singing of the choir. Mr. Haddock, of Leeds, however, did valuable service as first violin and leader. On this last evening of this series of services, the church was completely crowded in every part, many being obliged to stand during the whole time. But we were pleased to observe that no one left after the Cantata, as if it were regarded as a mere musical performance; and indeed, throughout the whole octave, the Scarborough people seemed thoroughly to appreciate the object of this occasional introduction of sacred music, larger and longer in extent than the anthem, not as in any way supplanting or throwing into the shade the rest of the service, but as consecrating in the most solemn places, to the highest purposes, the best human works to the praise and glory of God. Several preachers of eminence, including the Rev. Sir F. Gore Ouseley, occupied the pulpit during the octave.

STAFFORD.—On Monday the 27th October, Mr. W. A. Marson, organist of Christ Church, gave his second popular musical entertainment in Christ Church Schoolroom, when a very good programme was performed to the entire satisfaction of the audience. The proceeds of this and the last entertainment amounted to about £30, £19 of which has been added to the Rowley Street school fund.

WOODSIDE, NEAR CROYDON.—A concert was given on Wednesday the 12th ult., in aid of the Schools of the Parish, when the following artists assisted—Miss Dibdin, Messrs. Berri, Severn, Folkard, and J. B. Bolton. The singing of Miss Dibdin and Mr. Berri was much admired, and Mr. Bolton was warmly applauded for his efficient rendering of Thirlwall's song, "Thus goes the world around." Mr. Folkard presided at the pianoforte, and played Mendelssohn's "War March," from Athalie, in an able manner.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—The prospectus of the sixth season of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society, announces that the Committee intends giving three concerts, the first of which is to consist of Haydn's Creation, the second of a miscellaneous selection, and the third of Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night, and Barnett's Ancient Mariner. Eminent vocal and instrumental soloists have been engaged; and the band will be considerably augmented by leading instrumentalists from the London and other concert.

WORTHING.—The annual meeting of the Sacred Harmonic Society was held at the Davison Schoolroom on Wednesday evening, the 22nd Oct. There was a large attendance of members. From the report read by the Hon. Secretary (J. C. T. Smith, Esq.), it appears that the proceedings of the past year have been highly satisfactory, and in addition to the support given to the movement by subscribers, the concerts of the Society have exceeded in every way the most sanguine expectations.

A SERVICE for the TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in the key of A, composed by FREDERICK ILIFFE, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Fellow of the College of Organists, London, and Organist of St. Wilfrid's Church, Kibworth. Price 4½d.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, No. 1, set to Original Chants, price 2d., composed by FREDERICK ILIFFE, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Fellow of the College of Organists, London.

"In writing these Chants for the Te Deum I have divided it into its doctrinal parts. The 'first' thirteen verses are a Creed setting forth the doctrine of the Trinity. The 'second' part beginning with the words 'Thou art the King of glory,' and the four following verses, set forth the Divinity and Incarnation of the Son. The solemn verse 'We believe that Thou shalt come,' expresses our belief in our Lord's second coming. A separate Chant is provided for this verse. The 'third' part, beginning with the words 'We therefore pray Thee' is a Litany.

"The Rev. Thomas Keble was the first, I believe, who suggested this ancient mode of dividing the Te Deum into these several parts, and I have adhered to this arrangement as far as possible; there is, however, one exception, and that is in the first part of the verse, 'Holy, Holy, Holy,' which seems to me to demand a different kind of expression to any of the other verses. I may also say that I had written another Chant of a more pensive character for the 'Litany part,' but it was thought advisable to go back to the melody of the first Chant, in order to avoid many changes."—Prefatory Remarks by the Composer.

SOLID OAK CASE, FIVE OCTAVES, AND TWO FOOT-BOARDS.

The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.

The instruments now offered to the public will be found divested of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organlike.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES. CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

THE MUSICAL TIMES, AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR. JANUARY 1, 1874.

BACH'S CHRISTMAS ORATORIO.

By G. A. MACFARREN.

GLAD tidings to the world of art are the announcement of this great work in an English garb. The successful production of the Matthew Passion of the same master has made his immortal name familiar to thousands, who, if they had previously heard it, regarded it in the false light of misconception, believing Bach to be the writer of scholastic exercises only, which, because they were wontedly misrepresented in performance, were supposed to be arid and expressionless. The public hearing of the music of the Passion at the Oratorio Concerts, at Westminster Abbey, at St. Paul's Cathedral, at the performance of the Sacred Harmonic Society, at Oxford, and at more than one of our great musical Festivals, has convinced, not only those musicians who were formerly unbelievers, but the great mass of the English people, that there was a power cotemporary with the all-accepted Handel, whose influence, though it dawn upon us far later, will affect us as deeply and, in course of time, it is to be expected as universally, as his. The reverential reception of the Passion has prepared the way for this other masterpiece from the same source, and the credit is due to the conductor, who first made that work intelligible to English hearers, of having made straight a welcome for this.

There is as much of likeness of manner in the music of the Passion and the Christmas Oratorio as of unlikeness of character. Hence, the latter will best be described by reference to the other—best, at least, to those whose knowledge of the former work enables them to apply the comparison. Like that, this was composed for performance in church, as portion or in extension of a service to celebrate one of the chief occasions in the Christian year. Unlike that, this pertains not specially to the one saddest day of a season of lamentation, but belongs to the outspread period of the Christmas festivities, and comprises music of less than half an hour's duration for each of six days' several performances, illustrating the events which are joyously commemorated throughout the Christian Catholic Church and in every Christian homestead. That is the grief song which pours forth the lamentation of Christendom; this is the jubilation which streams from the open heart at the moment when neighbourly love is rifest among Christian men. The opposite sentiments of penitence and exultation are contrasted in the two compositions, one may indeed say sublimely; but the rejoicing is so earnest, so devout, so truly from the heart's depth, that it borrows sometimes the tears of sadness and shows at the happiest under the aspect of woe.

The Festival of Christmas, as celebrated in the Reformed Church of North Germany, begins on the 25th of December and ends on the 6th of January. Such at least is old use, though many a professed Protestant and stout Teuton is now ignorant of the fact. It may come to pass, if the present course proceed of levelling times and tides (but as yet it has not), that Englishmen may forget the extent and limits of the Christmas season, bounded in front by the Nativity and at the end by the Adoration of the Three Kings, which last some of us still commemorate by drawing for king and queen, and cutting for a ring into the twelfth-cake—Old Christmas Day, whose title is preserved although the new style has changed the calendar. The German Festival particularly solemnises the 25th, 26th, and 27th of December, New Year's Day, the Sunday after, and the Feast of the Epiphany or the Wise Men's following of the star, or the dispersion of the light among the Gentiles.

As in the great music of the Matthew Passion, and in that, which is inferior alone to it, of St. John's version of the same story, in the Christmas Oratorio, the Gospel narrative of the incidents the music glorifies is assigned to a tenor voice, which is designated the Evangelist. Here, as in those other compositions, the narrative is broken by the entry of particular voices, choral or solo, to represent the persons, many or single, who are said to speak in its course. As in those other cases, the narrative is interspersed with what have been called reflective passages, but these are here in larger proportion to the whole than in those other works. The reflective passages are in two classes. First, the Chorals, or popular hymn tunes which every child in North Germany learns with its mother tongue; and with these tunes, such verses of the poems, also known to everybody, as bear upon the situations wherein the Chorals occur. Second, setting of original verses in the forms of Choruses, Airs, Recitatives, and concerted pieces for two or more solo singers.

The part of the Evangelist has its main merit in its perfect declamation of the original words of the Lutheran version of Scripture. No translation could possibly substitute for these words at once the accepted English reading, the same number of syllables, words of the same or analogous meaning to identical notes, similar vowels to express the same feelings, and punctuation that admitted of breathing points at the same periods of phrases. It is most admirable, however, in the edition now before the writer, that the biblical text is very closely followed, and when not precisely, it is so ingeniously imitated in manner that no discrepancy can be felt. Nay, one word more; it is written with such care and scholarship as often to throw light on the established version. With diffident reluctance, be it avowed, there is one practical and effective objection to this portion of the music, which applies also to that of the Passion of both Evangelists, and which is infinitely to be regretted. This is the extremely wide compass of the voice part, ranging often to a 12th or 13th in the course of one piece, together with the very free employment of the highest notes. The fault—it will bear no lesser name—is not so conspicuous with the words to which the music was written, as with any words that can be adapted to the music; but it is a fault still which necessitates every singer's modification of the notes to bring some of the passages within his possible capability. The accompaniment of the Recitatives is for the organ, or, very far better, the harpsichord as represented by the modern pianoforte. Its assignment to a single player judiciously leaves the vocalist at the utmost freedom with his recitation; and the pianoforte is the preferable instrument, as not clouding the enunciation by continuous sound. The passages for chorus and for single singers are most dramatically composed, and are instrumented so as to give the greatest life to their effect.

The harmonisation of the Chorals proves the author's infinite command of the powers of combination. Highly remarkable as it is for its musical beauty, it claims further admiration for its expressive fitness to the several situations in which these hymn tunes occur. Some of the tunes are set plainly for the voices, with directions that certain instruments are to be in unison with each part, and the organ in unison with the whole. Supposing the tunes of these to be sung by the congregation, an instrument would be needed to make the harmony clear and to keep the voices in tune; but then, there would be a charm quite peculiar to the singers who had life-long familiarity with the melodies, in finding their song supported by a substratum of harmony which gave vivid expression to the very notes he was uttering; and this charm would be extra to the pleasure every one feels in singing a tune that he knows. It would be vain to substitute for the special effect, moral as much as musical, thus intended, the totally different process of singing at sight music before unknown, of which the voluntary executant would be as likely to take any other part as the principal melody, and from which a chaotic effect rather than a multitudinous would accrue. It was a fortunate device, when the Passion was produced under Mr. Barnby's direction, to substitute, rather, for the congregation's collective performance, a rendering of the Chorals thus set by the unaccompanied voices of the choir, with modifications of loudness and softness in accordance with the verbal expression, producing thus the effect most delightful to all listeners, and the best compensation for that pleasure which can never be enjoyed in a country where the melodies are as unknown as their harmonic treatment. Other of the Chorals are arranged with figured accompaniment for the orchestra, and these stand out in strong contrast to those more simply set.

The other class of reflective pieces has a particular interest in every instance, and this class will be presently examined, from number to number, with the premise only that the melodic beauty and the expressive power rise often to a height that no musician of any age or school has yet exceeded. The words for this section of the work are not taken from Holy Writ, nor from the standard Hymn Book of the Lutheran Church, but were supplied by a writer of Bach's own time. It belongs to a very poor order of literature, and is conceived in a tone of personality, as regards the principal figure, that must be distasteful to a large number of earnest and thoughtful hearers. One may marvel that the great artist could spend his thoughts on such a view of the subject, one may perhaps regret; but, to understand him, one must regard the matter in the light in which he regarded it, and wonder the while that he could write such music to thoughts of such an order.

The orchestration of Bach eminently distinguishes his music from that of other writers, as much of his own time as of ours. His broad writing for string instruments has the grand character which always belongs to the contrapuntal style, and is common to this and to other composers; but his treatment of wind instruments is distinctive and remarkable. Sometimes he accompanies a piece with one, or two, or a choir of these, in combination with the organ or the string basses, and the effect—though changeless throughout, as when an organist holds to one choice of stops during an entire movement—is often most delicious, and always characteristic. To this end, Bach employs sometimes two flutes—a novel invention in his day—for which his writing is for the most part lower than the average of what we now hear, and the sound of the flute is consequently soft and sweet and gentle. He uses three kinds of hautboys, constituting a complete choir, or what in Tudor times used to be styled a "consort" of this class of instrument. Two of these are obsolete, the "oboe d'amore" and the "oboe da caccia," and the other has been so improved in later days as to be far more extensively capable than of old. This modern hautboy amply represents as well the "oboe d'amore" as the unqualified "oboe" of Bach; and his second extinct instrument is efficiently replaced by our corno Inglese, cor Anglais, vox Humana, or English horn. He writes also for trumpets, generally three, and always in D. The freedom wherewith he treats the upper notes of this instrument surpasses that of Handel, and the passages in which he uses these high notes are florid in the extreme. An interesting subject for enquiry is the ancient compass and capabilities of the trumpet, which extends, however, very far wide of present limits; it now boots only to speak of the prominence above all other instruments the trumpet must have held a century and a half ago, when string instruments were less doubled, and the rest of a band was less numerous than in our time. Now-a-days, separated as they are by quality of tone as much as by loudness, from the entire orchestra, the three trumpets of Bach are distinctly prominent whenever they are used; but, with their companions the drums, when he wrote, their sound must by comparison have been overpowering, and majestic in the extreme.

As has been said, the Christmas Oratorio was designed for performance on six several days, to each of which one of its six Parts is appropriate. Yet, there is no saying whether by accident or intention, the six Parts seem naturally to divide themselves into twice three, which is agreeably convenient for the performance of the oratorio as a whole, apart from ecclesiastical usage or requirement. Anticipating a practice, which Mozart unexceptionally observed in common with many great musicians, but which others, in Bach's time and since, have disregarded, the complete work begins and ends in the same key. In the case before us, that key is D. Moreover, each day's portion likewise begins and ends in the same key, and all these keys are, closely or remotely, related to what may be accepted as the normal key of D. So, the first Part is in D, the second in G, and the third in D; after which, with wider digression, the fourth Part is in F; the fifth is in A, and the sixth returns once more to the original D. This provision indicates that the oratorio is to be considered as a whole, though each division is in some sort complete in itself; and it is from this point of view that its detailed description will now be attempted.

The portion of the oratorio appropriated to the first day of the Festival of Christmas is highly jubilant in character—an irrepressible outburst, as it were, of the world's rejoicing. Especially this must be felt in the opening number, to which the clang of martial instruments, as much as the broad exulting phrases for the voices, gives peculiarly an air of triumph. The majestic flourish of drums and trumpets that introduces this Chorus is eminently grand in its effect to us, and must have been far more so to those who first heard it, when these means of musical pomp were more rare in their use, and less familiar than now, therefore, to an audience. One may naturally wonder at the figure of speech which defines as "soldiers" the votaries of the religion of peace; yet wondering, one meets with this frequently in modern hymnology, and recoils perhaps from the strange misapplication. Here is, however, the music of the field without its weapons; no thought is prompted of bloodshed, vengeance, slaughter, hatred, the subjects that introduces the institution of soldiery and the objects that exercise it; the idea of joy is here to be expressed, and its expression is in the most sonorous and brilliant tones, just as to the eye it would be in the most vivid and glittering colours. The music pictures a happy multitude, clad in gayest holiday gear, with ribbons streaming and holly branches waving, tokens of gladness at the event the season celebrates, and of belief in its everlasting influences. Moulded in the form of a first and second part, with repetition Da Capo, the piece has the highest contrast of character in the central section, where the noisier orchestration is for a while discontinued, and the imitative writing for the voices gives to them a different kind of interest.

This festal beginning is followed by a narrative Recitative, set to the first verses of the second chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, which tell of the imperial decree for the taxation, and the consequent journey of Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem.

Nos. 3 and 4 are a movement of the description known in England as "accompanied Recitative," and an air "Prepare thyself, Zion," for contralto. His treatment of it elsewhere, as much as here, seems to indicate a predilection of Bach for this voice, to which he assigns some of his sweetest, tenderest, most plaintive and most passionate strains. The present instance is full of gentleness and love and hope. It is one of the many proofs that the minor key is not, as common prejudice assumes, necessarily pathetic in its expression. The evasion of the perfect cadence for a moment, by a digression into the key of F, and thence into that of D minor, with the return to the main key of A minor for the deferred close, is a charming expansion of the beautiful and most manifest melody; and the second Part, beginning at the words, "Thou must meet Him," is as tuneful as the first, of which it is a continuance as necessary as it is natural.

The Choral No. 5, "How shall I fitly meet Thee?" is arranged for four voices. Its melody has been made familiar here by its masterly settings in the Matthew Passion, where it is sung to the words, "O Lord, Thy love's unbounded," and it is four times repeated in the course of that oratorio with varied harmony, according to the expression of the five several verses of the hymn, and the situations in the history these are chosen to illustrate. A chief interest of the present piece lies in the totally different treatment of the tune from all of those five. The end, upon a half close, is inconclusive in effect, and thence has a great power of suggestion as to what may be the result of man's meeting with the Saviour. This power of suggestion, of raising images in the mind besides that immediately presented, is one of the subtlest, and indeed one of the highest attributes of art, and it pertains more specially to music than to either of the other forms of poetry. Bach was a great master of it, and has rarely surpassed the delicacy of its present application.

No. 6 proceeds with the narration in the Gospel text, telling of the birth of our Lord.

Upon this follows a Choral, "For us to earth He cometh poor," which is distinguished by a special treatment. The tune, according to the freedom that composers of all times have allowed themselves in respect to these ancient themes, is written in $\frac{3}{4}$, a variety that pleasantly relieves the more usual even division of notes. The tune is assigned to trebles only, with a figured counterpoint for the orchestra, and it is interspersed with interludes in recitative for a solo bass, which comment upon and enforce the text of the hymn. The sense of trust is well indicated by the appended words, "Kyrie eleison," set in monotone. There is extraordinary beauty, even for Bach, in the prelude or opening symphony, which is repeated at the close—a sign that the author, who most rarely gives a complete strain twice, himself felt its charm. The last four bars of this are notable, no less than for their loveliness, for the identity of their harmonic progression with that in one of the best and longest known in this country of the songs of Schubert, one in the series of "The Fair Maid of the Mill," in which the passage stands to iterations of the words, "Thine is my heart." The coincidence of the peculiar and delicious use of the chromatic supertonic harmony which this includes in the two writers, is the more remarkable, because there is little likelihood that Schubert can have met with the work of his great predecessor.

No. 8 is a bass Air, extolling in apt musical phrases the greatness of our earth-born Lord, and honouring with fit contrast His lowliness who lies couched in a manger. The song is full of animation, and makes its stand as much by its individual merit as by its strong relief to the surrounding pieces.

The concluding number of this first division is a Choral, "Ah! dearest Jesus," set for four voices. With orchestral accompaniment, which brightens its effect without elaboration, and carries on the jubilant character of the opening chorus. The three trumpets and the drums of the first number are here employed again, and unity of character is thus maintained throughout the Part by the prevalence of one quality of tone, as much as by the sequence and coherence of ideas.

The Second Part begins with a Symphony picturing the shepherds on their night-watch. A Pastoral Symphony this is truly, in respect of its quiet, gentle, passionless character, and it follows so far conventional notions of shepherd life, that it is in $\frac{1}{2}$ measure, with four smoothly-flowing triplets in a bar. It differs, however, from the instrumental movements by Corelli and Handel, that illustrate the same incident, so far as may be possible for anything, having the same subject and means of expression, to differ. It makes no allusion to the traditional Pifferari tune, which is prominent in both these pieces; but it is quite as melodious, quite as sweet, and quite as true to the purpose. Silvered by the silent moonlight, earth seems to sleep in the lap of peace, in token of the universal rest this night should have initiated.

No. 11—the numbers run continuously through the whole work—resumes the Gospel narrative with the words "And there were shepherds," in the wonted Recitative for tenor. Reflective upon this is the Choral, "Break forth, O beauteous, heavenly light," which is harmonised, as are all the selections from Lutheran hymnody, with exquisite fitness to the situation whereon it is brought to bear.

St. Luke's text is continued in No. 13, the words of the Angel, "Be not afraid," &c., being distinguished from those of the narration which stand in the third person, by being assigned to another voice, a soprano, after the manner of all the personal passages of the two Passions by Bach, and in very far earlier precedent. The solo of the Angel is exceptionally accompanied by the orchestra, as are all those of Jesus in the Matthew Passion, seemingly to distinguish the divine personality from the narrator, and from all the human speakers, with more or less the same purpose that induced the old masters of the pictorial art to invest the head of the Saviour with a glory.

An accompanied Recitative for bass, "What God to Abraham revealed," like all the similar pieces, is quite apart in character from the narration, as much in the vocal phraseology as in the manner and fullness of the accompaniment. It introduces the tenor air, "Haste ye! shepherds," a grateful, lively, but dignified exhortation, which applies as much to all men in all ages as to the watching pastors of the flocks of Bethlehem, an exhortation to meet the Saviour with cheerful, hopeful and loving hearts.

"And this shall be a sign" (No. 16) pursues the narrative as before, and makes way for the Choral, "Within yon gloomy manger."

The Recitative for bass, most delicately accompanied by wind instruments, compares the shepherds, who are now to welcome the new-born babe, with that revered shepherd of old to whom was made the first revelation of His advent. Here follows a piece of such exquisite beauty as has never been surpassed, if ever equalled, even by the same master hand. Bach's fondness for the contralto voice has not been evinced more appropriately than in his choice of its tenderest of tones for the embodiment of his loveliest of ideas in the number before us. It is a Cradle Song addressed to the sleeping Christ, that seems in its soothing sweetness to sing away all possibility of trouble, and to promise endless repose. The charm of the music is a subject to which words can do no justice. The sustained notes of the voice through the streaming melody of the instruments are lulling in their effect, and the motherly tenderness breathed through the whole must win its way to every sympathetic heart.

A Recitative tells of the appearance of the heavenly host around the Angel, and the song of this multitude is then presented in a Chorus (No. 21), not in the concise form of the Turbæ of ancient Latin use, which is but little extended in the exclamations of the populace that intersperse the two Passions, but constituting a largely developed and highly elaborated movement. The many-voiced choir is picturesquely figured in the imitative entries of the several parts. The long sustension of the successive bass notes, B, E, and A, with the hush of all the orchestra, successfully paints the idea of "Peace on earth;" and the recurrence of the pianissimo at the end of the piece, after a renewal of the fugal character that preceded it, cannot fail of its impression.

The concluding numbers are an invitation in accompanied Recitative for bass, to unite with the angelic singers, and a Choral, celebrating the Redeemer's praise; the florid orchestration that accompanies this last being a reminiscence of the symphony that opens the Part, a renewal of the pastoral character that initiates this division of the work. It is a great means in a musician's hands, this, of unifying several pieces in an outspread work, by recurring to one in a later situation, whose purpose may be illustrated by the allusion; and it is interesting to note that this device, which has been supposed to be peculiar to modern art, was happily applied by the master who anticipated everything which after writers have been thought to originate.

The pompous instrumentation of the music for the first day of the Festival is resumed in that for the third; and with it is the jubilant character, as contrasted by the greater tranquillity that marks the Second Part. The opening chorus is truly tuneful, and by no means wanting in the harmonic interest that always invests the music of the master; its rhythm is most obvious, and its impression accordingly easy.

In Nos. 25 and 26 is related how, on the Angel's departure, the shepherds agreed to go to Bethlehem, they being personified in a short animated Chorus to the words of their interlocution. An accompanied Recitative for bass leads to the Choral "The Lord hath all these wonders," to which the florid accompaniment of the flute gives special interest. In this, again, the appended words, "Kyrie eleison" (Lord, have mercy), with the close upon the dominant chord to which they are set, give a distinctive effect to the termination.

The Duet for soprano and bass (No. 29), is rich in the intertangement of the two voice-parts, which give each additional interest to the other. This piece is eminently fit for private performance, and may be turned to such account by any singers who can feel its charm.

The words of the Evangelist are resumed in a tenor Recitative, telling how all men marvelled at the shepherds' story, but Mary pondered in her heart the wonders which had befallen her. The reflective passage upon this text, an air for contralto, "Keep, oh my heart," is another example of the composer's sympathetic treatment of the female low voice; and its combination here with a solo violin, seems to draw further tenderness from its tones than that wherewith it is naturally endowed. Like the piece for the same voice and instrument in the Matthew Passion, "O Lord, have mercy," this air is in B minor, and it proves as much the versatility of a key as of the human and mechanical means of sound, that the two are totally unlike in character and expression. The sentiment of maternal pride, most gentle in its exultation, is continued in the ensuing accompanied Recitative for the same voice; and the scene culminates in the Choral "Thee with tender care I'll cherish," which is simply set for the voices.

In the Recitative (No. 34), the tenor voice, which permanently represents the Evangelist, tells of the return of the shepherds; and the final Choral transfers to us, who participate in the performance of the work, their song of rejoicing. This piece, however, is not strictly final, for the opening Chorus of the present Part is now to be repeated, so that the music for the third day closes as it begins; and closes, also, in respect to the orchestral colouring, as that for the entire Festival commences—with the joyous sounds of drums and trumpets. The three parts thus concluded, complete in some sort the first of two larger divisions of the work. They refer, as has been shown, to the immediate Feast of Christmas; whereas the three following celebrate the dispersed later festivities of the season; and they are technically connected by the consecution of keys, the 1st and 3rd beginning and ending in D, and the 2nd—as if it were an episode between the other two—opening and closing in G.

The Fourth Part especially represents the feeling of devotion. The music is distinguished from all that has gone before by being set in the key of F, so at least it begins and ends, the intervening pieces being, as in the previous Parts, in keys closely related to the principal; whereas, that of the foregoing divisions of the oratorio is all in sharp keys. Even upon persons with an uneducated musical sense, this broad change of tonality would give a new character to the music that was to follow, were the several Parts performed in direct succession on the same occasion; but it could little influence the effect, even upon thoroughly trained and most sensitive musicians, if heard, as was designed, on New Year's Day, a week after the first three Parts, when all impression of the key and its colouring must have passed out of the minds of the hearers. Now-a-days, and in England particularly, the work is likelier to be given entire in one performance, than to be spread over the period from Christmas to Twelfth Day, and hence we may enjoy an effect from the tonal arrangement, of which the audience cannot but have been heedless for whom the oratorio was originally planned. We now come to the Festival of the Circumcision, wherein is embodied the idea of worship as cheerful as it is devout. The first Chorus calls upon men to fall down and adore the Saviour of our race. Its design is progressive, not having the repetition Da Capo which was common, though certainly not necessary, in compositions of the time, and whose absence distinctly lightens the effect of the whole. This whole is remarkably melodious, and it has a feature so prominent that the movement is obviously characterised thereby, namely, a long sustained note in one or other of the parts—first F for the basses, then C for the sopranos, then F for the altos, and C at last for the tenors—through the moving harmonies of the other voices. This gives delightful repose to the general effect, and shows the tranquillity of spirit that is associated with the act of reverence.

In No. 37, the Evangelist tells of our Lord's Circumcision; and of his receiving, according to the Angel's prediction, the name of Jesus, or Saviour. Consequent upon this is a piece of somewhat curious structure; it is an Arioso, so-called, for soprano, or a continuance of melodious phrases that, while quite rhythmical, constitute not a complete melody. This Arioso is preceded, accompanied, and followed by passages for bass in recitative. "Emmanuel, beloved name," begins the latter, declaring how, in death as in life, this name and our faith in it are our unfailing safeguard; while the soprano sings "Jesus, Thou that for me livest," revealing, as it were, an under-current of thought to the uttered contemplations. Bach has employed various devices for the presentation of a twofold thought, of which none better realises the idea than the present; notice, for example, several numbers for solo voices, with chorus, in the Matthew Passion, and the opening piece of that great work, where the means employed are the counterpoint and interludes, of the instruments and eight vocal parts, to the Choral, which is sung by a ninth set of voices, wholly independent of the others. The pleasure he must have taken in such double expression is peculiar to a mind so complicated as his own; if, in any but his own, the power of entertaining simultaneously a substance and its shadow can have been so highly developed. We, however, who could not have conceived this intricate design, may observe and take full delight in its happy realisation.

The soprano Air (No. 39) is a charming thought, most charmingly set forth. Addressing the Saviour, it asks again and again questions ending, one with "Nay," another with "Yea," and an echoing voice, as if that of the mighty Healer of sorrows, repeats from a distance the final word, answering thus the enquiry with comforting assurance; and then this voice is re-echoed by an instrument, confirming with delicate tenderness the peace-giving power of the first answer. The hautboy, with the organ, accompanies the principal voice, and has the second response to the question, and the effect of the whole is one of the most ethereal that can be imagined. This is a far simpler application of the twofold purpose than any of those to which allusion has just been made, and the purpose is accordingly more transparent here and more easily appreciable. If fortunate in its performance, this piece must command the sympathy of an audience, and fix itself on the recollection.

No. 40 is another specimen of the ingenious weaving of Recitative for the bass voice into the woof of an Arioso for the soprano, and with the same successful purpose of showing the course of an inward thought which underlies an uttered expression.

We have, then, a singularly grand Air for tenor, "Tis Thee I would be praising," which is so elaborately accompanied that, with smallest modification, it might be converted into a Chorus of many parts. The florid subject for the solo voice is answered by the instruments, with such closeness and variety and constancy that it may almost be said to form the basis of a fugue, which is formally worked in the orchestra. It is of the grandest character, and grandly delivered by a grand voice will give noble expression to the sentiment.

The last piece in this Part is a Choral, with florid interludes wrought upon a figure that is independent of the vocal melody, and it is accompanied with a constantly moving bass. Moreover, it is set in triple measure. It is astonishing what variety the master makes out of these old tunes, and how he always freshens their interest. In this Part, there is no instance of a hymn tune being accompanied note against note, and the absence of this simple form makes one recollect with pleasure its excellent effect in other places.

The Fifth Part of the work is appropriated to the Sunday after New Year's Day. Quitting the Gospel of St. Luke, the narrative portion turns to the second chapter of St. Matthew, wherein is recounted the coming of the Wise Men to Herod, and his consulting the Hebrew authorities as to the predicted place of the Nativity. The opening number is a Chorus, which strangely reminds one of the manner of Handel—a coincidence that is chiefly worthy of remark as proving that, while the idiom of the age necessitated certain identities in the style of all contemporaneous musicians, the two greatest of them all had each such distinctive characteristic features that one instantly perceives the slightest leaning of either to the ways of the other. The materials of this piece are, firstly, a kind of double subject, in which the soprano and bass voices begin with one melodic motion, and are presently joined by the alto and tenor with another, the vocal distribution being reversed in the repetitions of the theme, and a parallel division of the wind and stringed instruments being employed in the orchestral interludes; and, secondly, a fugal point, whose answer is not strict nor its development extensive. The form is an alternative First and Second Parts, the latter of which, as is frequently the case in movements so framed, consists of some further working of the ideas presented in the First Part. "Glory to God Almighty" is the opening of the text, whence may be gathered the general expression of the music; but glorification is rendered in the breadth of the phrases rather than in the noise or even fulness of the instrumentation; and this Chorus is an instance of which the vocal music of Bach has many, of how great is the power of contrapuntal writing as compared with that in which the voices sing for the most part together in notes of equal length. The acoustical reason for this would be difficult to surmise, seeing that it is the reverse of what might be expected by one without experience; but facts supersede argument, and cruelly crush philosophy whenever philosophy has not reached the bottom of its subject.

The choruses of Handel, and of every other writer for voices, prove this as much as do those of our author. The slow eight-part introductory movements in "Israel in Egypt," like the chorals interspersed throughout the works of Bach, are grandly massive, it is true; but the real power—to repeat the definition that appears best to express the present meaning—of the choir, the fulness of tone that travels into all corners of a spacious building, the genuine majesty of sound, springs from that class of writing wherein every part has a melody independent of the others, with shorter or longer notes than they, and with a rhythm as different from theirs as is its accentuation. To make the voices of a choir sound many, let them sing a fugue or piece in which the parts are similarly contrived in relation to each other, is an axiom upon which every young writer may rest his total trust.

The Evangelist, represented by the tenor, resumes the story. Breaking in upon this, after the manner in which the multitudinous pieces intersperse the narrative in other works, framed on the same model as the present, is a Chorus of the Wise Men, enquiring where the new-born King may be found; and, although the words stand not in the Scriptures, the same terse, dramatic manner vivifies them in the setting as those elsewhere given on Gospel authority, and the amplification of the text is justified by the effect. Interrupting the many-voiced question, an alto Recitative exclaims, "Seek Him within my breast," and tells of the peace which is His harbinger. The scene—so it may be defined—is closed by a Choral, plainly harmonised as to counterpoint, but somewhat curiously as to the choice of chords and the keys through which it ranges.

An Air for bass (No. 47), in the key of F sharp minor, is a prayer for light to the heart; to which the minor form of the key gives earnestness of expression, but not melancholy. The ingenuity is conspicuous wherewith the bookwright has seized every suggestion of the sacred text upon which to found a comment that appropriates the situation to modern Christians, whose creed is transplanted to our northern regions, from the sunny slopes of Palestine; and the genius is wonderful that has breathed a living soul into the half metaphors, half dogmas, of the German libretto, and thus given them a voice that speaks to the very heart of men.

Then the Evangelist resumes, telling how Herod and all Jerusalem were troubled. As different in the depth of their expression, as in the manner of their accompaniment, are all the reflective pieces of Recitative from those which relate the circumstances of the story. This is made obvious in the interrogatory for the alto, as to why we should be troubled at the thought that the Lord is nigh who brings us comfort and hope, as opposed to the matter that surrounds this episode. The narrative is continued to the effect that Herod consulted the Scribes and Pharisees, who quoted ancient prophecy to assure him that Bethlehem should be the birthplace of the Messiah; and these words of the learned are set to a kind of melody, quite rhythmical, but of the formal, rigid cast that would fit it to stand, from generation to generation, among foresayings that may not be disputed.

It is rare in Bach to meet with a piece for three solo voices, but here, No. 51, is a specimen. In this Terzetto the soprano begins with an expressive melody, "Ah! when shall we see salvation?" with which in turn the tenor also enters, when it is involved in the counterpoint of the other voice. These two change and interchange the principal part and the counterpoint throughout the composition. Anon, the contralto introduces a distinctly different theme, "Peace, for surely this is He," and this part maintains its independence of the other two, the word "Peace" being often brought as response to their complaining "Ah!" the interest of each subject never being allowed to fail. To add to the complication of the three vocal parts, there is an obbligato accompaniment for a solo violin, spread over a wide extent of compass, which enriches but not confuses them.

The contralto Recitative (No. 52) declares, still pursuing the thought just enunciated, that the heart of man is the Redeemer's throne; and the final Choral (No. 53) meekly protests the unworthiness of the seat for Him who should rule therein. This division closes as it begins, in the key of A, contrasted strongly in tonality to the last preceding part, but having, like that, affinity to the master-key, D, which controls the entire oratorio. Part V. contains many incidents for admiration; but, particularly speaking, it is perhaps the least attractive portion of the work.

The festive character of the music for the first and third day is renewed in that for the Festival of the Epiphany, the sixth and last division of the oratorio. It is not only that we have the glittering rejoiceful tone of the trumpets and drums in the opening and closing numbers, but the jubilant spirit of which they are the voice now again shines forth in fullest brightness. The first Chorus (No. 54) triumphantly, with faith as firm in His will as in His power, exhorts the Lord to defend us against the assaults of our foes. Amid all the grandeur of this movement, two incidents, each several times repeated, particularly strike the attention with their extreme modernness of character and their extreme beauty of effect. The bass progression with the har-

—is one that may be found, indeed, in many a composition of yesterday; but, not to speak of its rare, or perhaps unique, employment a century and a half ago, its unexpected as brilliant effect in this situation is not excelled by any employment of the same course of chords in the latest writings, and its climax to a full close in the key of A major is most noble.

Again, the bass progression—

bB	#5	#F

—being shown by the context to be in the key of D major, is one of the gorgeous anticipations of the extreme use of chromatic harmony in the present day, which prove those mighty giants of the past to have stood, as it were in the clouds, overlooking all time to come, and proving that, whatever of good effect has since been produced, was foreseen, and indeed foreshadowed by them. These giants were Purcell, Handel, and Bach, for whom there are no words of fitting reverence.

The Evangelist proceeds, relating how Herod sent for the Sages, his words of enquiry of them, and his declaration that he will follow them and worship, being allotted, as in all like cases, to another voice. The Recitative for soprano, assuming the purpose of the king to be feigned, addresses him as the type of evil; and the ensuing Air, "Nought against the power He wieldeth," symbolises man's helplessness against ill, if he be unassisted by heavenly support.

Nos. 58 and 60 pursue the Gospel story as to how the wise men made their offerings, and, in obedience to a preternatural warning, departed without returning to the Jewish King. They are divided by the Choral, "Beside Thy cradle," which brings the act of worship and sacrifice home to us, who are reminded of the first oblations to the infant Deity. The tenor for a second time leaves the part of the Evangelist, and, in an accompanied Recitative, shows the unconcern we should feel at the departure of external riches, so long as we retain the priceless treasure of divine love. This leads to one of those pieces which are prominent amid the constant beauty of the whole, the Air in B minor for the same voice, "Ye foes of man," which, with deep feeling but entire sincerity, defies all might against one who is guarded by the shield of faith. A curious point of harmony marks the chief theme of this piece, the theme which begins it and is many times repeated in its course.

B	D	#C	#A
D	#F	E	#C

 —which naturally enough fits over a B bass; but then it is given again, over G in the bass, in spite of the sharp F, when it is followed by D bass, bearing a first inversion, and the effect is as good as the progression is rare. In the beginning of Mendelssohn's Octet for string instruments is a like retention of the dominant note over a chord of the submediant, with a like leap from the bass note; and it is interesting to trace this prominently beautiful thought to its possible prototype.

No. 63 is somewhat like in structure to the last but one piece in the Matthew Passion. It is a Recitative, so styled, for the four solo voices; which, entering successively with the same phrase, are combined in constantly fuller and fuller harmony. The music does some sort of violence to its definition, seeing that it is not possible, nor, indeed, desirable of performance, otherwise than in measured time; yet it justifies the title, Recitative, in so much as it is not rhythmical, and declaims its four brief sentences, rather than sings them to a distinct melody. It is an introduction to the Choral that closes the entire work, which has the same melody as No. 5 in this oratorio—the melody that has now become familiar to English ears, from its several times use in the Matthew Passion. The tune is here employed as a song of triumph, to which end it is embroidered with interludes and counterpoint, of exulting brightness, including the flourish of trumpets and drums, and passages that best bring out the tone of all the other instruments; and it peals from amid this din of joy, as would thunder peal through the turmoil of the elements, were thunder the voice of gladness instead of destruction. To compare its settings as "Now, vengeance," with that as "How shall I fitly," is eminently interesting; but to extend the comparison to the five settings in that other work of Bach, and especially to regard the present grand outburst of joy with the last of those five, "If I should e'er forsake Thee," that most pathetic of all musical expressions of grief, displays perhaps the versatility of the tune, and certainly the mighty power of the master.

These remarks are upon Bach's beautiful work, not upon any particular edition, and the quotation of titles from that published by Novello, Ewer and Co. has been for convenience of reference. A separate essay might discuss the fidelity to the music and the fidelity to the original text of translations, therein and elsewhere presented, and might treat of the manner in which the master's works generally have been placed, in respect of adapted words, before the English public—it is a subject that demands serious consideration, and far larger space than can here be spared. The Christmas Oratorio is of a nature, speaking of the music, to take quicker and firmer hold of popular attention than could the Passion, since it not only contains the joyous element which is entirely absent in the other, but also possesses far greater variety and contrast. A portion of it was publicly performed in 1868 at a concert of the Royal Academy of Music under the direction of Mr. W. G. Cusins, and a portion also at one of the Concerts of Ancient and Modern Music at another period, under Herr Schachner's direction. It was first offered to a London audience in a shape approaching completeness, at a Concert of Mr. Barnby's Choir, which he conducted, on the 15th of December last, when its reception warranted the above surmise, and gave fair ground to expect that it may become here a great and permanent favourite. The world must be the better and the wiser for familiarity with this noble music, and the double opportunity to hear it and to read it is most propitious to a true and wide knowledge of its beauty.

NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR MUSIC.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

MUSICAL people may, and do, differ about a great many things, but they must all agree that, up to the present, very inadequate provision has been made in England for musical education. The Royal Academy of Music, and a few institutions carried on by private enterprise, have done something to meet the artistic wants of the age, but they have obviously and lamentably failed to do enough. In saying this we intend no censure upon any of the persons immediately concerned; though, if put to it, we should be very far from admitting that the Royal Academy has, at all times, done the best possible. While withholding unqualified approbation, however, it must be granted that the Tenterden Street Institution has struggled against serious obstacles. For years it languished under the "cold shade" of aristocratic protection, to the enjoyment of which the public left it; and when that protection was no longer available, the task of exciting general sympathy in its favour was found a hard one. The professors stuck to their work nobly, making sacrifices which never should have been required of them, and within the last few years good results have appeared, with a promise of others still better by-and-by. But the Royal Academy, as now constituted, can never be adequate to the task of national musical education. Its means are too small, and its prestige too insignificant for a mission so great. But necessity is absolute. The task must be undertaken and accomplished, if England means to keep even a respectable place among musical nations. So thought the Society of Arts eight years ago, when it was first resolved to found a National Training School for Music, and so think now a great many people who are able and willing to help on the work. But it may be asked—Why did the Society of Arts not devote its energies to the enlargement and complete equipment of the Institution already existing? The question is a very proper one, and much more obvious than the answer to it can be. Here is an Academy half a century old, established by Royal Charter, in full work to the extent of its means, and possessing a staff of eminent teachers, with the foremost English musician of the day at their head. Surely common sense, if not common decency, must have suggested that, before starting a rival enterprise, efforts should be made in favour of the Royal Academy. But, as far as we yet know, the Society of Arts paid no heed to these suggestions. It had a scheme of its own, and would probably have never given a thought to Tenterden Street but for His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, who, as was made known in his speech at the Albert Hall on the 18th ult., advised that something should be done to connect the proposed new institution with the old. When a Royal Duke advises, and offers to carry out his advice in person, refusal is not to be thought of; and hence a prospect arose, for the first time, of that union which is strength. The story of the negotiations between His Royal Highness and the authorities of the Academy has yet to be told in fullness sufficient to explain why they came to nothing. We heard from the Duke of Edinburgh, in the speech already referred to, that the fundamental principles of the two institutions were found wholly incompatible. This needs explanation, because the fundamental principles of the new school are the choice of pupils by competition, and free education—principles already acknowledged and acted upon at the Royal Academy, as far as its limited means will allow. But, with our present light, it is of no use to speculate upon the causes leading to the failure of the Duke of Edinburgh's well-meant scheme; and, while waiting for more light, we have simply to express regret that strength which might be employed in mutual assistance should be spent in mere rivalry.

Apart from the question referred to above, the prospect of a new Training School for Music is one that everybody will welcome, especially as in the present case there are features of peculiar value. It has often been said that, while the other Arts receive abundant patronage from public bodies, and high-placed individuals, Music, the most universal and beneficent of all, is treated with neglect. The charge once had truth in it, beyond question; but the proceedings at the Royal Albert Hall, on December 18, proved that there is truth in it no longer. When Royalty, Ministers of State, and representatives of the aristocracy of rank, wealth, and intellect come forward to do practical work for Music, we see the best possible evidence that a change has taken place. Here let us be just to the Society of Arts. The Council, and guiding spirits of that Society, may have peculiar views of how the work of musical education should be carried on—views from which many persons may dissent—but, at any rate, they have given admirable proof of a desire that education should be imparted somehow. These gentlemen have nothing to gain from the success of their endeavours, save that noblest of all gain—a consciousness of having done a good thing. They stand quite apart from the charge of interested motives; and the fact deserves remembrance not less than the other fact that, being disinterested, they have laboured with uncommon zeal. It should be borne in mind, also, that the School now founded on the basis of voluntary subscriptions, is but a single step towards the Society's ultimate object—a school supported and controlled by the State. Considering how reluctantly the Government does out an annual £500 to the Royal Academy of Music, this object may seem a hopeless one; but who can tell what a change will take place in five years? Events march quickly, and public opinion is formed rapidly, in these days, so that we shall not be surprised to find Government, at the end of the term just named, gladly taking over the School, and making it an adjunct to the general scheme of national education. In England, Government follows, it does not lead; and the Society of Arts is well advised to show the way.

With regard to the constitution of the School much might be said, but we will only draw attention to one feature of very special value—the establishment of free scholarships in favour of particular towns and counties, &c. This will serve the purpose for which the French Conservatoire has branch establishments in various parts of the country;—that is, it will find out and bring to light musical talent wherever that precious gift is bestowed. In reference to music, more than to any other art, it may be said that "full many a flower is born to blush unseen." Talent is not rare, but when there are no opportunities for its cultivation, it runs to waste, and had better never have existed. The plan of the new School will supply those opportunities. Each county, and many smaller divisions than counties, will have their representative student at Kensington, and every youthful musician will be encouraged to compete for the honour, no matter how poor his means. It is impossible not to anticipate great results from the working of this system. At any rate it will test the wealth of England in musical ability, and reveal the position we hold in that respect as compared with other nations. One feature in the scheme is conspicuous by its absence from the "Statement" lately read in the Royal Albert Hall. Nothing whatever was said with regard to those who will be charged with the practical working of the School, and we cannot but think the omission a grave one. It may be all very well to tell us of what distinguished persons the governing body will consist, but rank and position do not excite confidence when the work in hand is of so technical a nature. The public, whose support is asked, know that such a Committee as that announced have nothing but the best intentions to prevent their going altogether wrong. What is needed, therefore, is the guarantee of some distinguished musical names. Who is to be the Principal of the new School? what are the number and character of its Professors? and what the distinctive features of its teaching? When these questions are answered the public will have information, without which any action on their part means a leap in the dark. Let us hope that present doubts will soon be set at rest in such a manner that all lovers of music may, with heart and soul, do their best to make the new Training School for Music a blessing to the nation.

THE official reply to the Memorial addressed to the Education Department by the Council of the Tonic Sol-Fa College, which has just been forwarded to us, is too long for insertion; but we may say that the document is a fair defence of the line of conduct pursued by Mr. Hullah during his late examination of the Training Schools. Those, however, who merely desire that the best system of teaching vocal music shall prevail, will be sorry to find that the question has almost settled down into a controversy between Mr. Curwen, backed by the members of the Tonic Sol-Fa College, and Mr. Hullah, backed by the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education. It is just possible that the truth may be with neither of the combatants, and that partisans therefore on both sides may be blinded by their zeal, and thus rendered incapable of calmly considering the question in all its bearings. It is not because Mr. Curwen has proved that the "moveable do" is the natural system of noting music for class-singers that his method of arranging letters in a straight line should universally obtain. There is much to be said for the staff, whatever may be the number of lines it contains; and we have a fixed conviction that it will never disappear, even if vocal music for classes should ultimately be printed relatively instead of absolutely.

WE have received the prospectus of a new Association, called "The British Musical and Dramatic Institute," expressly established for the study and practice of Music and the Drama. Professional instruction will be given, at a greatly reduced rate, to students desirous of appearing in public, either in the concert-room or on the stage; and one of the benefits held out as an inducement to become a member is that frequent opportunities will be afforded of performing in a concert-hall before managers of theatrical and operatic establishments and critics of the press. We can scarcely see that the list of professors engaged will convince the public that "high class finishing instruction" (at least in the musical department) can be guaranteed; but perhaps in the course of time other names may be added to the staff of teachers, and experience may dictate the modification of certain rules now laid down to which we might take exception, were we not inclined to wish success to the undertaking. The Institute is at 45, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury Square, and the Secretary and Manager is Mr. Charles Sleigh.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

At the ninth Saturday concert Mr. Franklin Taylor's performance of Sir Sterndale Bennett's new pianoforte Sonata, "The Maid of Orleans," was a conspicuous feature: he played it—according to the latest fashion—from memory, and thoroughly won the applause with which his excellent rendering of the work was greeted. Beethoven's Cantata, "Praise of Music," composed to celebrate the "Congress of Vienna," like most compositions written to "order," is not one of the great master's best. It contains, of course, many beauties, one of the most conspicuous of which is the air for soprano and chorus (with solo violin part), which produced perhaps the greatest effect upon a by no means demonstrative audience. The principal singers were Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Emily Spiller, Messrs. George Fox, and Vernon Rigby; and Herr Straus was the solo violinist. At the following concert, on the 6th ult., an opportunity of commemorating the death of Mozart (which occurred on December 5th, 1791,) was eagerly seized upon, the programme being chiefly composed of his works. No better choice could have been made for the interpretation of the pianoforte concerto in E flat than that of Miss Agnes Zimmermann, a fact which was amply proved by the result. Her true artistic feeling, sympathetic touch, and fluency of execution were never more advantageously displayed than on this occasion; and the highest praise must also be awarded for the two cadenzas, of her own composition, which she introduced, the first, especially, although elaborate, being thoroughly appropriate. The Overture, "La Vilanella Rapita," and the Symphony in G minor, were the orchestral pieces selected, and a decided impression was created upon the audience by Miss Sterling, who in "Quando miro" evidenced the possession of a fine and well-trained voice, and a highly cultivated style. The same cannot be said of Madlle. St. Alba, who made but little effect in the air from Mozart's "Zaida," and less still when, later in the concert, she unwisely attempted Meyerbeer's Scena, "Robert, toi que j'aime." At the eleventh and last concert of the year, on the 13th ult., Dr. Hans von Bülow's performance of Liszt's Concerto, No. 1, in E flat, produced an enthusiasm which thoroughly proved the hold he has taken of the English public. That on this occasion the most demonstrative marks of approbation were fairly earned is beyond a question, for Liszt's works imperatively demand such powers as Herr von Bülow brings to the task, and we are glad, therefore, to find that he takes such frequent opportunities of introducing his music to an English audience. Beethoven's ninth Symphony formed a fitting termination to the series of concerts. The solo portions were well sung by Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Werrenrath, and Mr. G. Fox. Mr. Manns has been, as usual, an able conductor throughout the season.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

THE powers of this choir were fairly tested at the third concert, on the 27th November, when Handel's "Israel in Egypt" was given. The choruses, "He gave them hailstones," "He led them through the deep," and "The people shall hear," may be especially selected for unqualified praise, not only on account of the precision with which the points were attacked, but for the perfect management of tone throughout. The experiment of giving the duet, "The Lord is a man of war," to the whole of the male voices, we are bound to say was thoroughly successful with the listeners, for it was encored and—contrary to Mr. Barnby's usual custom—repeated. Finely as it was sung, however, we are by no means inclined to favour an innovation which has no right to be judged either by the triumphant manner in which the singers vanquished the difficulties of the piece, or by its effect upon a mixed audience, but solely by those rules which should guide us as executors in carrying out the explicit intentions of a departed genius. The solo singers were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Ferrari, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Kerr Gedge, all of whom were highly efficient, Mr. Sims Reeves's exquisite delivery of the air, "The enemy said," raising such an universal demand for an encore that the performance was for some time suspended, although the request was wisely not complied with. The additional accompaniments of Mr. G. A. Macfarren lent much brightness to the general effect of the work. The production of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" at the fourth concert, on the 15th ult., added one more to the successful revivals of neglected works for which we are indebted to Mr. Barnby and the energetic forces under his direction. Although in six divisions, each written for performance on a separate day, its title, "Oratorium Tempore Nativitatis Christi," seems to justify its right to be heard as one entire composition, and certainly its construction makes its presentation in this form thoroughly satisfactory to the listeners. As in the "Passion Music," the chorals running through the work are a distinctive feature, and rendered as they were by Mr. Barnby's choir, produced a marked impression. All the choruses, too, were sung with an earnestness which proved that the vocalists knew the importance of the duty assigned to them, and the devotional feeling which animated the composer whilst writing them was so fully shared by the audience that, despite the secular character of the building in which they were heard, they were received rather with silent pleasure than demonstrative enthusiasm. Few of the solos detached from their places in the work would be effective; but amongst the exceptional instances we must mention the Slumber song, "Sleep, my beloved" (most expressively sung by Madame Patey), the air, "Lord Almighty" (in which Signor Agnesi's fine voice was heard to much advantage), and the solo, "'Tis Thee I would be praising," the excessive difficulties of which were surmounted by Mr. W. H. Cummings with an artistic skill which cannot be too highly praised. In the trying soprano recitatives Madame Otto-Alvsleben again proved herself a thoroughly reliable and intellectual vocalist, and her Duet with Signor Agnesi, "Lord, Thy mercy," was one of the great successes of the evening. Bach's original score was as perfectly realised as could be attempted with a modern orchestra, the obsolete instruments being in all cases represented by those as nearly as possible identical in quality of tone. The "Pastoral Symphony" (which, it must be remembered, was written before that in Handel's "Messiah") was rendered to perfection, and warmly applauded. We are absolved from the necessity of attempting any analysis of the "Christmas Oratorio" from the fact of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's detailed notice of the work appearing in our present number; and it remains, therefore, only to warmly congratulate every person concerned in the performance upon its success, and to express a hope that it may now take a permanent place amongst the resuscitated masterpieces of Bach. In conclusion, we may say that the principal singers we have already mentioned exerted themselves to the utmost in giving due expression to the incidental recitatives, and that, although there was, as might be expected, but little applause, their efforts were thoroughly appreciated. At the fifth concert, on Christmas Eve, Handel's "Messiah" was most appropriately selected for performance, the solo parts being sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby (who sang instead of Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from indisposition), and Signor Agnesi, in place of Signor Giulio Perkin, who was to have made his first appearance in London on the occasion, but from whom a telegram was received at the last moment announcing his inability to sing. The choruses, especially "For unto us" and the "Hallelujah," created their usual effect upon the listeners (perhaps even enhanced by their peculiar fitness for the occasion), and we need scarcely say that the singers whose names are a guarantee for excellence, were thoroughly efficient. At all the concerts we have noticed Mr. Barnby conducted with his usual care and judgment, and Dr. Stainer rendered most valuable service at the organ.

WE record with much regret the decease, during the past month, of Mr. George Flower, for nineteen years the Collector to the Royal Society of Musicians. Mr. Flower was an able musician; and his funeral, which took place at Brompton Cemetery on the 16th ult., was attended by many of his brother professors.

WE have received glowing accounts of the success of Master Harry Walker, the young pianist, who is now making an artistic tour in America, under the care of Mrs. Scott-Siddons. At Boston his playing has created quite a sensation, his powers having been fairly tested in the most varied styles of music. The American papers are quite right in stating that he has gained the silver medal at the Royal Academy of Music in London, but quite wrong in saying that he ever studied under Sir Sterndale Bennett: his master was Mr. Frederick Bowen Jewson, one of the oldest and most esteemed professors of the Institution.

FROM an interesting account in the Leipziger Intelligenzblatt, of Louis Francois Philipp Drouet (at one time an eminent flute player), who recently died in Switzerland, at the age of 82, we make the following extract:—

"Mons. Drouet was born of a French father and Dutch mother at Amsterdam, in 1792, the Revolution having driven his father from France. At a very early age he displayed a wonderful aptitude for the flute. It is recorded by his family that the first flute he ever had was part of a clumsy wooden toy, from which he very soon produced airs from ear, and even little pieces of his own invention, though only three years old. At his own request he was soon supplied with a better flute, and his father allowed him to have lessons from a master. The boy now made such rapid progress that, though barely four years old, he was able to play before an audience of more than 2,000 people a concerto by Devienne, and a prelude of his own! declared by musicians present at the concert to be very difficult to execute, and something so far unapproached. The little virtuoso was from that moment the only support of the Drouet family,—he travelled with his father all through Holland and France, and made quite a furor wherever he appeared. Although he had had no more than forty lessons in music, he read at sight all that was put before him, he composed his own pieces, and in all respects he may be said to have taught himself. At the age of 12 young Drouet arranged for his own instrument the violin concertos of Viotti, Rode, Kreutzer, and others; he also composed a large number of pieces, opening up a field of execution so far unknown. In the year 1807 Drouet returned to Holland, and played before Louis Napoleon, the then King of Holland and brother to the great Napoleon; he soon after this accepted an appointment in the orchestra of Queen Hortense, mother of the late Emperor of the French. It was at Utrecht that he composed the famous air, 'Partant pour la Syrie,' for which her Majesty herself had written the words. The air became for the French Empire what the 'Marseillaise' had been for the French Republic. In England he made a long stay, and travelled there a good deal with the famous singer, Mrs. Salmon. After quitting England he went to St. Petersburg, touching Berlin on his way, where he was much distinguished by the king. From thence he visited Finland, Lapland, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and lastly Germany and Italy; in Vienna he made the acquaintance of Mozart's younger son, and in Milan he met with the elder son, who then held an appointment at the post office. At Naples he took the conductorship of the Royal Opera, which honourable position he held for three years. Grief at the loss of his mother, father, and other dear friends, threw him on a sick bed, and although he recovered his bodily health, his mind remained gloomy and dejected; he shunned the intercourse of friends, and his flute was never touched. For several years nothing was heard of him, and he was thought to be dead; but at last he was found to be living in perfect retirement in a village. A letter from Felix Mendelssohn, then about 20 years old, and whose acquaintance he had made when a boy, drew him from his retreat, and he again began his travels, intending to visit all parts of the world, when he made the acquaintance of Miss Taillan, to whom he was married, and the projected tour was given up. He again visited England in 1841, and was presented to the Queen by Prince Albert himself. He played before the Queen with great success, and the kindnesses he received from Prince Albert during his stay in England were highly appreciated by Drouet, upon whom they made a lasting impression."

MR. FRED. MARSH, choirmaster of S. Ethelburga, Bishopsgate, gave his annual concert on Monday, the 8th ult., at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, before a large audience. Miss E. McQuire and Miss Granville received encores for their songs, and a débutante, Madame R. A. Schröder, elicited much applause for her rendering of a German and Italian song, and for an encore gave, with good expression, "Home, sweet home." Masters Davis and Marsh did much credit to their vocal teacher, and Messrs. S. Crome, W. Thompson, D. Holden, and Vernon Ridge, are also deserving of praise. Mr. Marsh was assisted by his choir of boys, who were highly successful in the popular "Spring chorus." Messrs. W. Miller and W. Crome presided at the piano, as accompanists.

AN Organ Recital was given on Wednesday evening, the 10th ult., at St. Matthew's, Brixton, by Mr. Geo. Shinn, organist of the church. During the evening several anthems were sung by the choir.

THE December concert of the St. George's Glee Union took place on the 5th ult. at the Pimlico Rooms, the large hall being crowded with the members and friends of the Society. The performance commenced with the overture to "Le Domino Noir," excellently played on two pianos by Mesdames Buley, Matthews, Pritchard and Stroud. This was followed by Mr. A. S. Sullivan's Cantata, "On Shore and Sea," which was rendered in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. The solo parts were well sustained by Miss J. King and Mr. J. R. Jekyll, who sang throughout with excellent taste, and were encores in the duet, "Here on thy heart," a like compliment being paid to the choir for the effective rendering of "Link and Scatter." The second part included the glees, "Blow, blow" and "Here in cool grot," by the choir; a pianoforte solo (brilliantly played by Miss Matthews) and songs by Miss Holden, Miss Stroud and Messrs. Warren and Ellis. Mr. Garside conducted with his usual ability.

A MUSICAL performance by the blind pupils of the London Society for teaching the Blind to Read, was given at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, on the 12th ult. The first part was confined to sacred music, and consisted principally of selections from the "Messiah." The second part was secular. The rendering of all the pieces was thoroughly satisfactory, the general musical cultivation of the pupils bearing high testimony as to the excellent training to which they are subjected by their conductor, Mr. Edwin Barnes. The chair was occupied by the Rev. Daniel Moore, M.A.

At the re-opening of All Saints' Church, Norfolk Square, Hyde Park, the fine organ, built by Messrs. Hill and Son, was ably displayed by Mr. F. Barnes, organist to the church. It is situated in the north gallery, and although not quite finished, the appearance, as well as the tone of the instrument, gave general satisfaction.

The concert of Mr. Walter Bache, which was given at St. James's Hall, on the 27th November, was chiefly devoted to the performance of his master, Dr. Liszt's works, and other specimens of that class of composition which—seeing how much it is played in the present day—it appears absurd to name the "music of the future." The two "Poèmes Symphoniques," by Liszt ("Tasso: Lamento e Trionfo" and "Orpheus"), were well played by the orchestra; and in spite of a want of connection and diffuseness in the general treatment of the subjects, the audience found enough to justify a very decided expression of feeling upon their merits. Mr. Bache's execution of Weber's "Polonaise Brillante" (arranged by Liszt for Pianoforte and Orchestra) and of several less important solos, was the theme of universal admiration. The vocalist was Madame Otto-Alvsleben.

THE concert of the Wagner Society, on the 12th ult., conducted by Dr. Hans von Bülow and Mr. Edward Dannreuther, was, as it should be, mainly devoted to the works of the composer whose name the Association bears. Much as we admire the selections which have now been given often enough for the public to judge of their abstract merits as descriptive music, we are as far off as ever from being able to test the effect of a continuous Opera; and as Herr Wagner demands to be tried by an audience in an opera-house, and not in a concert-room, it appears strange that the efforts of this Society should not be directed towards effecting a stage performance of one of his most representative Operas. Meanwhile, however, we are bound to say that the concerts given by this Society are excellent; and we sincerely trust that they may receive the support they deserve.

THE Recitals of Dr. Hans von Bülow have gradually increased in attraction, the final one, on the 20th ult., being attended by such a crowd of attentive and enthusiastic listeners that the pianist was only allowed room in the orchestra to gain a free passage to his seat. Unquestionably his greatest performance has been Beethoven's Sonata in B flat (Op. 106), the "Scherzo" and final movement of which (the latter including the immensely difficult "Fuga a tre voci") were encored, and, to the wonder of the audience, repeated with rather an increase than a diminution of power. Weber's Sonata in D minor was also a marvellous exhibition of executive facility, his grasp of the passages, however, occasionally leading him into an over display of his exceptional gifts which somewhat disturbs the equanimity of those whose attention is directed only to the realisation of the composer's meaning. At the last Recital Herr Bülow was assisted by M. Sainton (violin) and M. Lasserre (violin-cello), some vocal pieces being contributed by Madlle. Nita Gaetano. Mozart's Trio in E major, and Beethoven's in B flat (Op. 97) were finely played on the occasion; and amongst the best of Herr Bülow's smaller pianoforte solos were Rubinstein's Barcarole in G major and Liszt's "Ronde des Lutins," both of which were given to perfection.

HERR ERNST PAUER's lectures at the South Kensington Museum should be attended by all who take a real interest in the history of music. Those on the "Art and Science of Pianoforte-playing" not only contain excellent material for thought, but the illustrations are given in such a finished manner as materially to heighten the attraction of the lecturer's remarks. The subject of "Dance Music," which he has also discoursed upon, has given him opportunity for affording some valuable information. The "Suite," in which dance-forms were chiefly used, and even the "Symphony," which for so long retained the "Minuet" as one of the movements, were cited in proof of the important effect which dance music has exercised upon the composers even of the classical school; and the specimens of the various dances which were placed before the audience elicited warm and deserved applause. The lectures will be resumed next month.

MR. J. KENDRICK PYNE, Organist of Chichester Cathedral, having accepted an important appointment in Philadelphia, U. S. America, has just left England. He carries with him a pleasant souvenir in the shape of a letter signed by all the members of his late choir, of which the following is a copy:—"Chichester, December 1873. To J. K. Pyne, Esq., Organist and Choirmaster, Chichester Cathedral. Dear Sir,—With feelings of deep regret, we, the lay vicars of Chichester Cathedral, anticipate your early departure from amongst us. We feel that we cannot permit you to leave England for your new home in America without expressing to you how much real pleasure we have derived from your comparatively short sojourn in Chichester. Musically you have delighted us; socially you have equally endeared yourself to us. Rest assured you will carry with you our best wishes. We most cordially wish you every success, and that your hopes and expectations may be fully realised.—J. Barber, Wm. Osmond, Wm. Dean, W. R. Young, Jas. Burrows, Fred. Fisher, Herbert Newman." We have every reason to believe that this kindly expression of cordiality is well deserved by the recipient, and that his loss will be felt in the Cathedral he has left.

WE understand that Bach's St. Matthew Passion will in all probability be heard again during the approaching season of Lent, both at St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey, and the St. John Passion at St. Anne's Church, Soho. It is also stated that Dr. Garrett, organist of St. John's College Chapel, Cambridge, will produce the greater Passion at a special service at one of the churches in Cambridge. It is satisfactory to record this awakening on the part of the Church of England to the fact that Music, in its highest form, is a powerful and legitimate means of quickening and stimulating true devotional feeling.

WE regret to record the somewhat sudden death of Mr. William Coward, a brother of the well-known organist of the Crystal Palace. His musical education commenced as a chorister at Westminster Abbey at a time when Westminster was famous for its boy-singers. After he attained to manhood he became widely known as an Alto singer, possessing an exceptional refinement of taste and style. In these respects his death will be severely felt at the Glee Societies, where his services were much valued. But more than all is his loss mourned by those who enjoyed his friendship.

A CONCERT was given at the Store Street Hall by Miss Fanny Henman on Monday evening the 8th ult. The concert-giver was assisted by Miss Isabel Weale, Miss Rosina Houghton, Miss Fannie Reed, Mr. Henry Parkin, Mr. J. Terry, and Mr. Albert C. Baker, all of whom were very successful in their songs, the audience testifying their satisfaction by re-demanding several. Miss Fanny Henman, Miss Rosa Henman, Miss Jennie Seller, and Miss Lillie Allum gave several pianoforte solos and duets; and the London Vocal Union, conducted by Mr. George Wells, contributed several glees and part-songs. Miss F. Henman acted as accompanist.

ON Saturday evening, the 20th ult., Mr. Levy, the well-known cornet player, gave a concert at the Shoreditch Town Hall, supported by the following artists—Madame Pauline Rita, Madame Sylvani, Mr. Stedman, Signor Camero, and Signor Valenti (vocalists); Madlle. Pepita Mariategui, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, and Mr. Shedlock (pianoforte), Mr. Viotti Collins (violin), and Mr. Radcliffe (flute). The various songs, &c., were well rendered, Madame Pauline Rita, in Gounod's "Ave Maria," Mr. Stedman, in "The Anchor's weighed," Signor Camero, in "La donna e mobile," and Mr. Viotti Collins, in his violin solo, "Carnival de Cuba," obtaining enthusiastic encores. Mr. Levy was much applauded, and received an encore for each of his three cornet solos.

A CONCERT was given on Tuesday evening, the 16th ult., at the New Hall, Middle Class School, Cowper Street, City Road. The vocalists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Dones, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom gave great satisfaction. Miss Dones received an encore for her rendering of "The Storm," and Mr. Stedman was much applauded for his song, "The Anchor's weighed," as was also Mr. Beale, for his song, "The Mariner." The Amphion Glee Union contributed several glees, and the boys' choir of the school sang, with much effect, a choral march, "Forward, boys," by Mr. F. L. Jones. The instrumental music consisted of the Overture to "Don Giovanni," and a valse, by Borschitzky, both played by Miss Burnett (pianoforte), Mr. Dean (flute), and Mr. Borschitzky (violin). Mr. F. L. Jones was the conductor, and much credit is due to him for the careful manner in which he has trained the boys' choir of the school. The hall was well filled by an enthusiastic audience.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The competition for the Westmorland Scholarship and the Potter Exhibition took place on Monday, the 22nd ult., at the Institution in Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, the examiners being the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. H. C. Lunn, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. Walter Macfarren, and Dr. Steggall. The results were as follows:—Westmorland Scholarship, Miss Emma L. Beasley, re-elected. Five pounds each (from the Academy funds) towards the cost of a year's instruction in the Institution, awarded to Miss M. A. Williams, Miss Rhoda E. Barkley, and Miss Henrica van Sender. Potter Exhibition, Mr. Walter Fitton, elected.

WE regret to have to record the death, on St. Thomas's Day, of the Rev. James Lupton, M.A., Minor Canon of St. Paul's and of Westminster Abbey. He was a man of remarkable industry, sincerity, and fearlessness, and to his special duties brought musical ability of no mean order. He was born in York, in 1799, and at an early age became one of the chorists of the Minster. His studious habits so impressed the Dean (Markham) that he obtained for him a servitorship at Christ Church. Mr. Lupton's name appears in the second class in the Mathematical School in 1822. He was ordained in 1824, and became successively chaplain of Christ Church and of New College. In 1827 he was appointed to the Christ Church living of Blackbourn, in Oxfordshire, where his labours have resulted in a restored church, new schools, a new vicarage, and an income doubled in value, not to allude to other labours, less visible, but none the less real. In 1829 he was appointed Minor Canon of St. Paul's and of Westminster Abbey, and in 1832 he was presented by the Chapter of St. Paul's to the Rectory of St. Michael's, Queenhithe. It should be mentioned that for most of his life, the income from this apparently imposing array of preferments did not exceed £600 a year. There have been, and are, pluralists and pluralists. Mr. Lupton certainly cannot be credited with having derived his clerical income from a single source, but his were no golden stalls, no fat livings. The days of pluralities are passed away, and one is glad of it. Men are more likely to do hearty and efficient work, when their energies are concentrated upon one field of labour, than when they are divided among many. It is also no longer possible to accumulate dignities and benefices upon some favoured head, while the labouring oar is taken by a poor overdriven clerical hack, on the pay of an upper servant. And that this is so, in the case of the non-capitular members of Cathedral Establishments, the Church has to thank, in a great measure, men like Mr. Lupton, whose intimate knowledge of ecclesiastical law and Cathedral finance, combined with a boldness which refused to be frowned into silence, has done much to improve the status of Minor Canons and Vicars Choral. For these efforts, as well as for his remarkable efficiency in the performance of his Cathedral duties, Mr. Lupton's name deserves to be held in remembrance.

REVIEWS.

HURST AND BLACKETT.

Life of Moscheles; with Selections from his Diaries and Correspondence, by his Wife. Adapted from the original German by A. D. Coleridge.

THE life of so earnest and thoughtful an artist as Moscheles would be deeply interesting, were it only a record of his career written by those whose authenticity could be confidently relied upon; but in these two volumes we have such copious extracts from his diaries and correspondence, that his impressions upon the art he so dearly loved, and his many relations with the most celebrated of his musical contemporaries, may be said to be almost invariably related in his own words. It is satisfactory, too, in perusing these recollections, to know that they are given to the world by the express desire of Moscheles himself; and when we say that they are collected and arranged under the supervision of his wife—who thoroughly shared her husband's artistic enthusiasm—it is scarcely necessary to add that a care has been bestowed upon every portion of the work, which materially enhances its value. Moscheles was born at Prague on the 30th of May, 1794; and in his early days the horrors of the French Revolution were constantly discussed in his presence. Playing at soldiers was the favourite amusement of the boys; and when the military band performed in front of the guard-house, the young Moscheles often held the music before the bandsmen, and would return from these open-air concerts, exclaiming enthusiastically, "I, too, will be a musician." Whilst listening to his sister's somewhat clumsy pianoforte playing, he felt impelled to assert that he could perform her pieces better himself; and a trial of his powers being granted, he was permitted to take lessons, made, of course, rapid advancement, and was in a short time petted by his indiscreet friends as an "infant prodigy." Luckily his father had the good sense to perceive that his son was gradually being spoiled by this indiscriminate flattery, and at once put a check to the mischief by taking him to Dionys Weber. Moscheles, having been decked out by his mother in his "Sunday best" expressly for the occasion, sat down at the pianoforte, with some conceit, to play Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique." The opinion of Dionys Weber should be written in letters of gold, and hung up in every musical educational establishment: "Candidly speaking," he said, "the boy is on the wrong road, for he makes a hash of great works, which he does not understand, and to which he is utterly unequal. But he has talent, and I could make something of him if you would hand him over to me for three years, and follow out my plan to the letter. The first year he must play nothing but Mozart, the second Clementi, and the third Bach; but only that—not a note as yet of Beethoven, and if he persists in using the circulating libraries, I have done with him for ever." To all these stipulations his father willingly assented, and thus the foundation of his future success was securely laid. His journey to Vienna opened to him a new world in art, for during his residence there he studied thorough bass and counterpoint under Albrechtsberger, and at musical parties was constantly in the habit of meeting Beethoven. After quitting the Imperial city his artistic career fairly commenced. In Paris he created a real sensation, and his fame was so firmly established, that on his arrival in London his lessons were eagerly sought for by young ladies who desired to acquire some of the qualities for which his playing was so celebrated. On his return to Vienna, after the London season, Moscheles paid a visit to Beethoven, accompanied by his brother, and his account of this interview we give in his own words: "Arrived at the house-door," he says, "I had some misgivings, knowing Beethoven's dislike to strangers, and asked my brother to wait below whilst I felt my way. After short greetings, I asked Beethoven, 'May I be allowed to introduce my brother to you?' He replied hurriedly, 'Where is he, then?' 'Below,' was the answer. 'What! below?' said he, with some vehemence; then rushed down stairs, seized my astonished brother by the arm, and dragged him into the middle of his room, exclaiming, 'Am I so barbarously rude and unapproachable?' He then showed great kindness to the stranger. Unfortunately, on account of his deafness, we could only converse by writing."

In Berlin Moscheles appeared to consider all musical matters unimportant as compared with his reception by the Mendelssohn family. After his first visit he writes about the young Felix thus: "This is a family the like of which I have never known. Felix, a boy of fifteen, is a phenomenon. What are all prodigies as compared with him? Gifted children, but nothing else. This Felix Mendelssohn is already a mature artist, and yet but fifteen years old." That Moscheles afterwards gave the young Mendelssohn lessons—although, as he says, always remembering that he was "sitting next to a master, not a pupil"—and that the sympathy between these two artists ripened into a firm personal attachment, which lasted until Mendelssohn's premature death, is now well known. But in this book we have descriptions of days and evenings passed together so vividly told as to excite the utmost interest, even with those already conversant with the many "published recollections" of the young composer. Some idea of the delightful time spent in each other's company during Mendelssohn's visit to London may be gathered from the following detached extracts from Moscheles's diary:—"April 25th—Mendelssohn, Klingemann, Meyerbeer, and Madame Schröder-Devrient dined with us. Felix and I played his symphony." "April 30th.—To-day Mendelssohn played us his cantata, 'Die Erste Walpurgisnacht,' which I had heard and admired in former days in Berlin. He also played me that charming Liederspiel, 'The Son and Stranger,' written for the silver wedding of his parents; and lastly, his overture to the 'Hebrides.'" "May 1st.—(Sunday)—Mendelssohn and Klingemann came to the children's one o'clock dinner. The former gave me the score of his overture to the 'Hebrides.'" Whenever Moscheles went to Berlin the great attraction was Felix Mendelssohn and the house of his parents. The father was Moscheles's confidential adviser in matters of business; and as to music, Moscheles says, "We often extemporise together, each of us trying to dart quick as lightning on the suggestions implied by each other's harmonies, and to construct others upon them. Then Felix, whenever I introduce any motive out of his own works, breaks in and cuts me short by playing a subject from one of my compositions, on which I retort, and then he, and so on ad infinitum. It's a sort of musical blind-man's-buff, where the blindfolded now and then run against each other's heads." We have no desire, even had we sufficient space at our disposal, to follow Moscheles through his long professional career, believing as we do that it is the duty of a reviewer who thinks favourably of a work, rather to send readers to the book itself than to render such a step almost unnecessary by mercilessly extracting the most interesting portion of its contents. Let us conclude, then, by cordially commending these volumes, not only to musical but to non-musical persons, and by assuring them that, as a record of an active artistic life, extending over a period of nearly sixty years, it has a real and lasting value.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Sonatas for the Pianoforte; composed by L. van Beethoven. Edited and fingered by Agnes Zimmermann.

It has been truly remarked that no person is without a library who possesses the Bible and Shakspeare. May it not also be said that no person is without a musical library who owns a volume of Beethoven's Sonatas? For the store of mental wealth contained in these works—like that in the immortal books we have named—is not for an age, but for all time. The past, present, and future of music—however these terms may have been perverted in our own day—are so fully represented in the varied styles of these imperishable compositions, that not only does a mixed audience experience delight in contemplating their obvious beauties, but the earnest artist who searches for those perfect models of form which distinguish the works of a bygone time, the more free and genial movements which have gradually been developed from these, or the profound thought and romanticism of what is termed the "advanced school," will here find ample material for study. But although the appreciation of these Sonatas is now rapidly increasing, how short a time need we look back to recall the day when in this country they were almost unknown. Many pianists who are now exponents of these works before the public can remember when Monzani and Hill's editions of them were sought for by the few students who began to think, or be told by their masters that they were worth attention. "There is no melody in Beethoven," sarcastically remarked Mr. Cipriani Potter, whilst playing some of the most charming portions of the Sonatas to his pupils. "Listen—is this 'heavy'?" he would say, when throwing off, with his fairy-like touch, some of the most beautiful scherzos: and well do we remember his telling one of the students of the Royal Academy of Music to go to the publisher's and ask for the Sonata of Beethoven "that nobody ever played," and his smile of satisfaction when he returned with the right one. But Mr. Potter was not the only pioneer in the good cause; Moscheles presented these works to the public whenever he could find an opportunity; his editions, too, began gradually to find customers, and, in spite of their "heaviness," a general impression got abroad that "there was something in them." Even the most sanguine musicians of that time, however, could scarcely have imagined that, in a comparatively few years, the public taste could have been so educated that these compositions should be really more played and taught than any others, and that the demand for them should be even greater in England than in the land of their composer's birth. Such, however, we have been credibly informed, is the fact; and we can scarcely wonder, therefore, that every endeavour should be made by English publishers to present them to us in an accurate and thoroughly reliable shape. Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who edits the luxurious edition now before us, has fully earned her right to respect in so responsible a position. An enthusiastic student of Beethoven's works, as well as one of the ablest interpreters of them in public, she has undertaken the duty of editress with a higher feeling than that of merely correcting the proofs, and "seeing the work through the press." In the first place, it is known that the compass of the pianoforte was extremely limited at the time these Sonatas were written; and, consequently, (as Miss Zimmermann states in her Preface) "passages which, in the first part of a movement, appeared in a certain form, were obliged, when they recurred in the second part, in a higher key, to be compressed, for want of notes." Two obvious courses then were open to the editress, in view of this fact; in the first place, on the principle that "whatever is, is right," she might have reprinted the passages in their original integrity; and, in the second place, she might have boldly challenged criticism by altering them, to accord with the enlarged compass of the instrument. Miss Zimmermann has wisely adopted a middle course, and merely suggested the form of a passage, in small staves, which Beethoven would most likely have written; leaving the text as it has always stood, for those who prefer it. Even this innovation, however, we should scarcely have sanctioned, had this suggestion been made in every such case; for, in many instances, the necessity of the alteration has induced the composer to introduce a new beauty into his phrase, which more than compensates for the enforced change. But the editress disarms our criticism by announcing that, wherever such instances occur, "no alteration is proposed; but, where no such compensatory element exists—where it is plain that the mechanical limitations of the instrument alone prevented a complete reproduction of the original passage, such passage is here printed in the shape in which it would probably have been written, had the keyboard in Beethoven's time had its present extent." A plan so carefully and conscientiously carried out, deserves our warmest commendation. It must also be mentioned that the whole of the Sonatas are fingered, wherever such indication is necessary; and amateurs, therefore, will thus receive a gratuitous lesson from one whose competence for the task has been sufficiently proved by her thorough mastery of the key-board. Another feature of interest—and one of the utmost importance to those who desire to become fully acquainted with the composer's intention—is the manner in which the slurs have been placed throughout. As far as we can see, none have been added (except where, in fugal movements, it has been found necessary to make the repetitions of subjects agree with them, as originally given out); but in many instances, where the slur has stopped short of the final note of a passage, it has been carried on, so that the punctuation may in all cases determine the phrasing with accuracy. Besides the thirty-two Sonatas, always included, the volume contains the three written when the composer was only eleven years of age, and dedicated to Maximilian Frederic, Elector and Archbishop of Cologne; one dedicated to Madlle. Eleonore de Breuning—the eleven concluding bars of which are added by J. Ries—and the two Sonatinas in G and F, the authenticity of which is doubted. The work is beautifully printed, and handsomely bound, to correspond with the volumes of the compositions of Mendelssohn, Weber, &c., issued by this firm. The elegant appearance of this edition, as well as the care which has been bestowed upon its valuable contents, will, we think, ensure for it an extensive sale; but for the information of those who wish only to make a selection from the volume, it should be mentioned that each Sonata is published separately.

La Traviata. A Lyric Drama, in three Acts. Composed by Giuseppe Verdi. Edited by Berthold Tours, and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

WHATEVER may be said of the musical merits of this Opera, there can be no question that its popularity is rather increasing than diminishing. The cause of this is easily explained: Verdi thoroughly understood how to write for voices, and to display their qualities to the best advantage; and as the tragic conclusion of the story affords ample scope for the vocalist to prove the possession of strong emotional power, there can be little doubt that "La Traviata" will hold the stage for many years to come. The principal pieces, too, are not only full of dramatic feeling, but the melodies haunt the memory; and our fashionable audiences are always delighted to hear at the Opera what they have been playing and singing during the day. The edition before us is fully entitled to the highest praise; the utmost care having been bestowed upon the minutest points, both by the editor and translator. Mr. Berthold Tours has shown much discrimination in placing indications of the score throughout the Opera—never omitting them where they would naturally be looked for, and never crowding them in where unnecessary—and Mrs. Macfarren has displayed her usual musical feeling in fully considering the composer's meaning, instead of blindly giving a verbal translation. Both the type and printing are excellent.

J. B. CRAMER AND CO.

The Miller and his Man. A Christmas Drawing-room Extravaganza. By F. C. Burnand; with Songs by Arthur Sullivan. The incidental music composed and adapted by James F. Simpson.

This little Extravaganza may be described as an acting charade, with music; and although we consider that the composer has done more for the work than the librettist (not being ourselves especially fond of mere punning Burlesques) we can scarcely believe that our opinion will be endorsed by the majority of listeners. It is somewhat difficult to determine precisely Mr. Sullivan's share in the music. The title-page of the piece says "with songs by Arthur Sullivan;" but as one of the songs is founded on the principal subject of the Overture, and Mr. Simpson's name is mentioned as the arranger and adapter of the incidental music, we are left in doubt as to whether Mr. Sullivan has purposely repeated Mr. Simpson's theme, or written both the Overture and song himself. Apart from this question, however, we may say that much of the vocal music is exceedingly good, and, moreover, well adapted for its intended purpose. The opening Serenade has a pleasing subject; the Trio, "You do not mean it," although simple, is full of dramatic humour, and the finale is sufficiently melodious and joyful for a Christmas audience. The incidental music, too, is well arranged—the slow movement from the Overture to "Zampa" being introduced with much effect—and, whatever may be the literary merit of the libretto, at least the dialogue never flags. We have no doubt that the "Miller and his Man" will become a great favourite at many social gatherings during the present festive season.

CASSELL, PETTER AND GALPIN.

Leslie's Songs for Little Folks. By Henry Leslie.

IN this Christmas offering to young vocalists Mr. Leslie proves himself not only a kind but a judicious friend, for his music, as well as being pleasing, is so carefully harmonised, that children may be led to feel that there is something besides the melody worth listening to. They are all effective; but No. 1, "Good Night and Good Morning;" No. 4, "Robin Redbreast;" No. 6, "The New Moon;" and No. 10, "Butterflies are Pretty Things," are our especial favourites; and we believe that our opinion will be shared by the many tiny critics to whom the book will be submitted for review. The poetry is exceedingly well selected, if we except No. 3, "Kittie and Mousie," which is scarcely to our liking. Little Kittie's "black eyes" and "soft paws" are pleasing subjects to dwell upon; but the "nine sharp teeth," which "bit the little Mousie," should make kind-hearted children sympathise more with the mouse than the kitten. We do not say that cats should not be trained to catch mice, but the fact of their doing so need not be glorified in "Songs for Little Folks." The volume contains a beautiful illustration, drawn by H. C. Selous, and in every respect is most attractively put forth.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

JACKSON'S SERVICE IN F.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I was present at a musical lecture a few days ago, when it was stated the well-known Service in F was not Jackson's composition, but the work of a pupil of his, who confessed on his deathbed that he had put Jackson's name to it. Can you inform me if this is correct?

Yours truly, S. Y.

[We believe the work to be by Jackson, and have never before heard it disputed.—Ed. Musical Times.]

AMATEUR CONCERTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—As the writer of the letter which appeared in the Sunday Times, some short time since, referred to in your number for this month, I think it my duty to write and thank you very much for the kind manner in which you have taken up the cudgels, on behalf of the musical profession. So able a ventilation of the subject, in such an influential journal as yours, cannot but prove of immense service to that body, and as a humble member of it I venture to ask you to accept the best thanks of, I feel sure, every one belonging to it. Apropos of the subject in question, will you kindly allow me to append the following fact which came under my notice the other day:—A "concert party," consisting of several well-known professional people, were making a tour in the West of England. At three or four towns in a certain district, the amateur concert-givers of that district did everything in their power to prevent the professionals getting the hall at all. When they found they could not do this, they secured it for themselves, for either the previous or following evenings, in order to damage as much as possible the interests of the properly constituted, and publicly recognised, caterers for the public. The result was that in each of these towns, the said caterers met with a very sad failure. One of these amateurs, a clergyman, is in the habit of giving singing lessons in the neighbourhood, at, I believe, 15s. a lesson. Should not, at all events the greater portion of this gentleman's time be devoted to his own profession? And ought not the Bishop of the diocese to be made acquainted with the fact?

With many apologies for intruding to such an extent upon your valuable space,

I remain, Sir, yours obediently,

SEYMOUR SMITH.

Nunhead, Dec. 6, 1873.

DR. ARNOLD v. "THE HYMNARY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In the prosecution of Monsieur Gounod, the Editor of "The Hymnary" designated himself as the musical adviser to Messrs. Novello and Co.; since that time, I presume the public generally have come to the conclusion that although there may be "many faces under one hat," the musical arrangements of that eminent firm are carried out under the direction and advice of Mr. Barnby. I have no means of knowing as to whether this gentleman is, or is not, the actual Editor of the Musical Times. (Your own reviewer in September 1868, thus remarks: "Rightly or wrongly, we have come to look upon the organist of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, as one of the most advanced reformers of Church Music; time alone will prove whether Mr. Barnby is right in the course he has adopted, or whether our fears that he may be going too far will not turn out to be well grounded. Extreme men certainly do good in their time, but it must be remembered that truth generally lies between the two extremes.") Psalmody has long been a vexed question. I find in your columns of Nov. 1868, the complaint from your reviewer, "that a new sacred Hymn Tune was actually the well-known air 'Hope told a flattering tale,' done into common time, and a setting of 'O Paradise' was an air from an old French opera; the latter tune, however, had to a great extent, relinquished its popularity in favour of two German waltz tunes. One comfort, however, is reserved to us in this matter. There is a limit and we must have nearly reached it; nothing worse can be even imagined, and it is simply impossible for things to remain in their present state." The present "Hymnary" we are told is to be judged by a high standard; does it bear the test of examination? I most willingly allow that music to suit the present effeminate and sentimental poetry ought to be somewhat of the same character, but the Editor of "The Hymnary" in the discharge of his duty, should have entered a decided and energetic protest against such pandering to uneducated and vulgar taste, and should have taken upon himself the cause of vindicating church music; as it is, the work is an advance in the wrong direction on "Hymns Ancient and Modern." There are some good tunes in the work by modern composers, but real soul and feeling is in a great measure wanting. I mean such feeling as may be found in Hanover, St. Mary's, The Old Hundredth, and St. Brides! Nearly all the grand old specimens of Psalmody are disposed of by Mr. Barnby in "The Hymnary" as old melodies; why not dispose of the modern ones in the same manner, and designate them by the title of modern melodies? a real artist has a natural feeling of regard for those who have trodden in the same path before him with a desire to benefit art. I feel constrained at this point of my letter to do justice to the labours of that distinguished musician, Dr. S. S. Wesley, who, after twenty years of conscientious preparation, produced the "European Psalmist" (perhaps the largest collection of tunes extant); in the compilation of this work great research has been given in order to find out the names of the old composers of tunes and even the date of the compositions; upon a careful examination, I find the greater part of this book harmonised on the foundations of the old church school, with suitable modern development. I quote from the Musical Times of Oct. 1871: "The influence of the old Church writers occasionally asserts itself and the genuine Cathedral common-place breaks out more than once." The old despised Cathedral school has the solid foundation of contrapuntal excellence; even with its peculiarities it is preferable to the flimsy sensational effusions of the advanced school so highly praised in your journal. The works of our great composers, Bach and Handel, abound with contrapuntal device, and I assert that the sinews and strength of the Church style consists of a judicious mixture of full harmony, florid counterpoint, and fugal passages. A proper application of these devices when facility has been obtained in their working, should form the groundwork of Church composition. No reasonable person would imitate the peculiarities of the very old writers (false accent and want of form in construction), but Wesley, Goss, Elvey, and others have combined modern phrasing with contrapuntal device and still retained solidity and sacred feeling. I find in your columns of Dec. 1870, the following remarks: "Depth and gravity as a rule is only to be obtained by a complete saturation during boyhood in the ancient writers of the English Church; the vitality of the ancient compositions must have been great to have lasted through the greater part of two centuries; it would be rash to the last degree to expect modern ones to exist for anything like that period." Our advanced writers appear to aim at high colouring, theatrical effect, a part-song style of harmonisation combined with a stereotyped four-bar swing: "One cannot be always dining with the pastry cook!" This sort of thing is but indifferent food for grown-up musicians. Possibly you may be surprised to hear that several of our most able and experienced composers agree with me as to the present degenerate state of Church music, but I need hardly say that private correspondence is inviolable, and that I do not feel justified in disclosing their names to the public. I am aware that many composers find swimming with the stream of popularity agreeable and remunerative, but others, perchance, may think the stream somewhat muddy, and prefer for the present to sit high and dry on the bank. Evidently the present state of Psalmody is considered to be unsatisfactory as the late Ven. Archdeacon Sandford communicated with myself and others on the subject of an authorised work to be brought out under the sanction of Convocation.

I am, &c.,

The Close, Winchester,
December 13th.

GEORGE B. ARNOLD.

P.S.—Please allow me a few words in reply to the egotistical letter of "Z," who takes credit for such extraordinary clear-sightedness; he has really only enunciated the old rule for logical division known to the merest tyro, and it must be repeated that exceptions to this rule are often unavoidable. I should recommend him to read Mill on Classification, and shall not descend into the quibble about must and capable. As an example of division he irrelevantly alludes to the two sexes, male and female—putting these asunder, the sex of "Z" is unknown to me; but throughout I hope that I am not wrong in assuming that "Z" does not belong to the fair sex? As "Z" is so disputatious, let me commend to him the example of that logician who split himself into two parts and made one of them argue against the other. However, he is pleased to allow that the words "sublime, beautiful, and ornamental," are invaluable to musicians, although he fails to comprehend Dr. Crotch and his explanation of them. I fear that my views in regard to the great necessity in the present day of dividing music into styles, have not been altered by the logical deductions of "Z;" if he pleases he can deduce something different to satisfy himself—I shall not trouble him with further correspondence on the subject.

[Dr. Arnold will see that we have inserted his letter, not even excluding the many personalities which disfigure it.

Our columns are always free for the expression of opinion, even when such opinions do not agree with our own; and if the author of the above communication should at any future time be desirous of writing upon the art which he professes, our space is at his command. But we cannot trouble our readers with letters which appear rather aimed at individuals than at principles; and shall be compelled, therefore, to close a correspondence with Dr. Arnold unless he sees fit to amend his style. Meanwhile, we beg distinctly to inform him that Mr. Barnby is not, and never was, the Editor of this Journal.—Ed. Musical Times.]

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

N. R., who writes requesting a notice of his song in consequence of his having "become a subscriber," is informed that whether his composition be reviewed favourably, unfavourably, or thrown aside altogether, we shall not be in the slightest degree influenced by the fact to which he directs our attention.

PARANETE.—It is generally believed that the Gregorian Tones were merely a collection of specimens of traditional variegated monotone, not a series of original compositions. Assuming this to be the case, the precentory notes would be nothing more than an ornamental introduction of the minister; at first used only in precenting, afterwards used for the embellishment of Festival forms of the Canticles, &c.

S. A. S.—The Dorian mode has (putting aside some confusion between the terms Dorian and Phrygian prior to the sixteenth century) generally been understood to be a scale from D to D, as represented on the white keys of a pianoforte or organ. A tune in the Dorian mode ought, strictly speaking, to have no E♭ or C♯ in it. But when Dorian melodies are harmonised, these notes are frequently, though not quite correctly, used in the harmonising chords.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BELFAST.—The inaugural concert of the Choral Society, which has been formed by Mr. B. Hobson Carroll for the performance of oratorios, cantatas, part-songs, glees, and madrigals, took place on the 5th ult., in the Music Hall, before a numerous audience. Barnett's Ancient Mariner was the work selected for performance, in the first part; and the second part of the programme was miscellaneous. The air, "The fair breeze blew," was admirably rendered by Miss Ellen Horne, who, with Miss Emily Holden, was encored in the duet, "Two voices in the air." Mr. Barton McGuckin (tenor) and Mr. J. L. Wadmore (baritone), were also highly successful in the music allotted them. The choruses were admirably given, careful training being apparent; and at the conclusion of the Cantata, Mr. Carroll, who conducted with his usual efficiency, was greeted with a most enthusiastic outburst of applause. Mr. T. Osborne Marks, Mus. Bac., Oxon, presided at the harmonium, and Mr. George Mellor at the pianoforte.—THE members of the Choral Society, after their successful inaugural concert, have presented the conductor, Mr. B. Hobson Carroll, with a Baton, in token of their appreciation of his valuable services, accompanied with a highly complimentary address.

BRIDPORT.—On Tuesday evening the 9th ult., the lecture-room of the Literary and Scientific Institute was attended by a numerous audience, to listen to a lecture by Mr. J. F. Sharpe, of Southampton, the subject being "The Songs of Old England." Mr. Sharpe's address was a very interesting one, giving, as it did, in a concise form, memoirs of those composers who have contributed some of the best of what may well be termed our national and popular songs—such as "Hearts of Oak," "Stand to your guns," "Tom Bowling," &c., &c. The lecturer rendered the entertainment complete by interspersing his remarks with vocal illustrations, singing pieces of the different composers touched upon. Mr. Sharpe has a rich powerful voice; and the frequency of the outbursts of applause which greeted him, showed that his efforts were appreciated. Mr. W. Stone ably accompanied on the pianoforte.

BRIDGWATER.—On Friday the 19th ult., the New Choral Association, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Lavington, organist of the Parish Church, gave its first open night at the Assembly Rooms. The programme was admirably selected. Mrs. Charles Lavington, Miss Carslake, and Miss Leaker elicited several encores, and "Tho' the rose be thy favourite flower" (duet by J. P. Knight) was well sung by Mrs. Lavington and Miss Parsons, and also re-demanded. Blumenthal's "My Queen" (sung by Dr. Winterbotham with much purity of taste) received a similar compliment. All the part-songs were carefully given, especially Bishop's "Now by day's retiring lamp." The Bridgewater Choral Association has only been in existence two years, and great credit is due to Mr. Lavington for the progress it has made, and the undeniable proficiency it has attained.

BURY-ST. EDMUNDS.—On Tuesday evening the 2nd ult., a large audience attended a concert of the St. Mary's Choir Glee and Madrigal Society, at the Athenaeum Hall. The members of the Society were assisted by Miss Julia Richardson, R.A.M., and Mr. Robson, principal tenor of King's College, Cambridge. Miss Richardson (daughter of the organist of Salisbury Cathedral) possesses a good voice, and was highly effective in all her songs, being encored in Randegger's "Only for one." Mr. Robson also contributed to the success of the concert. The glees and part-songs were well rendered by the choir; and a band of amateur instrumentalists played three overtures with much precision. Mr. G. Whitehead presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. T. B. Richardson conducted.

CHISLEHURST, KENT.—An evening concert was given at the Village Hall on Thursday, the 13th ult., in aid of the organ fund of the Church of the Annunciation, by Mr. H. Walmisley Little (the organist of the Church) assisted by Miss Jessie Jones, Mr. Dudley Thomas, and Mr. Grimby Jopp (vocalists), Miss Borton (pianoforte), and M. Szczepanowski (violin). The programme was composed chiefly of selections from the great masters. Mr. H. Walmisley Little played Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso" and the same composer's "Allegro Brillante," in which he was joined by Miss Borton. A feature of the evening was Gounod's "Hymn to Cecilia," exquisitely played by M. L. Szczepanowski. Miss Jessie Jones, Mr. Dudley Thomas, and Mr. Grimby Jopp, were highly successful in their songs, receiving several encores. Mr. T. Wingham and Mr. J. Davis were the conductors.

COGGESHALL.—On Thursday, the 18th ult., services were held to celebrate the opening of the handsome new organ just erected in St. Peter's Church, by Mr. Holdich of Liverpool Road, Islington, London, at a cost of upwards of £600. The organ is 14 ft. 6 in. wide, 22 ft. high, and 12 ft. 6 in. deep, and consists of three whole rows of keys, and an independent pedal organ; the compass of the manuals being from C♯ to F in alt; the pedal from CCC 16 ft. to E, two octaves and a third. The services which were full choral, with processional and recessional hymns, were most impressively rendered, the organ being performed at both services by Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, organist and master of the choir of St. Stephen's, Lewisham. After the service in the afternoon, a grand Recital was given on the organ by Mr. Jordan, who played selections from several of the great masters, which was intently listened to by the large and appreciative congregation who filled the church. Collections were made after each service towards the organ fund.

EARLEY, READING.—Mr. H. J. Hendy, organist of St. Peter's Church, gave a concert on the 9th ult., in the National Schoolroom, before a numerous audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Agnes Larkcom and Miss Florence Wydford. Mr. E. F. Hendy led the band, and Mr. H. J. Hendy was the solo pianist and conductor. The vocalists acquitted themselves most creditably, and obtained several encores. The band played with taste and precision, the Overtures, Il Barbiere, Don Giovanni, and La Dame Blanche, and Haydn's 12th Symphony. Mr. Hendy chose for his piano solo, Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto, which was well rendered and loudly applauded.

EDINBURGH.—Professor Oakeley gave another of his interesting Organ Recitals on Saturday afternoon, the 20th ult. The Music Class Hall was as usual crowded. The selection was very varied, comprising an example of almost every school of composition subsequent to Handel; and it is needless to say a word in praise of the Professor's masterly playing.

ENFIELD.—A concert was given at the Riding School, Enfield Court, on Tuesday, the 9th ult., by the Enfield Musical Society, when Haydn's Creation was performed. The solo singers were Miss Emily Spiller (soprano), Mr. Alfred Kenningham (tenor), and Mr. Thurlay Beale (bass). The air "With verdure clad" was very well sung by Miss Spiller, and Mr. Thurlay Beale was highly effective in "Rolling in foaming billows." Mr. Kenningham also deserves special mention for his execution of the recitative "In splendour bright." The choruses were well sung, reflecting great credit on the conductor, Mr. H. M. Jenkins.

EXETER.—Miss Annie Vinnicombe gave her first Invitation concert on Friday evening, the 5th ult., in the Royal Public Rooms, assisted by Miss B. Vinnicombe, Mr. Drayton, and Messrs. E. and W. Vinnicombe. Miss Annie Vinnicombe was highly successful in her songs (one of which was encored), and her duets with Mr. Drayton, were also much applauded. Pianoforte solos and duets were contributed by Miss B. Vinnicombe and the Messrs. Vinnicombe, which were thoroughly appreciated by the audience.

GRAVESEND.—The annual concert in aid of the funds of the Orphanage of the Out-door Officers of Customs, was given on Thursday, the 27th Nov., at the Assembly Rooms, under the direction of Mr. Phillips. The artists engaged were Miss Leonora Braham, Miss Bessie Stroud, Miss Kate Wild, Mr. H. Guy, Mr. Chaplin Henry, Mr. H. P. Matthews, and Mr. W. Barlow, vocalists, Miss Turner (R. A. M.), and Mr. Fountain Meer, instrumentalists, all of whom met with the success they fully deserved. We are glad to find that a handsome addition to the funds of the Charity was realised.

GORING, SUSSEX.—The second musical evening, with readings, took place at the Schoolroom on the 4th ult. Several glees and part-songs were well sung by the ladies and gentlemen of the village. Barnby's "Sweet and low" was the success of the evening. The solo vocalists were Miss Scott, the Rev. and Mrs. Thorpe, Mr. L. S. Palmer, and Mr. Markwick. The readings were given by Rev. J. G. Pennethorne and Rev. J. Thorpe.

HACKNEY.—The second of the series of Winter Monthly Concerts was given at St. Thomas's Hall on Monday evening, the 8th ult., the vocalists being Mesdames Rebecca Jewell, Denham, and Claremont, and Messrs. Parkin, Percy, Hamilton, and Prenton, with Herr Greebe as solo violin. Madame Jewell's pure and artistic style delighted her audience; and Miss Denham, a local favourite, and Miss Claremont were also much applauded. Herr Greebe afforded much gratification, and the singing of the gentlemen was very satisfactory. Mr. Berthold Tours officiated as conductor.

HALIFAX.—A large new organ of three manuals built by Denman and Son, of York, for Salem Chapel, was opened by Dr. Spark, of Leeds, on the 10th ult., when there were great congregations, and collections made amounting to £153.—THE members of the Orpheus Musical Society gave a capital performance of Verdi's Il Trovatore on the 16th ult. The principal solos were excellently sung by Messrs. Battinson, Clegg, Binns, and Rickard, under the conductorship of Mr. W. R. Eckersley.

HORRINGER, BURY-ST-EDMUNDS.—An amateur concert was given in aid of the Church choir, on the 2nd ult. The Overtures L'italiana in Algeri and Le Nozze di Figaro, for violoncello and four hands on the piano, were played with much precision and spirit. Miss Aitken, Miss Francesca Burgess, and the Rev. G. H. Statham were encored in several of their songs, the same compliment being paid to Mr. Hughes for a violin solo. Several glees and choruses, ably conducted by Rev. W. Borrow and creditably sung by the choir, completed the success of the concert.

LEEDS.—The concert given by the Philharmonic Society, at the Town Hall, on Wednesday, the 10th ult., did infinite credit to Mr. Broughton, the conductor. The programme was well selected, the first part being miscellaneous, and the second devoted to Mozart's Twelfth Mass. The band, which is composed chiefly of amateurs, deserves much praise for the way in which the music was given, the leading violins being especially good. Mr. Broughton played Hummel's Rondo in A major for pianoforte, in a masterly style. The solo singers were Misses Arthur, Arnold, and Crichton, and Messrs. Goodall and Taylor. Mr. Alfred Broughton presided at the organ in a very judicious manner.

LEEK.—At the twentieth concert, on the 16th ult., the Leek Amateur Musical Society gave a highly satisfactory performance of the Messiah; this being the first time the Oratorio has been heard in the town. The principal soprano parts were sung by Madame Cowley-Squier; Mrs. Hall, Miss Amelia Nixon, and Miss Russell, members of the Society, taking the contralto songs, &c. Mr. N. Dumville, of Manchester, was principal tenor; and Mr. Warburton and Mr. Beckett—the latter, also a member of the Society—divided the bass parts between them. The accompaniments were played by a small orchestra, led by Mr. F. Vetter, of Manchester; Mr. F. Mountford, of Silverdale, presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Powell conducted. The hall was well filled.

LEIGHTON-BUZZARD.—On the 11th ult., an amateur concert was given in the Assembly Rooms, by the members of the Leighton Amateur Instrumental Society, which proved a great success. The Overtures to Saul, Tancredi, Caliph of Bagdad, and a selection from Der Freischütz were well played by the band, and Mr. Russ proved himself an accomplished musician in a solo upon the flute, and by his interpretation of some songs. Madame Harriette Lee, of London, kindly gave her assistance, and her singing was thoroughly appreciated by the audience. In the song "She wander'd down the mountain side" Mr. Gurney played with good taste the violin obbligato.

LIVERPOOL.—THE Tenth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society, which was given on the 25th November, was one of especial interest. Principal artists: Madlle. Titiens and Signor Catalina; pianoforte solo, Dr. Hans von Bülow. The vocal part of the programme was excellently sustained, but the chief attraction was, naturally, the first appearance of so celebrated a musician as Dr. Hans von Bülow, the varied characteristics of whose splendid performance delighted and astonished the audience in the highest degree. The Symphony was Mendelssohn's "Italian" (in A major, No. 4). Dr. Hans von Bülow played Hensel's Concerto, in F minor (Op. 16), his shorter solos being "Deux Etudes de Concert," "Dans les Bois," and "Ronde des Lutins" (Liszt); and Chopin's Berceuse (Op. 57), et Valse (Op. 42). The overture was Spohr's to Jessonda, and the marches, Beethoven's in the Ruins of Athens, and Gounod's in the Reine de Saba.—The opening performance of the sixth annual series on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, was given at the Philharmonic Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 3rd ult. Executants: 1st violin, Madame Norman-Neruda; 2nd violin, Herr L. Ries; viola, Mr. Zerbini; violoncello, Herr Daubert (in place of Signor Piatti, who was unfortunately prevented from appearing); solo pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé; vocalist Miss Alice Fairman; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The programme contained Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 12), for strings; Beethoven's Sonata in D major (Op. 10, No. 9), for pianoforte alone—encored, and the last movement repeated; Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99, No. 1), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello; and Haydn's Quartet in G major (Op. 64, No. 4) for strings—all of which were executed to perfection, and heartily applauded by a delighted audience.—On Saturday evening the 6th ult., the members of the Societa Armonica gave an open rehearsal at the Institute. These gatherings are each season increasing in popularity, and are always numerously attended. Kalliwoða's Symphony, (No. 6, in F, Op. 132), a march by Ries, and Mozart's overture to Don Juan, were well played. The Liverpool Vocalists' Union sang several choruses, and Miss Monkhouse and Mr. Busfield were highly effective in their solos. Mr. Lawson led the band, and Mr. Armstrong conducted.—THE Eleventh Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 9th ult. Principal Artists: Mademoiselle Valeria, Signor Gustave Garcia, and Signor Massini; solo pianoforte, Madame Carreno-Sauret; solo violin, Mons. Sauret. The overtures were those to The Merry Wives of Windsor (Nicolai), and Fidelio, both played with great spirit. The pianoforte solo, with orchestral accompaniment, was Beethoven's in E flat, performed by Madame Carreno-Sauret, with great delicacy. The instrumental pieces without the orchestra, were Thalberg and De Beriot's duet for pianoforte and violin from Les Huguenots; pianoforte solo, "Andante" in F (Beethoven), and Rubinstein's arrangement of the "Marche des Ruines d'Athènes." Violin solo, "Le stregha" (Paganini), played by Mons. Sauret with exquisite expression as well as wonderful mastery over the immense difficulties of the work (encored). The choral members sang with good effect "Let the hills resound" (Brimley Richards), and the quaint and clever setting by Silas of Longfellow's translation of an ancient Christmas Carol. Signor Gustave Garcia gave with great expression songs by Gounod, Schubert, and Wagner. All the vocal pieces were much applauded, and the concert concluded with Sullivan's "Procession March."—THE second performance of the present season on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, was given in the Philharmonic Hall on Wednesday, the 17th ult. Executants: 1st violin, Herr Straus; 2nd violin, Herr L. Ries; violin, Mr. Zerbini; violoncello, Signor Piatti; solo pianoforte, Dr. Hans von Bülow; vocalists, Mdle. Nita Gaetano; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The opening quartet was Schumann's in A major, Op. 47, No. 3, for strings, followed by a song of Hummel's, "L'ombrosa notte vien," given with great expression. Solo pianoforte sonata, "The Maid of Orleans" (Sir W. S. Bennett), exquisitely interpreted by Dr. von Bülow. Part Second commenced with Rubinstein's fine sonata duet for pianoforte and violoncello, given as only two such artists could give it. Two songs of Schumann's were charmingly sung, and the concert concluded with Beethoven's grand trio in D major, Op. 70, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. The whole of the music was enthusiastically received by a large and appreciative audience.

LUTON.—The Luton Choral Society gave a successful performance of Haydn's Creation, in the Corn Exchange, on the 26th November. The principal artists were Miss S. Cole, Mr. Bennett, and Mr. O. Christian. Miss Cole in "With verdure clad," and Mr. Christian in the recit. and air "And God created great whales," were highly effective. "On Thee each living soul awaits" was well rendered, but the gem of the evening was the duet and chorus "Of stars the fairest." Mr. C. Inwards conducted, and the band was ably led by Mr. D. Southam.

MALVERN LINK.—The Malvern Link Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. Philip Klitz, gave a very successful concert on the 2nd ult., in the Link Lecture Hall. The work selected was Robin Hood, the principal parts being allotted to Miss Clarke, Messrs. A. Burston, W. H. Edwards, T. Cook and Brown. Miss Clarke was very effective in the air, "Sweet, pretty bird," and received an encore for the duet, "Thro' wale and woe," with Mr. Burston. The unaccompanied madrigal, "Sweet echo, sweetest nymph," was exceedingly well sung, giving proof of good training. Mr. Klitz presided at the pianoforte and harmonium.

MANCHESTER.—Miss Sophie Flora Heilbron gave her first concert in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 25th Nov., before a large and fashionable audience. She was highly effective in Chopin's grand Polonaise Brillante in E flat major, and Beethoven's Sonata, No. 1, Op. 12, D major, receiving the warmest marks of approval from the audience. She was assisted by Miss Thorley (vocalist), Miss Lockwood (harp), Mr. de Jong (flute), Signor Risegari (violin), and Mr. Weston (violoncello).—MR. YARWOOD gave his annual concert on the 1st ult., in the Hulme Town Hall, before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Grimshaw, Miss Amy Russell, Miss Harlow, Mr. Allen, and Mr. Williamson. Herr Otto Bernhardt, of Mr. Charles Hallé's concerts, played in a masterly manner, a violin solo, "Old England" (Vieuxtemps). Mr. George Julian Yarwood, of Birmingham, gave a classical rendering of Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique," and also played in excellent style the "Spinnlied" (Litolff). The other portions of the programme consisted of glees, duets, and a masonic glee, "Welcome, welcome," composed by J. Yarwood, who conducted the concert with his usual ability.—On the 6th ult., Madlle. Carlotta Patti, Signor Camero, and the eminent pianist M. Theodore Ritter, made their second appearance at Mr. de Jong's concert, with the addition of Miss Hélène Arnim (contralto), and Mr. F. H. Celli (bass). Madlle. C. Patti sang with great spirit and brilliancy the "Shadow Song," from Dinorah, a waltz by Ritter "La Festa," and for encores "Coming thro' the rye," and a Spanish composition (the last in rather a coarse style). Signor Camero was not very successful in his rendering of "Spirto gentil," Favorita, and "M'appari," Marta. M. Ritter played Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto with great finish and expression. In consequence of the unfortunate breaking of a hammer in the pianoforte, M. Ritter's remaining pieces had to be omitted, much to the disappointment of the audience. The Overtures Semiramide (Rossini) and Haydée (Auber) were given by the band.—On the 13th ult., Mrs. Stirling gave a reading of Shakspeare's Midsummer Night's Dream, at which the whole of Mendelssohn's music was performed, under the direction of Mr. de Jong. Miss Mary Thorley was the solo vocalist, and was very favourably received. Mrs. Stirling's reading was a remarkably fine one, and highly appreciated by the audience. The music was very well given by the band (with the exception of the opening phrase in the overture, where the flutes were out of tune, and remained so during the many repetitions of the same passage). The chorus was weak and timid in the first part of the work.—HANDEL's ever fresh, and everlasting Messiah has been performed in Manchester six times during the last fortnight. On the 20th and on Christmas Day, Mr. de Jong gave it with the aid of the following principal vocalists: Madame Vaneri, Miss Alice Fairman, Messrs. J. H. Pearson, and Federici. Miss Fairman's singing of "He shall feed His flock" narrowly escaped an encore. Mr. J. H. Pearson produced considerable effect in "Thy rebuke," and "Behold, and see." Mr. Federici's voice told well in "Why do the nations." The choruses, on the whole, were efficiently sung, and the band was all that could be desired.—On the 13th and 10th ult., Mr. Charles Hallé gave two performances of the same work with the following excellent cast of principals:—Mesdames Alvsleben and Patey, Messrs. E. Lloyd and Santley. Mr. Sims Reeves had been announced to take part in both the above performances, but was unfortunately prevented by illness from singing. Mr. H. Walker presided at the organ.

OXFORD.—Bach's Christmas Oratorio was performed in Christ Church Cathedral, on Tuesday evening, the 2nd ult., and on the following Thursday at noon. The vocalists were composed of the choirs of Christ Church, Magdalen, and New College, besides several amateurs, members of the University, making altogether about seventy voices. The soloists were Mr. Donaldson, soprano; Mr. Hobley, contralto; Mr. Robson, tenor; R. W. Macan, Esq., and Mr. Farley Sinkins, bass, members of Christ Church choir. Dr. Corfe, choragus of the University, acted as conductor, and great credit is due to this gentleman for the admirable manner in which he has trained the choirs. Mr. Parrott, organist of Magdalen College, presided at the organ. The introductory and concluding voluntaries were, however, played by Mr. Taylor, organist of New College. The choral portion of the work produced a profound effect upon the listeners, the chorals especially, which were finely rendered, being evidently appreciated with a truly devotional feeling throughout. All the solos were excellently sung, the whole of the trying tenor recitatives, more particularly, being given with appropriate expression, and with admirable precision by Mr. Robson. Dr. Corie, on whom all the anxiety and trouble of rehearsals, etc., must of course have fallen, deserves the heartiest congratulations on the success which attended his efforts, and to Mr. Parrott, of Magdalen College, no words of praise can be too much for his excellent performance of the organ.

PARSONSTOWN, IRELAND.—The annual concert of the Chesterfield College took place on Thursday evening, the 18th ult., before a crowded audience. The students acquitted themselves very well in all their solos, glees, &c. The feature of the evening, however, was Haydn's No. 11 Symphony, arranged as a quintet, and performed by Mrs. Biggs, Miss Geogshan, Major Bruce, R. Biggs, Esq., M.A., and Mr. M. W. Arnold, Musical Professor to the College. The Trio from Così fan Tutte (Mozart), excellently given by R. Biggs, Esq., T. W. Harper, Esq., and Mr. Arnold, was encored.

PETERHEAD.—A very successful performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul was given by the Peterhead Choral Society on Thursday, the 4th ult., on the occasion of the opening of the New Public Hall Buildings, before a crowded audience. The Society, numbering 80 voices, was assisted by an instrumental band from Aberdeen, under the leadership of Mr. James N. Justice. The soloists were Miss Edith Dalmaine (soprano), Miss Palmer (contralto), Mr. George Perren (tenor), and Mr. Maybrick (bass), all of whom were efficient, Miss Palmer's rendering of "But the Lord is mindful" being particularly admired. Mr. Robert Cooper, Aberdeen, conducted. This Society is now in its seventh year, and besides the St. Paul, has performed the Messiah (three times), Haydn's Creation, Mozart's Twelfth Mass, G. B. Allen's Harvest Home, and a large number of miscellaneous pieces.

PUTNEY.—An effective performance of Henry Lahee's Cantata, The Building of the Ship, was given, on the 1st ult., by the Putney Philharmonic, under the direction of the Society's conductor, Mr. J. C. Ward. The composer presided at the pianoforte, and the work was received with much applause by a crowded audience.

RAMSGATE.—On Monday evening the 8th ult., the Choir of St. Mary's Church met together in the vestry of that building, and presented to Mr. Thorne, the talented organist of the church, a testimonial, consisting of a handsome drawing-room clock, with a pair of candelabra to match. The presentation was made by the Vicar, on behalf of the choir, in a few well chosen words. On a small plate attached to the clock was the following inscription: "Presented to John Finch Thorne, Esq., by the senior choristers of St. Mary's Church, Ramsgate, in recognition of the kindness, good feeling, and ability displayed by him as their conductor during a period of eleven years. December 1873."

ROTHERHAM.—On the 18th ult., Mendelssohn's St. Paul was performed in the Drill Hall, under the auspices of the Rotherham Hospital Musical Union, before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Madame Helena Walker, Miss C. Nicolls, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Thornton Wood, all of whom acquitted themselves with much credit, Madame Walker in "I will sing of Thy great mercies," Miss Nicolls in "But the Lord is mindful," Mr. Guy in "Be thou faithful," and Mr. Wood, in "Consume them all," creating a most favourable impression upon the audience. The rendering of the choruses was extremely good; and great credit is due for much of the success of the performance to the conductor, Mr. J. Warburton, and the choir-master, Mr. W. Richardson. The orchestra was thoroughly efficient.

RUNCORN.—A concert, conducted by Mr. J. Newcombe, was given in the Public Hall on Tuesday, the 2nd ult. The glees, songs, &c., were exceedingly well rendered, and met with hearty applause from an appreciative audience. Pinsuti's "Spring Song," and Bishop's "Daughter of Error" having to be repeated. Mrs. Newcombe was highly effective in Randegger's "Ben e Ridicolo," and Bishop's "Lo here the gentle lark," both of which were encored. Miss James was also encored for her excellent singing of Levey's "Esmeralda," and Mr. Appleton and Mr. Garratt lent efficient aid.

SALISBURY.—The Sarum Choral Society gave the second concert of the season at the Assembly Rooms on Thursday evening, the 4th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. W. P. Aylward. The programme was well selected, and included the Overture to Guillaume Tell (Rossini), Bridal Chorus, Lohengrin (Wagner), Ave Maria, Vintage Song, Finale, from Lorelei (Mendelssohn), Beethoven's Symphony, No. 4 in B flat Op. 60, and Gade's Cantata, Spring's Message. The solo vocalist was Miss Julia Wigan, who sang several songs very effectively. The choral music was remarkably well sung, the unaccompanied part-song, "Good night, beloved" (Pinsuti), being without doubt the most finished performance of the evening. The instrumental music was of the very highest order, a remarkable feature in a provincial concert, reflecting great credit on the band and the conductor.

SHEFFIELD.—The organ recently erected in St. Mary's Church, Walkley, was opened on Thursday, the 27th Nov., when there was Service in the morning, and a Recital in the evening by George Cooper, Esq., of London, organist and choir-master of Her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. James'. The organ has been erected at a cost of £400, by a local builder, and is in every way adapted to the church. It has two manuals and twenty-three stops; and is chiefly remarkable on account of having a very fine swell organ, upon which Mr. Heald appears to have expended considerable care. The programme contained a selection from the works of Mozart, Schubert, Spohr, Mendelssohn, Handel, Bach, Haydn, Hesse, and Smart, excellently performed by Mr. Cooper, who showed the capabilities of the organ to the greatest advantage. The opening Services were continued on the following Sunday, and, both in a musical and pecuniary sense, were very successful.—On the 15th ult., a new and spacious music-room, named the Albert Hall, containing a superb French organ, was inaugurated with gratifying success. The town has long required a suitable building where musical works of a high class could be conveniently performed; and, although the orchestral space is somewhat limited for a large chorus and band, the general aspect of the interior is not unlike that of the Town Hall at Birmingham. The cost of the new Hall has been about £25,000, and the organ, built by the celebrated Cavaille-Col, of Paris, cost £5,000; some account of the latter will no doubt be interesting to our readers. The case presents a splendid appearance, and was designed by a Parisian architect, all the front pipes being of tin, and retaining their original colour. A contrast is naturally suggested with many of our church organs, which architects, with the consent of the clergy, contrive to thrust into holes, at the east end of the edifice; and where the organ-builder, with his high pressures, makes the pipes scream revengefully on the assembled congregants. The Sheffield organ is an instrument of the first class, and possesses four key-boards, from C to C, five octaves; and a pedal-board of two octaves and a half, C to F. Three of the key-boards are in separate swells, so that expression can be imparted to the tone of any stop. There are sixteen stops in the great organ (which is here placed lowest), and of these, four are of sixteen feet. The choir, swell, solo, and pedal organs, each possess twelve stops. The pedal organ has an open diapason of thirty-two feet, and also a fine reed stop of the same pitch. By a system of pedal and other vents, which govern every department of the organ-tone, the usual clattering noise occasioned by the stop-handles being continually thrust backwards and forwards, is entirely avoided. There are ten manual and pedal couplers, and about twenty combination registers and pedals. The "diapason" as well as "mixture-tone" has been carefully considered, and when Mr. Best had played a few bars of Bach's Fantasia in G major, the critical portion of the audience was fairly taken by surprise at the weight of tone produced by the foundation stops of 16 and 8 feet. As may be supposed, the reed stops throughout are distinguished by their splendid tone, which has been attained without having recourse to undue wind-pressures, so common in many large concert organs; and the Voix Humaine, Voix Céleste, and the various harmonic flutes, and other solo-registers, are exquisite in their quality of tone and effect. The opening performances comprised an Organ Recital in the afternoon by Mr. Best, which was attended by a distinguished and critical audience; and in the evening the Oratorio of the Messiah was given with band, and the chorus of the Sheffield Vocal Society, the solos being sung by Madame Corani, Miss Helen d'Alton, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Winn. The well-known work was given with excellent effect, though the performers on the wood and brass instruments were occasionally too prominent in their accompaniments. A commendable feature at the Organ Recital was a short analysis of the various pieces included in the programme, which embraced every variety of organ composition, from Bach and Handel to works of the present day. Mr. Best's performance was received with great enthusiasm, and his reading of the Fugues, &c., of Bach, in which the organ tone was gradually increased till the full power of the instrument burst forth with overwhelming force near the end, fairly aroused the audience. A great impression was also made by an Adagio, in A flat major, from Mr. Best's series of Organ Pieces, in which the grave harmonies assigned to the trombones and trumpets, gave place to a Cantabile for the Voix Humaine and other expressive stops, with marked effect.—On the evening of the 16th, another Organ Recital at cheaper rates of admission, with the same organist, attracted a very large auditory; and on the 22nd, Mendelssohn's Oratorio of Elijah was given, with the principal members of Mr. Maple on the Italian Opera Company in the solos. Mr. R. S. Burton, of the Parish Church, Leeds, ably conducted the Oratorio performances. Mr. Best acting on each occasion as organist. It is stated that M. Cavaille-Col has lately received orders for some church organs of important size in various parts of the country.

STRATFORD.—On Tuesday, the 16th ult., the West Ham Philharmonic Society gave another concert at the Town Hall, when Mendelssohn's Athalie was performed with pianoforte and harmonium accompaniments. The principals (Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Julia Derby and Miss Bessie Stroud) obtained great applause for their careful and effective singing, and Mr. A. Wieland's clearness of enunciation, as displayed in his recitation of the illustrative verses, gave the most entire satisfaction. The choruses were sung with much spirit and precision by the members of the choir, who mustered about 50 voices. Mr. T. W. Horn presided at the harmonium and Mr. F. Kitson at the piano. The second part was miscellaneous. Although the programme was an unusually long one, the audience appeared to be thoroughly interested to the last, and encores were more than once demanded.

SUNDERLAND.—A gathering of the Primitive Methodist choirs of the town and neighbourhood took place on Monday evening, the 15th ult., in the Victoria Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. W. R. Ball, who led the choirs through a very good programme in an able manner. The solo, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," was sung by Miss Ball in a very pleasing style, and was warmly encored; the duets by the Misses Norwood, and Miss Neal and Miss Mott, were also very well rendered. The service was concluded by the choirs singing the "Hallelujah" and the hymn, "The day is past and over," from The Hymnary. The proceeds of the service are to be applied towards the erection of a new central chapel in Tatham Street.

WARRINGTON.—At the annual entertainment given by the pupils of the People's College, on the 17th ult., a very excellent concert was performed, the whole of which gave the utmost satisfaction to a large audience. The blending of the children's voices in the part-music was extremely effective; and much credit is due to Mr. T. M. Pattison, the talented organist and conductor, for the excellent manner in which he has trained the young vocalists committed to his care.

WARWICK.—An interesting lecture was given at the Court-House on Thursday, Nov. 27, by A. D. Coleridge, Esq., on "Mozart; his Life and Times." The illustrations, which consisted of selections from the Requiem, and other works, were well given by a large choir of voices, conducted by Mr. Frank Spinney, F.C.O. The tenor solos were sung by Mr. Coleridge; and Beethoven's Air in F, with variations for the pianoforte, was played by Mr. Spinney.

WOOD GREEN.—A concert was given at the Masonic Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 9th ult., under the direction of Mrs. Weaver, who was assisted by Miss Alexandra Dwight, Mr. Stedman and Mr. T. A. Wallworth; Mr. M. L. Lawson most efficiently presiding at the pianoforte. In the first part, Clay's "She wandered down the mountain side," was sung by Miss Dwight with much feeling; Mrs. Weaver sang "Pur dicesti" very sweetly. Mr. Stedman was very successful in "Good night, beloved," and Mr. Wallworth's voice was heard to advantage in "O, ruddier than the cherry." The "A B C" duet by Mrs. Weaver and Mr. Wallworth, pleased the audience, as did the other duet, "Hassan and Zuleika," by Miss Dwight and Mr. Stedman. Several encores were gained in the second part, notably for Miss Dwight's "O haste, ye Birds," and Mr. Stedman's "Tom Bowling," both of which were exceedingly well rendered. A duet for Mrs. Weaver and the last-named gentleman, "The sailor's sigh," went smoothly and well; and Mr. Lawson took a fair share of the honours of the evening for his brilliant rendering of Chopin's music. Altogether, the evening was a decided success.

WOOLWICH.—The fourth and last of Miss S. F. Mascall's winter concerts took place on the 2nd ult., in the Town Hall. The concert commenced with Miss Mascall's sacred Cantata, All Thy works praise Thee, which was performed in a highly creditable manner; Mrs. Salenger, Miss Wheeler, and Miss Foss taking the solos. The rest of the programme was miscellaneous. A noticeable feature of the concert was the admirable manner in which a number of juvenile pupils of Miss Mascall acquitted themselves. Miss Mascall presided at the pianoforte and violin piano, and Mr. Davis conducted.

WORTHING.—On the 22nd of October 1872, at the invitation of Mr. L. S. Palmer, an influential body of ladies and gentlemen met and formed a choral class, called "The Worthing Sacred Harmonic Society." Since that time two concerts have been given, Haydn's Creation being performed at the first, and Handel's Messiah at the second, both of which were highly successful, artistically and financially, beyond the most sanguine expectations. At the annual meeting of the Society, thanks were voted to the conductor, Mr. L. S. Palmer, the organist, Mr. Herbert S. Cooke, and the Honorary Secretaries, whose indefatigable exertions have mainly contributed to the present prosperity of the Association. The services rendered by the President, the Rev. W. Read, were also duly acknowledged.—On Wednesday, the 17th ult., the students and masters of the College gave a concert, in aid of St. George's Church. The singing of H. and A. Durham deserves special mention, and also the pianoforte playing of C. Joyce, J. H. Woolton, and E. W. Cheesman. The choral music was fairly rendered, and songs were contributed by Messrs. St. John Cottingham, and L. S. Palmer. Mr. F. T. Piggott conducted at the piano with great care and ability.

YORK.—The inauguration of the winter classical concerts has been looked forward to with considerable interest by the music lovers of this city, and the undertaking has shown a great spirit of enterprise on the part of Mr. John Wilson, the entrepreneur of the scheme. The only drawback to the first concert was that, owing to the dense fog, Mr. Charles Hallé, the conductor, did not arrive until the overture to Der Freischütz, and the Rosamunde music had been played. Rossini's Overture to Guillaume Tell and Beethoven's Symphony in F, however, went excellently, under Mr. Hallé's experienced direction; and the leader of the band, Herr Straus, played Spohr's Adagio in F with brilliant success. The pianoforte performance of Mr. Hallé was of course one of the important features of the concert; and Mdle. Bunden, who was the only vocalist, elicited the warmest applause in all her songs, receiving an encore for her rendering of "Non più mesta." At the second concert, on the 2nd ult., the instrumental portion of the programme consisted exclusively of Chamber music. Mozart's quartet in G minor, and Schumann's in E flat were played to perfection by Mr. Hallé, Madame Norman-Neruda, Herr Bernhardt, and M. Vieuxtemps; and Dussek's Andante and Rondo in B flat for pianoforte and violin, and Mendelssohn's "Tema con Variazioni" in D, for pianoforte and violoncello (in the first of which Mr. Hallé was joined by Madame Norman-Neruda, and in the second by M. Vieuxtemps), were received with marked approbation by the audience. The two pianoforte solos—Chopin's Nocturne in E major, and Weber's Moto continuo—displayed Mr. Hallé's powers to the greatest advantage, and Madame Norman-Neruda's performance of a violin Fantasia must also claim a word of praise. Mdle. Enriquez contributed some vocal solos which were highly appreciated. The hall was well filled.

THE CRUSADERS.

A NEW SACRED CANTATA.

LIBRETTO BY MARIAN MILLAR;

MUSIC BY HENRY HILES, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

Price 2s. 6d.

"Of the workmanship of the 'Crusaders,' it is needless for us to speak, because all who know anything of Dr. Hiles' compositions will be aware of his skill in part-writing. We have spoken of the work in some considerable detail, because its examination has given us great pleasure. It is a thoroughly musicianly, and (as we have already intimated) very pleasing work; and we most heartily congratulate the Composer upon its production. We ought to add that it is by no means difficult of execution, and will be found very suitable for performance by small Choral Societies."—The Monthly Musical Record, Aug., 1873.

"The Cantata was exceedingly well received (in Manchester); several attempts at encores being made; but Dr. Hiles judiciously proceeded with the work, and at the close he received a very warm ovation. The Cantata having been recently reviewed in these columns renders any detailed notice of its many merits unnecessary; and we may simply express the hope of having an early opportunity of hearing its repetition."—The Choir, Nov. 8th.

HARGREAVES'S PROFESSIONAL AND CONNOISSEURS' HARMONIUM.

(REGISTERED.)

The following Testimonial from Boyton Smith, Esq., in reference to No. 3 of this model, is addressed to all who desire the most satisfactory instrument of the Harmonium class ever yet offered to the public:—

"Dear Sir,

"The Harmonium I had of you some time since is

"The most satisfactory instrument of the class I ever had.

"The mechanical arrangement

"Is excellent, and has never been out of order.

"While from the

"Agreeable quality and variety of its tone, it is ever a pleasure to play upon it.

"I have never tired of it, as I have of other kinds; and it is

"Its capability of producing continued new effects that renders it truly as you style it

"THE PROFESSOR'S HARMONIUM."

"My Violoncello stop is the wonder of every one,

"So close is the resemblance.

"Weymouth, 1872."

"Yours faithfully,

"BOYTON SMITH.

See Testimonials from Dr. H. Leslie and others.

HARGREAVES'S AMERICAN IRON FRAME PIANO
Has a double iron frame cast in one piece; cross strings, suspended soundboard: it is the me plus ultra of Piano construction, excelling all others made with wooden bracings, or mixed iron and wood bracings, falsely called Iron Frame Pianos. It is especially addressed to all those wishing to possess the finest toned Instrument that money can purchase.

BOUDOIR GRAND, on the latest American system, cast iron frame and bars, three strings, oblique and cross strings, improved overstrung scale, called Hargreaves's American Iron-Frame Cross-strings Pianoforte; surpassing all Pianos made on the usual system, in quality, quantity, and duration of tone. These three qualities command instant recognition as soon as it is touched. Price, in the above-named length, 120 guineas.

W. HARGREAVES, Importer of Foreign Pianos, supplies the choicest productions of the greatest houses of the capitals of Europe. Depot for Steinweg Pianofortes and Pianinos; for Boesendorfer's Vienna Exhibition Grands, and the chef d'œuvres of Bechstein, Lipp, Blüthner, and all other Continental houses holding medals from recent Exhibitions.

STAR SOL-FA is a Method of Notation specially designed for the Notation of Vocal Part-Music. It is both a Staff and a Scale Notation, and is well adapted for Class Teaching, as the Notation of the Scale is the same in all keys alike. The method owes its origin to an attempt to devise "a Notation which, while marking the key-relationship of tones, should also mark their rise and fall, thereby affording a useful help to the eye, which the Tonic Sol-fa Notation does not give." See "Tonic Sol-fa Reporter," June, 1873. A full account of the method for six stamps; a short account sent gratis and post free on application to Mr. Bell, Hemsworth, Pontefract.

"Mr. Rogers has obviously striven to meet the want of means of the small Choral Societies with which England abounds. His solos and choruses are alike easy, fluent, and pleasing; while the Pianoforte Accompaniment makes no very serious demands upon an average player. TWO THEORISTS ON OPERATIC REFORM.

By F. WEBER.

"From Life only, as the sole origin of our cravings for it, may we gather the subject and the form of all Art; wherever life is moulded by Fashion, true Art cannot accrue from it."—WAGNER, Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft.

It is among the chief merits of Wagner's theoretical writings, from which the above words are taken at random, that they point with a clear and steady aim at the incongruities and absurdities of the modern operatic stage, that they endeavour honestly and fearlessly to expose the very root of the evil, and that they raise before our eyes the vision of a new edifice, the Drama of the Future, the conception of which we cannot but call a grand and a noble one.

Wagner is one in a line of modern German composers, of whom C. M. von Weber may be considered the first, who have frequently exchanged the conductor's chair with the critic's box. The number of articles, chiefly critical, from the pen of the composer of "Freischütz," which appeared at different times in German periodicals, is considerable. They all bear witness to the author's great artistic soul and acuteness of judgment, which never stoops to prejudice, even where the works of his bitterest antagonists are concerned. In Wagner's writings this critical faculty is developed into a constructive one, of which the above theory of the "Drama of the Future" is the upshot. The book, on its appearance, raised a storm of angry controversy, but we venture to assert that it would have subsided sooner, and its undoubted merits been more calmly considered, were it not for a certain harshness in the author's judgment of others, more apparent still in his subsequent writings, which added unnecessary fuel to an already sufficiently unedifying party strife. This is, proved by the fact that out of twenty-four books and pamphlets relating to Wagner, published in Germany during the years 1867—71, no less than eleven are directed against his angry pamphlet entitled "Judaism in Music."

Whatever may be the ultimate bearings of Wagner's theory—ridiculed as it has been by some and dismissed as the idle speculations of a dreamer; anathematised by others (and of these not a few whose opinion is entitled to the greatest respect) as dangerous, if not fatal to all art and to music in particular—it embodies at least this one idea, in support of which all well-wishers of art ought to combine, viz., the liberation of the Stage from the fetters of Fashion and its radical reform, both with regard to operatic and to purely dramatic performances. That such a reform is sorely needed who can deny? Who can shut his eyes to the fact that our theatres, our opera-houses, are nightly opened only to show off the particular qualities of this or that popular actor, this or that favourite singer. That operas are written with a distinct view to exhibiting the powers of one or two "stars," and that it has become a matter of indifference with a vast majority of opera-goers what particular work of art may be submitted to their senses. Are we then going back to the days when opera was yet in its cradle, to the days when a Faustina and a Cuzzoni could divide fashionable London into two hostile camps, to the noisy clamour of which Handel was fain to compose his grand operatic airs? Have we not, since then, had a Gluck to show us the deeply dramatic powers of music on the stage; a Mozart to combine with it the expression of all the emotions of which the human heart is capable; a Beethoven to hold up to us, in his one great dramatic work, the ideal of human grandeur and purity, to which alone he thought his music capable of being wedded on the stage?

Glancing at the list of operatic performances during a season, here in London as elsewhere, one would indeed think that the voice of these great masters was drowned amidst the dance tunes of the modern Italian school; that the ideal to which they have pointed was crushed by the encyclopædian monstrosities of the Parisian "Grand Opéra."

What, then, is the conclusion we naturally draw from this? As has been most justly remarked in these columns: "We are driven to admit the truth that our Italian Opera-houses have now degenerated into mere fashionable lounges; that real art is represented outside their walls."

It is for this reason that the formation of a Wagner Society, and the introduction of the ideas and the music of this modern reformer have, of late, been rather welcomed, than otherwise, by lovers of true art in this country. We may not agree with much in his intended reforms, especially with regard to the position which Music is intended to hold in his new Drama, we may even consider his theory of this grand combination of all arts, called the "Drama of the Future," to be chimerical; yet we acknowledge in him the honest and enthusiastic seeker after truth, who has boldly struck out a new path for himself.

We call it a new path, because this "apostle of art of the nineteenth century," as he has been denominated by some of his admirers, has not only, in an elaborate theory defined, as it were, its exact position on the map, but has essayed practically to wend his way along its somewhat steep passes, cutting away the underwood and hewing down trees, some of them of many years' standing. But the idea of a revival of the stage of ancient Greece in the combination of the various arts, and with the additional advantage of the vastly increased musical resources of modern days, is by no means a new one. Opera itself owes its origin to an attempt at such a restoration, but while its relation to the Greek drama was, at best, but an outward one, it remained without influence on the national life and the highest interests of modern culture, which had been the privilege of the Theatre of Athens. The attempted restoration, in this respect, failed; and ever since then there have been critics, more or less earnest and enthusiastic, deploring the existing state of the operatic stage, and sighing for a genuine and lasting reunion of the sister-arts. Among these champions of operatic reform of a by-gone age, there is, perhaps, none more deserving to be associated with the author of the "Drama of the Future" than Count Algarotti. This remarkable man, artist, poet and thinker, whose highly cultivated mind rendered him a competent judge also in things operatic, but whose writings are now forgotten, has embodied his idea of the "Drama of the Future" in a small volume, from which it may not be uninteresting to select a few extracts.

Francesco Algarotti was born at Venice, in 1712. He lived for many years at the Court, and in the service of Frederick the Great, by whom also he was created a Count: during the last ten years of his life he resided at Pisa, and died in 1764, after having published a number of books on a variety of subjects, and among these his "Saggio sopra L'opera in musica," now under our consideration. The "Essay" (which, by the way, is dedicated to an English statesman, William Pitt), after a few introductory remarks as to the original intentions of the founders of opera, treats in separate chapters of its component parts, viz., poetry, music, dancing, scenery, &c., and finally of architecture itself, reminding us in this form at once of Wagner's more elaborate and certainly more profound treatise. In introducing the subject the Count, surveying the original idea which gave birth to the opera, says:—"In forming it no article was forgotten, no means omitted, no ingredient left unemployed, that could in any shape contribute to so important an end; and indeed it may with reason be affirmed that the most powerful charms of music, of the mimic art, of dancing and of painting, are in operatic performances all happily combined, that they may conspire, in a friendly manner, to refine our sentiments."

But what is actually produced under the name of opera "now-a-days" is widely different:—

"Opera has degenerated to a degree of insipidity and irksomeness, through a defect of that harmony which should always prevail among the several parts of which it is composed. . . . By such neglects has opera dwindled into a languid, badly connected, improbable, grotesque and monstrous aggregate."

He concludes with the remark that theatres, being in the hands of "mercenary undertakers," reform can hardly be hoped for but under the patronage of a Sovereign, whose Court affords a fostering asylum to the Muses. Our critic does not yet, indeed, adopt the modern notion that the composer of the future should write his own libretto. The composer and the poet he deals with separately, but it is to the latter the more important part is assigned. "The poet is to carry in his mind a comprehensive view of the whole of the drama, because those parts, which are not the production of his pen, ought to flow from the dictates of his actuating judgment, which is to give being and movement to the whole." "Opera, in the main, is nothing more than a tragic poem recited to musical sounds." For this reason the composer of operas ought to be in a more subordinate position.

"It is an undeniable fact that in the earliest ages the poets were all musical proficient; the vocal part then ranked, as it should, which was to render the thoughts of the mind and affections of the heart with more forcible, more lively and more kindling expression." "But now the two twin-sisters, Poetry and Music, go no longer hand in hand. . . . Nor can a remedy be applied, otherwise but by the modest discretion of a composer, who will not think it beneath him to receive from the poet's mouth the purport of his meaning and intention . . . and thus keep up a dependence and friendly intercourse."

Having thus traced out the position which, in his opinion, the composer of the Musical Drama ought to hold, the Count proceeds, in a very sensible manner, to review the details of operatic music, such as he found it, pointing out their incongruities and the utter absence of the dramatic element in them.

In another chapter—on dancing—the value of this art as an accessory to the musical drama is dwelt upon, from which, however, it ought to spring genuinely and as forming part of the general plot. "It should be imitative of nature and of the affections of the mind, by the body's moving to musical numbers."

After some further remarks on scenery, dresses, &c., and a detailed plan of the structure of the theatre in which this revival of the Grecian tragedy should take place, our Reformer, seeing his ideal already realised in the future, enthusiastically says in conclusion:—"Then will opera no longer be called an irrational, monstrous and grotesque composition; on the contrary, it will display a lively image of the Grecian Tragedy, in which architecture, poetry, music, dancing and every kind of theatrical apparatus united their efforts to create an illusion of such resistless power over the human mind, that from the combination of a thousand pleasures formed so extraordinary a one, as in our world has nothing to equal it!"

One thing more we ought to mention. The Count, while deploring the fact that "even the most attentive of our now opera frequenters can be silent only to hear some air of bravura," adds that, in the Drama of the Future, when Music shall be restored to her pristine dignity, "the greatest silence will be imposed on all spectators." Alas, when will that looked for time come! We are afraid we are yet somewhat removed from the realisation of the dreams of this eighteenth century critic. Since he wrote his little book we have seen the Glucks and the Mozarts, the Beethovens and the Webers, and they have passed away; and yet we sorely needed a second Algarotti to remind us of the fact that our opera-houses ought to be the temples devoted to the highest interests of art, and into which we should enter with reverence.

This has been emphatically done by Wagner, and it is, we repeat, among his chief merits in his position as a critical writer. How far he has succeeded, as a creative artist, in approaching the ideal of the "Drama of the Future" in his own music dramas, it is not now our object to investigate: they are yet too little known in this country to admit of any profitable criticism.

That in spite of the shallowness of popular tastes, the musical art does advance: that it will eventually reconquer that vast field for the display of its highest qualities, the Stage; that, in fact, there is a future and a great future for the musical drama, we do not for a moment doubt. The progress of all art, between one phase of its development and another, may be slow, nay, almost imperceptible. It is during these, more or less protracted, hazy intervals that the critical police are busiest, going their rounds and turning their dark lanterns this way and that, in the often vain attempt to show us whither we are going. And while criticism is still thus engaged, the rising sun of creative genius will, sooner or later, scatter the fogs before it, till we are standing once more in the glorious light of a new day. We are now in a state of transition: but beyond the somewhat labyrinthian strivings of the day, we look with the eye of faith to the fulfilment of the prophecies, the legacies of Mozart and Beethoven, contained in "Don Giovanni" and "Fidelio."

OLD MUSIC.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

A SHORT time ago a friend, in routing out the contents of a cupboard, which had not been disturbed for many years, came upon a bundle of paper which, on being opened, was found to consist of music. Imagining that this would be considered in the light of an unexpected prize, I enquired of the finder what he intended to do with it, when, to my surprise, he replied that it was only a lot of "old music," and that consequently it would go, with the rest of the rubbish, to the butter-shop. Finding that I expressed some curiosity respecting this, to him, valueless parcel, I experienced no difficulty in supplanting the butterman; and as soon as I returned home of course lost no time in examining my gift. As I expected, it turned out to be a collection of pieces, some original editions, of the highest interest to all who value the grand old works which were written in the days when composition was not a mere trade, and musicians had not begun to be ruled by their pupils. Here were rare Sonatas, airs with variations, Gavottes, Musettes, &c., by men now scarcely known, and many by composers who have become such idols of the public through their more important works, that it appears doubly strange how such noble music as this should be allowed to pass away. In looking through the soiled, crumpled and torn leaves of these compositions, I could not help imagining how much pleasure they had afforded to players now long since departed; and the genial musings of Charles Lamb, in his "Detached Thoughts on Books and Reading," were recalled vividly to my mind. "How beautiful to a genuine lover of reading," he says, "are the sullied leaves and worn-out appearance, nay the very odour (beyond Russia), if we would not forget kind feelings in fastidiousness, of an old 'Circulating Library' 'Tom Jones' or 'Vicar of Wakefield!'" How they speak of the thousand thumbs that have turned over their pages with delight. . . . Who would have them a whit less soiled? What better condition could we desire to see them in?" Placing some of the pieces from my parcel on the desk of the pianoforte, I soon found that deciphering the notes was by no means an easy matter. They had been fingered for the grandmother of my friend, when a young child; and it was obvious, from the innumerable pencil directions (which were often written over the music itself), that her teacher was not a man to be trifled with. "Do not put your thumb upon a black key," "Mind the B flat" (in the key of F major), "Play the top passage on the drawing-room pianoforte," "Count six in the bar" (in 3-4 time), were some of the written instructions; and it was evident that any explanation of the value of notes did not form a portion of the lesson, for lines in all directions between treble and bass saved the pupil all the trouble of thinking, by demonstrating pictorially where every note in each hand was to be played. The first thing that strikes us, in examining works of this class, is the solidity with which they are written, as opposed to the majority of pianoforte pieces in the present day: and here of course we must see that music has but followed the fashion, for as the demand for an article increases, its quality inevitably deteriorates. This is essentially an age of rapid production. Houses are built up so slightly that many would tumble down did not one support the other. Furniture is manufactured so cheaply that persons about to marry are informed that they can "save their first year's rent" by purchasing at a certain establishment. Articles of wearing apparel, glossy, but frail, tempt those who would be in the fashion at a trifling cost; and false jewellery has almost taken the place of real. That the music-market should be supplied with equally ephemeral articles is of course only to be expected. Fantasias, Nocturnes and common-place dance-tunes, under various fantastic titles, have therefore supplanted music in which form and development were the essential characteristics; and pieces thus written down to the capacities of the pupils, like the imitation ornaments just mentioned, pass so well in society that few care to enquire into their intrinsic value. In turning again, however, to the pile of fine old music which had given rise to this train of thought, I could not help reflecting on the soundness of the maxim that real worth must in the end prevail. For, in spite of the immense quantity of music composed for the unreflecting multitude, do we not see a decided taste setting in for the true and solid works of art? Side by side with the love of display, is there not a feeling growing up which, if duly fostered, will lead us back into that road from which we have so long (perhaps almost unconsciously) deviated? Until very lately, for instance, the works of that mighty genius, John Sebastian Bach, were comparatively unknown in this country: true it is that advanced musical students played his fugues, and portions of his sacred works crept occasionally into the programmes of the more adventurous Choral Societies; but the general public was entirely unacquainted with his compositions, and few persons were indeed aware that he had written any vocal music beyond some unimportant pieces for the church, which, being decidedly "heavy," had been long ago deservedly consigned to oblivion. Now all this is changed: Bach's "Matthew" and "St. John" Passion music is performed all over London and the principal musical towns in England; in cathedrals, churches and concert-rooms, drawing listeners in thousands to worship with the heart (as did the mighty master himself) through the medium of a language the universality of which is never more fully shown than when employed in the service of religion. But it may reasonably be asked how has this great revolution in the public taste been so suddenly effected? The answer to this is simple; it has not been suddenly, but gradually produced. Twenty years ago such a result could not have been attained; but all who have watched attentively the state of music in this country must have seen that the ground has been carefully prepared for the appreciation of the great works in art, not only by their occasional performance at the "Monday Popular Concerts" and at the various "Pianoforte Recitals" in London, but by their publication, under the editorship of some of our most eminent resident professors. When people cease to be frightened by the word "classical," and even school-girls become accustomed to look upon the old composers rather as their friends than their enemies, such a profoundly religious composition as Bach's "Passion Music" (which contains no sensational choruses and no "gorgeousness" of instrumentation) may stand a chance of being listened to with at least a reverent toleration; and this end being once attained, the music may be allowed to make its own way with a certainty as to its ultimate general appreciation. But it is not Bach alone who has thus awakened to a second life amongst us: the smaller pianoforte compositions of Handel, Haydn, Dussek, Clementi and others of even a later period are now to be seen on the pianofortes of amateurs; and only a short time ago I heard an enthusiastic little pianist play a Sonata by S. F. Pinto, a composer whose name is scarcely even known here, although he was one of our own countrymen. The rage for Pasacailles, Gavottes, Sarabandes, and many other compositions of this class has indeed become so general that not only are we raking up a Gavotte supposed to have been written by Louis XIII., but arrangements of those composed for other instruments are constantly being issued, and modern writers even are adopting these models for their lighter pieces, although the dances which called them into existence are now almost unknown. That we are moving onwards there can be no question, but an occasional retrospective glance may make our progress more sure and steady. In much of our costume we are reproducing the style which prevailed in the days of our grandmothers, and "pre-Raphaelism" in painting is but a protest against the mere "prettiness" which was gradually creeping in, to the detriment of true art. Let us then handle carefully the half-torn copies of music which may from time to time be discovered in our lumber-rooms: who knows but that the oldest piece may prove the newest fashion? The works of genius may slumber, but can never die; and the spirit of revival, so characteristic of the present day, should be helped on by all who have the true interest of music at heart. Waste paper can be supplied in abundance from the modern musical compositions, without hazarding the chance of a valuable piece being finally entombed, as my friend's parcel would certainly have been but for my timely interference, in a butter-shop. Even original manuscripts of important works have often been used to wrap up tea, sugar, and other necessities of daily consumption; and the parts of Bach's Sanctus in the Mass in B minor—stated by the composer to be in the possession of Count Spork, in Bohemia—were supposed to have been given to the gardener to bind round grafted fruit trees.

It is with sincere regret that we announce the death of Madame Parepa-Rosa, which took place on the 21st ult., at her residence, Warwick Crescent, Maida Vale. Her numerous triumphs as prima donna, in the highest lyrical works during Mr. Gye's management of the Lyceum, are well known to all opera goers; and our columns have from time to time recorded her extraordinary success in America, where, with her husband, Herr Carl Rosa, she travelled for some years with an operatic company which was in every respect a model of good management and perfect organisation. Apart from the void which will be long felt amongst the private friends of Madame Parepa, her decease is a sad blow to art in this country, for Herr Rosa had already projected a season of English Opera at Drury Lane Theatre, and the first work to be performed was Wagner's "Lohengrin." The abandonment of this enterprise, however, may be only temporary; but very many years may elapse before the place of so accomplished an artist can be supplied. Madame Parepa was only in her 37th year, and her many amiable qualities secured her the friendship and esteem of all who knew her. The funeral, which was attended by many members of the musical profession, took place at Highgate Cemetery on the 26th ult.

THAT the "moveable Do" is destined to replace the "fixed Do" system of notation for vocal classes appears now pretty evident; but if Mr. Curwen were to see half the plans to achieve this object which are poured upon us, both in manuscript and print, he might be surprised at the number of enemies near his camp. In all these, however, we may say that the retention of the staff is the main object; and if we call attention to the latest proposition which has reached us—"The Guide to Star Sol-fa," by John Bell—it is only to show that none of these reformers are awed by the abolition of the five-line staff, for this notation is written upon four lines, which, with the three spaces, precisely contain the seven notes of the scale. We understand that a course of vocal exercises upon this system is now in preparation, so that, like most of the authors of the methods submitted to us, Mr. Bell is evidently in earnest. However ably, then, the "Tonic Sol-fa Reporter" may record the doings of Mr. Curwen's disciples, it is obvious that fairly to chronicle the progress of the various reforms in this direction, we shall shortly require a "Moveable Do Reporter."

THE American musical journals, which are from time to time forwarded to us, contain many earnest articles upon the art which, were space more at our disposal, we should be pleased to quote. But their advertisements are, to say the least, peculiar. "Do you want anything in the musical line, from a selection of new music to a Mason and Hamlin organ?" is one which lately appeared. A work containing solfeggi, for soprano and mezzo-soprano voices, is thus heralded by the publishers:—"Italian Solfeggi are to the voice what soft buckskin is to furniture. It never scratches, is safe to use, and the oftener you use it the smoother and more polished becomes the wood." The next is, to us, somewhat incomprehensible:—"Pilliwink Polka. Not by Johnny Smoker, but it would go well on his 'fifey,' as it is exceedingly brilliant." The "True Juvenile Song-book" is said to be a treasure to children, as it "contains instructions that will learn them to read music readily;" and further on it is stated that it "contains instructions that will learn them to sing with the taste and expression which alone constitutes good singing." Let us hope that the "instructions" in the book are conveyed in more grammatical language than that employed in the advertisement.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE Saturday Concerts were resumed on the 17th ult., the principal feature in the programme being Schubert's Symphony in C, the execution of which, under Mr. Manns's able direction, was in every respect the most perfect we have yet heard, even at the Crystal Palace, where Schubert's works have been for years fostered with a tenderness which cannot be overpraised. Although the rendering of this noble composition reflected the highest credit upon every department of the orchestra, we cannot resist giving utterance to our admiration at the exquisite beauty of tone in the opening passages for the horn, and the excessive delicacy of the oboe, which has so important a part in the work. As might be expected, the applause at the conclusion of each movement was most enthusiastic; and, but for the length of the Symphony, there can be little doubt that encores would have been insisted upon. The other orchestral pieces were Mozart's Overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro," H. Pierson's Overture to "As you like it" (which was played for the first time, but produced little effect), Mendelssohn's early Overture to "The Wedding of Camacho" and Taubert's "Liebesliedchen," from the music to "The Tempest," which was unanimously redemanded. Miss Anna Williams was scarcely, we think, judicious in choosing Pacini's Cavatina, "Ah! con lui" for her first appearance since her return from Italy. We liked her better in Handel's "From mighty Kings," but in both pieces she displayed a fine voice which may ripen with diligent study. The other vocalists were Madame Patey and Signor Agnesi. At the following concert, on the 24th ult., a Concerto, for organ and orchestra, by Mr. H. Gadsby, was the novelty. The composer's well earned reputation ensured a welcome hearing for his new work, which is written with the ease of an experienced musician, and admirably designed for the display of the legitimate resources of the solo instrument. Mr. Gadsby was fortunate in having so able an exponent of his composition as Dr. Stainer, who played it throughout in a masterly style. At the end of the Concerto, the composer was called for and warmly applauded.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ON Thursday, the 8th ult., Haydn's "Creation" was given with much success, the choral portions of the work, especially, being rendered throughout with a decision and intelligence which proved that more than ordinary time and attention had been bestowed upon their preparation. "The Heavens are telling," and "Achieved is the glorious work" may be particularly mentioned as entitled to high praise; but the beauty of tone in many of the delicate choruses was remarked by all musical listeners, the more audible marks of approval, however, of course being reserved for those pieces containing that grandeur of effect which excites as well as gratifies a mixed audience. Signor Giulio Perkin, who made his first appearance in London on the occasion, achieved a genuine success, his fine bass voice telling especially in the air "Rolling in foaming billows," which was enthusiastically applauded. As an exponent of sacred music he appears likely to take the highest rank, and we shall look forward with much interest to his rendering of the many parts in Oratorio music so well suited for his register. Mr. Cummings (who supplied the place of Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from indisposition) sang with his accustomed artistic feeling throughout, especially distinguishing himself in the air "In native worth." Madame Lemmens-Sherrington was as excellent as ever in the soprano music; and Mr. Raynham, who is always painstaking and conscientious, gave the tenor portions allotted to him with good expression. Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" were performed at the seventh concert, on the 22nd ult. These works are so often coupled together that we are now beginning to get quite accustomed, almost insensibly, to institute comparisons between them; and although we have no intention now of weighing their relative merits, there can be no question that for an appeal to an ordinary public audience no two compositions could be better selected. The instrumental portion of the "Lobgesang" went well, and was much applauded. In the first soprano music Madame Elena Corani sang with much purity, not only in the solo with chorus, "Praise thou the Lord," but in the duet "I waited for the Lord" (the second soprano part of which was most carefully rendered by Miss Isabel Weale), and also the important solo leading to the chorus "The night is departing." Mr. Sims Reeves was again too ill to appear; and Mr. Cummings elicited hearty applause by his singing of the tenor music, especially the celebrated "Watchman" scene, every phrase of which was delivered with the most perfect intonation. All the choruses were given with much precision, but the finest performance was the choral, "Let all men praise the Lord," which the audience would have gladly heard again. In the "Stabat Mater" precedence must be given to the solos. Madame Corani's voice was heard to much advantage, not only in the trying "Inflamatus," but in the two quartets, and also in the duet, "Quis est homo" (with Miss Antoinette Sterling), which was encored, but not repeated. Miss Sterling has a really fine contralto voice, which was fully tested in the air "Fac ut portem," and her careful singing in the duet already mentioned proved that she is resolved not to rest content with producing effect as a showy solo singer. Mr. Cummings sang the air "Cujus animam" so well as to elicit a storm of applause; and Signor Agnesi, in "Pro peccatis," and also in the solo parts of "Eia, mater," was highly successful. The choir again sang with much decision and command of tone, especially in the choral portions accompanying the solos. At both the concerts Mr. Barnby, as conductor, and Dr. Stainer, as organist, displayed those high qualifications which are now so well known and appreciated.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE announcement that Dr. Crotch's "Palestine" was to be performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society on Friday, the 23rd ult., after it had been neglected for upwards of forty years, drew a large audience to Exeter Hall. Those whose recollection could carry them back to the time when Dr. Crotch was living and working amongst us—he died in 1847—would be naturally anxious to put their early impression to the test. But by far the greater number were no doubt actuated by curiosity, pure and simple. Both, however, had the gratification of hearing the work presented under most favourable circumstances, band and chorus being alike effective, and the soloists in every way admirable.

That the work is an effort of the highest genius no one, we suppose, would venture to urge. But that there is an amount of talent displayed in portions of it, which almost reaches that high standard, is equally certain. Amongst the most successful numbers may be mentioned the Duet for soprano and tenor, "Such the faint echo;" the bass Air and Chorus, "Then the harp awoke;" the well-known Quartet, "Lo! Star-led chiefs;" and the Sestet, "Lo! Cherub bands." The Choruses are characterised by a liberality in the use of brass instruments, which occasionally borders upon licence, and the solos now and then have the clearness of their melodic phrases sacrificed to the elaborate contrapuntal devices assigned to the orchestra; but notwithstanding these defects, the work has sufficient intrinsic merit to fairly justify its being rescued from oblivion. If music of such a bold character had no other value, it would be useful as a protest against the production of those effeminate and immature works which are occasionally thrust upon the notice of long-suffering audiences.

We may have occasion to return to the consideration of the work itself, and treat it—as its importance demands—at greater length. Meanwhile, it is enough to say that Madame Sherrington sang with all her usual fire and animation, Miss Julia Elton rendered the little she had to do with quiet and unobtrusive effect, Mr. Cummings declaimed in a manly and vigorous fashion, as is his wont, and Signor Agnesi indicated plainly his intention of making the same mark in Oratorio that he has already done in Opera. The concerted music received additional effect from the agreeable voice of Miss Ellen Horne, and Mr. Carter also rendered valuable assistance in the same department. Sir Michael Costa conducted, as usual.

WAGNER SOCIETY.

THE third concert of this Society, which was given at St. James's Hall on the 23rd ult., was in accordance with the original design of the Association, which was professedly to spread a knowledge of Wagner's dramatic works, as far as was practicable, by a mere concert-room performance. It of course seriously detracted from the effect of the choral compositions to hear them interpreted by a rough chorus, evidently got together at a short notice; but, even with these drawbacks, the two chorals from "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" so delighted the audience that the second, "Wach' auf," was unanimously re-demanded. From "Tannhäuser" the Shepherd's Song, and Chorus of Pilgrims, the Reception of the Guests (with the popular March), and the final Chorus from Act 3, were given, and received with loud applause. The selection from "Der Fliegende Holländer," included the fine descriptive Overture, the Pilot Song and Chorus, Senta's ballad, "The Phantom Ship," the well-known "Spinning Chorus," the highly dramatic duet between Senta and the "Holländer," and the Chorus of Sailors. The solo singers were Madlle. Nita Gaetano, Mr. Bernard Lane, and Signor Gustave Garcia. All these pieces were well calculated to arouse the enthusiasm of the listeners; but we still think that, supposing the object of this Society to be something higher than the mere acquisition of funds, a recitation of an entire Opera (say "Lohengrin," for instance) should be attempted. It is true that dramatic accessories are absolutely essential for the due comprehension of Wagner's music; but this objection will also apply to those pieces which have been already so often submitted; and there can be no question that if these popular extracts are constantly selected, there will be a general belief by those unacquainted with the entire works, that the weak parts are purposely held back. At all events, in the absence of a stage representation of the Operas (which unfortunately seems as far off as ever) the Society would then feel that it had done the very best to further the cause, and this cannot be said whilst the programmes contain such well-worn compositions as Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, for example. Two of Schubert's Pianoforte Marches (brightly instrumented by Liszt) commenced the concert. Mr. Edward Dannreuther was, as usual, a most efficient conductor.

BRITISH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

THE second season of this Society commenced on the 22nd ult. at St. James's Hall. With the exception of Sir Sterndale Bennett's ever welcome Overture, "The Naiades" (which had an exceptionally fine rendering) and a clever Saltarello, for orchestra, by Mr. Hamilton Clarke, no work by an English composer was selected. The performance of Mozart's Concerto in E flat, for two pianofortes, by Miss Linda Scates (of the Royal Academy of Music) and her master Mr. Walter Macfarren, afforded a good opportunity of exhibiting native executive talent to the greatest advantage; and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony and Cherubini's overture "Les Deux Journées" tested the best qualities of the band, the thoroughly "British" character of which can be the only reason why the title of the Society is retained. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne and Miss Augusta Roche. In compliance to the Duke of Edinburgh (who is the Patron of the Society) the National Anthem and the Russian Hymn were performed by the orchestra, which is again placed under the able direction of Mr. Mount.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

It is a significant fact, that the idea of bringing the orchestra again into our churches, and sanctifying the Oratorio to the service of God, has had its first public exposition in the two great metropolitan churches.

Three years ago, when the closing week of Lent was emphasised by a service in Westminster Abbey, of which Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," with orchestral accompaniments, formed the principal part, it was felt to be an innovation of so daring a character, as only a Dean possessing enormous influence and power could possibly hope to carry out. When, some time after, the lead of Westminster was followed, and even improved upon, at St. Paul's Cathedral, by the celebration of the Dedication Festival, with all the pomp of orchestra and large chorus, it began to be looked upon as possible that the country Cathedrals would soon follow in their wake, and thus set the movement fairly afloat. The production of the minor "Passion" of Bach at St. Anne's Church, Soho, last year, gave a start to the smaller churches, which is already about to be followed in more quarters than one.

Again has the Festival of the great Apostle of the Gentiles been celebrated in the Cathedral dedicated to his honour. A large and judicious selection of movements from Mendelssohn's Oratorio, embodying the principal acts in the life of St. Paul, formed the basis of the Service. The Overture made a fitting prelude; the effect of the orchestral instruments at once satisfying all those who had been doubtful as to their ecclesiastical propriety. Tallis's Responses were used, and the "Magnificat" and "Nunc dimittis," to a setting made specially by Dr. Stainer, were rendered with full orchestral accompaniment. After the third Collect—in the place of the Anthem—came the selection from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," the solos being effectively sung by the choristers and lay clerks belonging to the Cathedral. The choruses were performed by a Choir of 350 voices, accompanied by a band of 50 instrumentalists. Mr. George Cooper presided at the organ, and Dr. Stainer conducted. The music throughout was admirably rendered.

We understand that an engagement has been offered to Mr. Barnby, by the Vicar of Hampstead, to meet the congregation of the Parish Church once each week, for the Purpose of developing congregational singing in that Church, on the principle laid down by Mr. Barnby in the paper read by him at the Church Congress at Bath.

A BALLAD CONCERT was given at Onslow Hall, Neville Street, Brompton, on Wednesday, the 21st ult., by Messrs. Rudland and Franklin. The programme was long and varied, and gave much satisfaction to a large audience. The vocalists were Mesdames Seymour, Burrington, and Reece, and Messrs. Franklin and Rudland. Several recitations were given by Mr. Walter Lacy, jun.; and the West London Vocal Concert Party contributed two quartets.

A SERVICE of Praise was held in Greville Place Church, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, on the 16th ult., when a selection from the "Messiah" was given by the Choir. All the pieces were well rendered, those most deserving of mention being "Comfort ye," and "Every valley," by Mr. Robertson; "He shall feed His flock," by Mrs. T. Callard, the accompaniment in the latter conducting greatly to the success of the piece. "Lift up your heads" and the "Hallelujah" were given with much precision, and reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. Sharp, organist of the Church.

A VERY successful concert took place at the Quebec Institution on Tuesday evening, the 20th ult., under the direction of Mr. Chas. Salaman, who introduced some new and effective compositions of his own, the most noticeable of which were six characteristic melodies for the pianoforte, "Leila," a song for tenor, sung by Mr. Stedman, and "Are other eyes," given by Miss Leonora Braham, a very promising soprano. The other vocalists were Madame Edna Hall, Miss Estelle Emrick, and Mr. Pyatt.

MR. CHILD gave a concert at Camberwell Hall, on the 22nd ult., which was well attended. The principal artists were Miss Janet Haydon, Madame Osborne Williams, Miss Christine Macdonald, and Messrs. Chaplin Henry, Wilkington, and G. S. Graham. A feature of the evening was the début of Mdle. Kociolkowska (a young and promising pupil of Mr. Child), whose pianoforte playing was much admired. Amongst the best items in the programme we may mention Miss Haydon's "Regnava nel silenzio," Mr. Henry's "Bellringer," Madame Osborne Williams's "Wreath of Roses," and Mr. Child's pianoforte solos. A young lady, Miss Christine Macdonald (a pupil of Mr. Child), also developed considerable talent in her singing of some Scotch melodies.

THE St. Jude's Institute held a conversazione at the Elementary Schools in King Henry's Walk, Mildmay Park, on the 12th ult., the large room being specially decorated for the occasion, when several ladies and gentlemen assisted in the musical programme of the evening. The secular concerted music consisted of Pearsall's "O, who will o'er the downs so free;" Sullivan's "O hush thee, my babe" (encored); Barnby's "Sweet and low;" and H. Leslie's "Memory," which was tastefully sung by Miss Codner, Master Collisson, and Mr. S. W. Simpson. Among the sacred pieces may be mentioned "O taste, and see" (Goss), which was much appreciated, and "Behold, how good and joyful" (Whitfield). The recitative, "See now he sleepeth" ("Elijah"), introduced the trio "Lift thine eyes," which was very well rendered; and "He watching over Israel" completed this selection. There were two intervals, during which addresses were given, and the proceedings closed with the National Anthem. The success of the entertainment was mainly owing to Mr. Sydney Collisson, who conducted. Mr. John Codner, organist of St. Jude's, presided at the pianoforte.

THREE deputations of professors and teachers of the Tonic Sol-fa system of music—from the Tonic Sol-fa College, representing 431 members, the Free Church Normal College, Glasgow, and the Free Church Psalmody Committee of Edinburgh—recently waited upon Mr. Forster, at the Education Department, for the purpose of laying before him the disadvantage under which the teachers and students of this method labour in their competitive examinations, owing to the way in which a number of technical questions are put by the Government Inspector. Mr. Vernon Lushington, Q.C., introduced the deputations. Mr. Forster was addressed at considerable length by Mr. John Curwen, Mr. Alexander Ellis, Mr. A. Ashcroft, Mr. Kidstone, Professor Miller, and Mr. Colin Brown. A memorial, signed by some hundreds of teachers of the Tonic Sol-fa system, was also presented. The speakers urged that the system was being very largely taught in Board schools, and that many of the managers would have no other teachers than those qualified and certificated to teach the method. A great difficulty, however, was thrown in the way of their obtaining certificates by the manner in which a number of questions are frequently put by Mr. Hullah, Her Majesty's inspector, and the author of the Doh-ray-me system, who, it was believed, did not favour the Tonic Sol-fa method so much as would an independent inspector, or one who understood Mr. Curwen's system and the old notation as well. The memorial concluded with the prayer "that their Lordships of the Education Department would appoint an inspector who was thoroughly master of both systems, or that they would grant to the Tonic Sol-faists a separate examiner, who should be entirely independent of the present Government inspector." Mr. Forster inquired whether the deputation asserted that, while some of the questions put were unintelligible under the Tonic Sol-fa system, they would not be so under the old notation. Several gentlemen of the deputation urged that they were not only unintelligible, but useless, calculated to mislead, and such that no one who thoroughly understood the system would think of asking. Mr. Forster said he thought it was only fair to remind them that Mr. Hullah was elected as the public inspector from his general knowledge of music. He would also call their attention to some of the published reports of their own committees, in which it was stated that Her Majesty's inspector had visited the schools and examined the pupils with his usual ability and impartiality. The subject should have his most careful consideration, and he was quite sure the Department would endeavour to act, as usual, with justice and impartiality to the authors, teachers, and students of each system.—Times.

THE January concert of the St. George's Glee Union was given on the 2nd ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, before a large audience. The choral portion of the programme included "For the New Year," "Parting and Meeting," "The Christmas Madrigal," "Hardy Norseman," "Men of Harlech," "Mynheer van Dunk," "The Chafers," and the "Gaping Catch," all of which were well sung by members of the Choir. Miss Janet King gave a new song, "Camelia" (Ganz), with much taste; and also, with Miss Edith Heath (a very youthful pupil), played Diabelli's pianoforte Duet in D, in which both displayed decided talent. Miss Buley, Mr. Jekyll, Mr. King, and Mr. Warren contributed songs; and Miss Ada Matthews, in a brilliant pianoforte solo, evinced considerable skill. The concert was under the conductorship of Mr. Garside.

A TESTIMONIAL, consisting of a beautiful specimen of Irish poplin and a suit of Irish point lace, has been recently presented to Madlle. Titiens in Dublin. This present was subscribed for by the residents of the city, and the presentation was made by Miss Madeline Johnston, secretary to the Committee, who said that, however slight it might be, it showed the estimation in which Madlle. Titiens was held in Dublin as an artist and a gentlewoman, and the appreciation of her charity in alleviating the sufferings of the afflicted.

THE Choir of the Lay Helpers' Association will have a special service at St. Paul's Cathedral, on Thursday evening, the 5th inst. The Anthem will be the whole of Mendelssohn's Psalm, "As the hart pants." Mr. Hoyte will conduct, and Mr. E. H. Thorne will preside at the organ.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT was announced to lecture on Friday, the 30th ult., on "Weber and his Times," at the evening meeting of the Royal Institution of Great Britain.

MR. RIDLEY PRENTICE'S Monthly Popular Concerts, at Brixton, continue to attract the lovers of sterling chamber music to the Angell Town Institution. At the fourth concert, on the 20th ult., Mr. E. Prout's very clever Concertante Duet in A major (for pianoforte and harmonium) was excellently performed by Mr. Prentice and the composer, and received with the most enthusiastic applause.

A CONCERT and operatic entertainment was given at the City of London College, Leadenhall Street, on the 15th ult., under the direction of Madame Liebe Konss.

The most successful pieces in the programme were "The Storm" (sung by Madame Konss and encores), a trio (well rendered by three pupils of the concert-giver, the Misses Geater, Inez, and St. John), The "Yeoman's Wedding Song" (excellently given by Mr. Newton Baylis), and "This Magic Wove Scarf" (sung by Miss Powell, Messrs Templeton and Baylis). A young tenor, Mr. Frederick Oakland (pupil of Madame Konss), made a very successful début, and received an enthusiastic encore for Sullivan's "Once Again." Madlle. Inez gave two pianoforte solos with considerable skill. The performance concluded with Offenbach's Operetta, "The Blind Beggars," the characters in which were well sustained by Messrs. Templeton and Baylis.

ON Friday, the 2nd ult., the choir of St. Mary, Hagerston, passed a most enjoyable evening at the Vicarage House, by invitation of the Vicar, the Rev. J. Ross, M.A. A number of songs, duets, glees, &c., were efficiently rendered by the choir, and after supper, the Vicar, in proposing the health of the organist, choirmaster, and choir, stated that a year ago, when Messrs. W. and J. Coventry took charge of the musical services at St. Mary's, they found its affairs in a most disorganised and lamentable condition, but, owing to the ability, perseverance, and disinterested zeal they displayed (being ably backed by the choir), he was happy to say those services had been fully restored to their pristine excellence, and St. Mary's now possessed the best Anglican choir, and rendered the most elaborate cathedral service in the East-end of London.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

"So rest, my Rest!" "Sweet Saviour," "The shadows of the evening hours." Choral Hymns, by J. Tilleard.

MR. TILLEARD deserves his reputation as a hymn writer, from the point of view that a hymn is a sacred song; that a song is something to be sung, and that a poem is a series of words wherewith the hymn may be conjoined. These three specimens of his harmonious art are of a piece with his previous productions; they are tuneful, and easy of remembrance. A composer of his experience ought, however, to have his sense better trained to accent than to let him set "My dead soul" to a dotted crotchet, a quaver, and a crotchet; or to let him leap to the highest note of the phrase, and on the strongest accent of the bar, to the second word of "Look on thy children from on high." This kind of fallacy is bad enough when tunes are written to metres, and not to poems; it is more blameful where the words are printed to the notes, and the latter should have been made to accommodate them.

Hymn Tunes. Composed by Robert Brown-Borthwick.

THIS collection of twenty-two tunes is offered, together with the sum of one shilling, in exchange, copy for copy, for "Sixteen Hymns for Church and Home," by the same composer. Hence may be surmised that the reverend author has reconsidered his earlier publication, and wishes rather to be judged according to the present aspect of his productions, than to that under which they were formerly placed before the world; and this surmise is confirmed by the prefatory statement that "the greater number of these Tunes—some of which are here revised by the composer—have appeared before." It is strange that a book, which professes to be the correction of another book, should itself present such typographical inaccuracies as disfigure the volume under notice—for instance, in No. 19, the G for the tenor, which should surely be F, in the first chord after the first double bar; and again, the same wrong note for the same voice, for the last minim of the first full bar in No. 18. The harmony of the tunes offends not against the rough rules of grammar which have universal acceptance; but there are more delicate niceties, for which no provision is made in some primers, and to which the author proves himself insensitive. One of these is the progression from the chord of the super-tonic to the first inversion of that of the tonic, in the first full bar of No. 1; where the 6th, instead of 5th from the bass, in the earlier chord, would have been far more agreeable. Another is the close upon a second inversion, the chord preceding the first double bar in No. 22. The end of a metrical line is necessarily a musical resting-place; and there can be no repose upon a chord which so imperatively demands something to follow it as does this form of the consonant triad. The "Ancient Melody," No. 19, is rendered extremely unsatisfactory by its harmonic treatment, which brings it to an end in the key of E flat, whereas it begins in that of C minor. Theorists who, to the confusion of musical knowledge, call these two keys "relative major and minor," can scarcely allow that either can be liable, any more than a human relative, for the responsibilities of the other; and the key of C, major or minor, is answerable, if it begin a piece, to return at the end of the same. The composer has not shown himself at his best in the tune called "Scarborough," after the town of his present incumbency, No. 18. We like No. 21, "Hereafter," far better; and esteem No. 4, "O render thanks unto the Lord," the best in the collection. The names of these last, and of one or two others, suggest that they were, perhaps, composed to poems, and not to blank metres: if such be the case, it helps to prove that, in vocal music, excellence is better approached by the attempt to express words and to declaim them, than by writing for a stated number of indefinite syllables.

Jubilate Deo, in C. For four voices, or for voices in unison. Composed by T. Richard Matthews, for B.A.

THIS is not incorrectly written, and it is not difficult of performance; so it is likely to come into extensive use. We think the purpose to "serve two masters" is a mistake, since, what is intended for unison singing should have an independent accompaniment, consisting of sometimes longer, sometimes shorter notes than the voice parts; sometimes having detached chords against the sustained song, and other similar diversities, if the writer would display his voices to advantage, and make the best effect out of their combination with the organ; whereas, in a composition for four voices, in which simplicity of structure is a chief object, a totally different distribution of the harmony is desirable. Let the reverend composer settle this point with his own conscience.

Psyche. A Dramatic Cantata, for Solo voices and Chorus, with accompaniment for Pianoforte. Words by V. A. C. Amcotts. Music by J. F. H. Read.

AN examination of Mr. Read's Cantata impresses us with the idea that the composer could do better things were he less ambitious. His solos throughout the work are superior to his choruses; but there is a great deal to admire even in his choral writing, especially in those placid parts where the least is attempted. A diligent study of counterpoint would prevent the possibility of much of the part-writing we observe throughout the Cantata—as an instance of which we might point to the two consecutive fifths between the 6th and 7th bars, page 19, where F \sharp , C \sharp ; G, D, are sung by sopranos and altos, and played in the accompaniment, an error which is made still more prominent between the last two bars of the same page. Amongst the best of the solos we may cite the Scena for Psyche, with chorus, interspersed with occasional solo passages for Eros, commencing "Nay, listen," many portions of which show the possession of dramatic feeling, and the Recitative and Air for Priest (bass) "Ye come then, fickle multitude" (also with chorus), which is well written for the voice throughout. There is also much to commend in the unaccompanied Quartet, "Thus after all my sorrow past," some of the passages of imitation in which are exceedingly effective; and a good point is gained by the sudden change from minor to major, for the commencement of the Finale. On the whole the pianoforte accompaniment is fairly written; but the effect of the Cantata will no doubt be much enhanced by its performance with an orchestra.

Marathon. A Cantata. Written by John Brion. Composed by R. Forsey Brion.

WE have here a composition whose difficulties will not exclude it from any choral society even of the most modest pretensions, while they are sufficient to give a zest to its study, and make those engaged in its performance feel that they have something to accomplish. Its merit will stimulate and gratify the interest of an audience, being easily appreciable and fully satisfactory. The choral portions are highly effective, each part in them being so melodious as to be attractive to the singer; and the solo pieces are not only good on the ground of contrast and relief, but will bear extraction for private performance apart from the rest of the work. The severe problem indeed is here solved, of combining practical facility with musical interest; and, as what is easiest of execution is surest of efficient interpretation, an excellent, broad, sonorous and spirited effect may be relied upon from the performance of this Cantata.

A short, characteristic prelude seems to paint the anxiety of the people of Athens as to the fate of those noble heroes who have gone to defend the country against the countless host of invading Persians, which anxiety is dispelled by the joyous words of the out-runner of his fellows in arms, who falls dead in giving them utterance—"The victory is ours!" The people break out in shouts of victory, but are checked by a priest, who admonishes them to offer thanks to heaven, whereupon ensues a movement of placid religious character. A fugal movement succeeds to this, wherein the boastful advance of the foe is described, and its contrapuntal character displays well the power of the voices. The first number closes brilliantly with an amplification of the opening choral movement, "Victory! victory!" No. 2 is a bass Recitative, which tells of the supposed death of Miltiades, and is interrupted by No. 3, a song for Egina, the betrothed of the Athenian leader, lamenting the loss of her beloved. This is a simple and highly expressive Air. In No. 4, the bass announces the approach of the victorious army; and No. 5 is a kind of choral march, bidding welcome to the heroes, a piece whose strongly marked accent and sonorous vocal distribution secure for it an impressive effect. Then we have a Recitative, in which the enraptured Egina recognises her lover's form among the victors, which leads, of course, to a Duet, consisting of the delighted exclamations of the happily reunited pair. A most difficult situation is this for musical rendering; many admirable composers have fallen short in the attempt to paint in notes the ecstasy of faithful hearts that meet in joy after a separation in despairing anguish, and the fact of Beethoven's perfect success in the wondrous piece in G, in Fidelio, but adds to the difficulty of after writers; to set comparison aside, it is high praise to say that the instance before us is far from unsuccessful, and is certain of good effect. The final number is chiefly choral, being interspersed with strains for the three solo voices. It is full of spirit, its generally exultant character being varied by touches of tenderness, and it will leave the hearers with a most favourable last recollection of the work.

Mr. Brion is a young musician of whom nothing so extensive nor so important as this Cantata has yet appeared. Let him take encouragement from his successful accomplishment of an arduous task, and aim again and again at the same high mark with the growing certainty of a still more practised hand.

Songs in Three-part Harmony. For the use of Elementary Choirs. Edited by Charles Maclean.

THE arranger of these songs has shown every desire to meet the requirements of amateur vocalists. In the first place, "the arrangement for a Bass part" (says Mr. Maclean) "with two upper parts interchangeable for male or female voices, offers more pliancy than the usual disposition in four parts," and, in the second place, "the two upper parts can be sung in duet, without the bass vocal parts." "The pieces," he also states, "can be sung in trio or in quintet, and by solo voices or by full chorus." The "quintet," we presume, is to be gained by doubling the two upper parts an octave below, although we can scarcely imagine this term to be applicable to an arrangement where male and female voices sing the same notes. So carefully considered an arrangement as this will be a boon

LAMBORN COCK.

The Maid of Orleans. Sonata for the Pianoforte. By Sir William Sterndale Bennett.

If a real artist were judged by the quantity rather than the quality of his productions, the position of Sir Sterndale Bennett in this country might be a puzzle to many who have followed with interest his career since he stood forth before the public as a composer of the highest classical works, even when a boy in the Royal Academy of Music. No composer has won his fame more truthfully or with less self-assertion; for, with a firm reliance upon his power to elevate the art, he has never sought the praise of the hour at the expense of his reputation; and even the many honours he has earned have been bestowed upon him, and not courted by him. It is true that of late years he has been somewhat too reticent for his admirers; but restless activity is too often accepted as a proof of genius; and the reception of his most recent work sufficiently convinces us that his intervals of silence have increased rather than diminished his fame. Even those who do not like what is usually called "programme music" would, we think, be more than half converted by the charming composition before us. Pianists who can sing with their fingers will be delighted to linger over the beauties of the first movement, entitled "In the Fields," a delicious Pastoral in A flat. The flow of the triplets is never once interrupted, although the rhythm changes occasionally from double to triple. The second subject, whilst felicitously preserving the pastoral character of the movement, offers an excellent contrast with the opening theme, reminiscences of which are afterwards introduced, with some graceful modifications, a few bars of coda bringing this melodious Andante to a close. The second movement, "In the Field," is an Allegro of martial character, in A flat minor, opening with a staccato bass, accompanying the trumpet call, and, after modulating through B minor, leading to a tranquil theme, accompanied with a syncopated bass. The writing in the second part of this movement is of an exceedingly high character, but in the elaborate working of the subjects the original design is never lost sight of. The Adagio, which follows, "In Prison," is a Prayer, so lovely in its pathos as to render the translation of Schiller's verse, with which it is headed, almost superfluous. The second subject, in the dominant, after a return to the opening theme, appears again with good effect as an inner part, in the original key of the movement; and the tender treatment of these two subjects is so fascinating to the listeners that we can scarcely wonder at the desire for the repetition of the movement which has always been manifested at the public performance of the Sonata. The words, "Brief is the sorrow, endless is the joy," which precede the final movement, are sympathetically illustrated in the passionate music, which appropriately commences in A flat minor and concludes in the tonic major. What may be regarded as the second subject, beginning in A flat minor, has an enharmonic change into E major so perfectly resistless in its eloquence as almost to reconcile us to the truth of Mendelssohn's remark that words are more ambiguous than notes. A remarkable characteristic of this movement is the constant alternation between major and minor, the entire conception indeed of the Finale showing how deeply the composer has studied the feeling of Schiller's poem upon which the Sonata is based. Without presenting any extraordinary executive difficulties, this beautiful work demands the highest intellectual powers from the executant. True appreciation of the poetry throughout each movement, and a command of tone with the utmost refinement of touch, are absolutely necessary to its due interpretation. To those who possess these essential qualifications the composition will sufficiently speak for itself; but all who have devoted themselves to the ephemeral works of the day must fit themselves for a higher world of art before the beauties of such music can be fully revealed to them.

Bourrée. For the Pianoforte. Composed by Cotsford Dick.

THE name of this composer is new to us, but we select this Bourrée from a mass of compositions of a similar character, because we discover in it a merit which should not be passed unrecognised, especially if its author be an amateur. The spirit of the old dance has been so thoroughly caught, and the harmonies are so quaint and in accordance with the writings of the Bach period, that we cannot but imagine Mr. Dick to be an enthusiastic admirer of the time when the best writers threw their genius into this class of music. It is difficult of course to compose an original Bourrée, and we are consequently not surprised at finding reminiscences of Bach in the one before us; but the composition is in every respect extremely creditable, and we recommend it with all sincerity.

Evening Thoughts. Impromptu for the Pianoforte.

Song of the Mill Wheel. Melody for the Pianoforte.

By Mrs. Joseph Robinson.

BOTH these pieces are gracefully treated, and evidence much musical feeling in their composer. "Evening Thoughts," headed with a quotation from "Paradise Lost," has a melodious subject, and is well harmonised, the second theme, in the subdominant, being perhaps scarcely a sufficient contrast, but flowing melodiously enough to please an amateur audience. The mildness of the piece throughout may be perhaps forgiven, considering its title; but the question is whether the composition suggested the name or the name suggested the composition. Songs descriptive of mill wheels, even "without words," have been somewhat overdone; but Mrs. Robinson has written a good piece of its kind, and one which should, we think, find favour with pianists in search of novelty. A rapid succession of triplets accompanies a pleasing melody, a good effect being gained by the occasional introduction of four even notes against the three. The manner in which the passages are written for both hands seems to prove that the composer is a good pianist.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.

One Hundred Easy and Progressive Violin Duets. Selected by H. Sydney Davis.

THIS work is issued in four parts, each containing twenty-five duets. The subjects are extremely attractive; and, being selected chiefly from the compositions of the standard writers, the performance of them cannot fail to aid in the cultivation of a taste for good music. They are all easily arranged, and carefully punctuated; and may be confidently recommended to young violinists as infinitely better for practice than the commonplace airs so often plodded through by beginners on the instrument.

The Changeling. Song. Written by Robert B. Holt. Composed by Bennett Gilbert.

THERE is much dramatic feeling in this song, but the constant recurrence of the subject in A minor, unharmonised, becomes somewhat tiresome. The fresh theme in the tonic major is a relief; and a good effect is gained by holding on the key-note for the change into F major, the "Agitato," with the triplet accompaniment, contrasting well with the more subdued portions of the song. Character without monotony (or at least such monotony as becomes distressing to the listener) is rarely found save in the works of the highest writers; but the composition of songs of this class is so fascinating that we can scarcely wonder at their rapid increase. Some of the best lieder of Schubert and Schumann may be cited as excellent examples for study. Mr. Gilbert's song is dedicated to Madlle. Titiens; but it is not stated whether she has ever sung it in public.

RUDALL, CARTE AND CO.

The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack, for 1874. Edited by Charles Mackeson, F.S.S.

The Professor's Pocket Book for 1874. Published under the direction of Sir Julius Benedict, and edited by Charles Mackeson, F.S.S.

THE Musical Directory, which has been for some years clearing itself of the errors we have so repeatedly pointed out, appears this time in a perfectly reliable shape, and we cannot too strongly recommend it as a valuable book of reference for musicians. An article by the editor gives an interesting account of the principal musical events of the past year; and amongst the features of importance we may also mention a short sketch of those artists who have died since the issue of the last number. The Pocket Book fully maintains its character, and we cordially wish it all the success it deserves.

WEEKES AND CO.

Musette for the Organ, with pedal obbligato, by E. H. Turpin.

We have a different notion from the author of this piece, of the meaning of the word he chooses for a title. We understand "Musette" to signify—firstly, an instrument of the hurdy-gurdy class, on which a drone bass is sustained under a superstratum of melody; secondly, a piece of music fitted for this instrument, or imitating its effect. See in illustration of this view, some of the second, or alternative, gavottes by Bach, and many examples by less honoured writers. Here, however, is a continuous composition of six pages, with a plan developed through many changes of key, and with a florid bass, but not one strain throughout in which a pedal, or single bass note, is held on from opening to close. Apart from the misnomer, the piece has merit, though its effect may want variety.

Te Deum and Jubilate, for Four Voices or Organ. The Music composed by Robert François Blackbee.

THE word "or," in the above title, bewilders us; it is open to many interpretations, but we leave those to solve who may understand it. The merit of the work is its extreme simplicity. The Gloria at the end of the Jubilate is set in the form of a double chant, in obedience, as we understand, to special requirement. The music is dedicated to the Earl of Shaftesbury, and it is printed in Sol-fa and in ordinary notation.

"MUSICAL STANDARD" OFFICE.

Sanctus, Kyrie and Gloria Tibi, by J. L. Forbes.

THE words could not have been more concisely set than they are in the music before us. We wonder that it should be worth while to write a melodious strain with changeful harmony to the "Gloria Tibi," or wonder rather that it should not have been better worth while to leave this interpolation into the Communion Office to one repeated note or repeated chord in which a whole congregation might have joined, fearlessly of disturbing the disciplined singers. The other two pieces are nicely written, and will produce an agreeable effect.

ROBERT COCKS AND CO., LONDON.

Laudate Dominum. Original Church Music. By Clement Hamil Perrot.

A most handsome volume is this in respect to paper, typography, and bookbinding, and its musical contents are worthy of its material splendour. The first argues amateurship on the part of the author, or at least freedom from the fiscal anxieties that too often depress professional life; the second proves musicianship that does honour to its possessor, whatever may be his calling or status. The volume comprises a large number of Chants, Double Chants, Hymn Tunes in Short Metre, Common Metre, Metre of seven syllables, and Long Metre, besides a large number of special settings of popular Hymn Poems, "Sanctuses," "Kyrie Eleisons" (we preserve the more remarkable than exceptional Anglification of the Latin and Greek initial words) and Doxologies. Terms of general and warm commendation have been applied to the work; we shall but vindicate these by naming a few points that we less unreservedly admire. In the Chant No. 1, we think that, beautiful as is the harmony of the bar before the last, it is out of place in a composition of its class, as being too sentimental, and likely to grow tiresome from its very beauty by manifold repetition. In No. 3, the anticipation in bar 2 of the bass note of bar 3 gives singularly ill effect to the chord of \sharp upon the former. In the Double Chant No. 2, the bass melody of the fourth strain, comprising the interval of a minor 9th—B flat down to A,—with but one upper A between, is as ungainly in effect as it is unvoiced in execution. In No. 17, the reciting note E, 4th space for the top voice, is too high for ease to the singer or pleasantry to the hearer; but if the effect of this be open to question, what shall be said of the bass note, E one ledger-line, which continues throughout the first strain, and is too low for all comfort, if not for all possibility; the notation of this piece having for two parts three semibreves in the 1st and 3rd strains, and four semibreves in the 2nd and 4th, is, to say the least, inconvenient. No. 22 is ingeniously written in double counterpoint, the treble and bass of the 1st and 2nd strains being inverted in the 3rd and 4th; but the effect would have been better had this order been reversed, for the 4th strain has the leading-note for its penultimate bass, whereas the 2nd strain has the dominant in the corresponding position, and this would have served far better than what is written for the final cadence. In the Common Metre Tune No. 6, we must protest against the suspended B flat, which closes the 1st strain and is resolved on A, the start note of the 2nd strain, making the discord of \sharp with a double-bar between the dissonance and its resolution; in all inappropriate tunes—those written to metres and not to poems—allowance must be made for punctuation and the consequent breathing at the end of each line, and such breathing in this situation violates one of the chief rules of singing. In No. 4 of the Tunes to septo-syllabic lines, there is not likeness but identity between its first strain and that of the popular melody to "Jesu, meek and lowly," in Hymns Ancient and Modern; other contributors to this journal express opposite views, but the present writer is strongly of opinion that the multiplication of tunes to one poem is, and will be, and must be violently impedimental to congregational singing, since, whoever knows the words is inclined to sing them to the tune he knows in connection with them, and hence we may have as many tunes sung at once as may be recollected in conjunction with a favourite poem; the employment of a phrase from one tune as portion of another, cannot but involve greater perplexity. No. 5 of the Long Metre Tunes is a clever canon of two in one in the 8th, between the treble and tenor, with three free parts; there are two objections however, to such an exercise of scholarship for the present purpose,—first, that the tune needs to end with the repetition of the first two bars in order to make it perpetual by completing the answer; second, that the said answer is so obscured by the crossing and recrossing of the two tenor parts that it is difficult to trace it by the eye, and will be more so to distinguish it by the ear. Not to regard the work on the shady side only, let us speak with pleasure of the certain charm of the tune to the poem beginning "My God, my Father, while I stray," No. 1 of the resettings of well-known poems; of that to No. 12, "Jesu, lover of my soul;" of that to No. 13, "Hark, the herald angels sing," which is quite good enough to supersede the misappropriation in too general use to these words of a fragment from Mendelssohn's Sons of Art, a misappropriation that borders on profanity, since suggesting thought of other things in a place where contemplation should be fixed upon the one subject embodied in the text; of the merit to that of No. 15, the Easter Hymn; of the sweet simplicity and touching expression of that to No. 24, "In the hour of trial," which, however,—so unfortunate is this practice of composing new music to verses that have already been successfully set—pleases us less than Dr. Monk's tune to the same poem, with which we would gladly have spared the comparison; of the highly meritorious music to No. 36,

"O Paradise!" which ought to drive out of use the vulgar dance tune, together with which the translation came first into extensive knowledge; and of others, to name which would surpass our already extended limits. Upon the whole, this publication merits the attention of musicians, as introducing the high claims to notice of a composer with a decided vein of melody, a nice sense of harmony, a considerable mastery of the technicalities of art, and a strong feeling for the subject he takes in hand.

JAMES SMITH, LIVERPOOL; METZLER AND CO., LONDON.

Morceau d'Orgue, by Arthur Octavius Smith.

THIS little piece for the organ—how strangely the "by" reads after the French title!—pretends to little and realises as much. It is an Andante in F and in $\frac{3}{8}$, of very simple character.

HIME AND SON, LIVERPOOL AND BIRKENHEAD; HIME AND ADDISON, MANCHESTER; HUTCHINGS AND ROMER, LONDON.

Ave Verum: Bass Solo and Chorus, by J. Bolingbroke Cooper.

HERE we have a piece of smooth vocal writing, melodious if not a decided tune, and nicely harmonised. The chorus supersedes a solo voice at the words "O clemens O pie." Mr. Scarisbrick, of Liverpool, for whom it was expressly written, has sung this in public.

HEYWOOD, MANCHESTER. PITMAN, LONDON.

My soul doth magnify the Lord. (Magnificat.) Key, A. By William Moss.

THIS piece will have a smooth effect with the voices, the parts for which are all melodious, and all pleasant to sing. There is the further merit that the words are fairly declaimed, and the course of the modulations honourably proves the musicianship of the writer, in the variety of effect it produces, with perfect coherence. The publication is not a little puzzling to unpractised eyes, for it combines regular musical notation with that of the sol-fa system, each note having a letter at its heart to indicate the syllable whereby Mr. Curwen's disciples would name it; thus the note D embraces a letter F, the note E a letter S; and so a reader must have his thoughts in two places at once, or his eyes in one while his wits are in another, or some such involved complication, as Lord Dundreary would say, "No fellah can understand." This combination of the two systems goes by the name of "Hamilton's Union Notation," and the present is not the first instance of its application; but we think that less advantage than confusion must spring from its complication, in the case of readers unfamiliar with its twofold appearance. Let it be hoped that the merit of Mr. Moss's music may over ride this barrier to its decipherment.

Festal Organ March; by Roland Rogers, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

THIS presents some showy writing for the organ, especially towards the end; but the early part has so strange a consecution of keys as must be unpleasant to every cultivated listener, and confusing to everybody who can hear at all. It begins, namely, in A minor, proceeds instantly to D major, thence to B minor, and thence to A minor again! The false relation of the tritone between C, in the first of these, and F sharp in the second, is as obvious as it is disagreeable.

A, DIMOLINE, BRISTOL.

"Blessed are the pure in heart," the sixth Beatitude, for three treble voices, by Faustina Hasse Hodges.

HERE is a truly charming little trio. Its chief melody is most graceful, its harmony is fresh and decidedly modern in character, without being more chromatic than is necessitated by the phraseology of the top part, nor than is easy to sing and delightful to hear, and the effect of the combined voices is admirable. It is surely erroneous to name the third voice "treble," which goes down to G below the staff; the word must be meant to imply "female," and in this sense its use is as incorrect as that of the more ordinary term "equal." Voices can no better be called all treble than all equal, of which one has to go high, another to remain in middle register, and the third to go unusually low. The matter of definition is far less important than the merit of the music assigned to the three parts, and this, as has been said, stands high, claims attention, and should secure wide acceptance for the piece. We feel the naturally devout expression of every phrase, though this is rendered in unconventional forms, and we are glad to find a writer who is so independent of custom's trammels that she can set scriptural words to notes that flow from her heart, and so present them with an air of conviction in their truth.

VAN DE SANDT DE VILLIERS AND CO., CAPE TOWN.

The Offertory Sentences of the Church of England, set to music by Edward Newbatt.

LET us welcome this little publication as a favourable specimen of the music of the Antipodes, and rejoice that art is there so promisingly represented. It consists of six of the Offertory Sentences, set, in the concisest manner, for four voices, and printed in short score, so that the whole occupies but three octavo pages. The music has melodious grace in the top part, which is enhanced by the natural, but by no means common-place, character of the harmony. It rather treats the syllables as so many pegs whereon to hang notes, than attempts any expression, or as much as declamation of the words; its small failings are chiefly in the unmelodic progressions of under parts, such as once a diminished eighth, and once an augmented fifth for the bass, which give it the appearance more of having been picked out on a keyed instrument than conceived as so many vocal melodies; still, it has merit which we gladly acknowledge.

BREITKOPF AND HÄRTEL, LEIPZIG.

Mass in D minor. Composed by Joseph Schmuck.

THE author of this work is a resident in Bombay, to the "Amateur Instrumentalists" of which city he dedicates his production. He proves himself an accomplished musician with a pleasant fluency of thought, having but moderate ambition, with full power, however, to reach the mark at which he aims. This mark is on the level of the lighter Mass music of Haydn and Mozart, but his relation to it is different from theirs, in so far as he copies the model which those masters moulded. The conventional division of the text that prevails in the class of works with which this must be compared, parcelling it into sections to fit so many musical movements, is here followed, but without always the same propriety; for instance, we often meet with a half-close upon the words "Filius Patris," with the commencement of a new movement upon "Qui tollis peccata," in the Gloria, so that though there be a change of key and measure distinguishing the new idea, the sense is carried on from the dominant cadence to the phrase which relatively refers to, or indeed continues those first words; here, on the contrary, there is a full-close upon "Filius Patris," and so conclusive a termination that, musically speaking, the piece might satisfactorily end, and the relative starts anew, wholly without reference to its antecedent, and seemingly regardless of meaning. An incident of real beauty occurs at the words "qui sedes ad dexteram Patris," p. 17, where the last inversion of the minor ninth of C (written, as usual, C sharp instead of D flat) is resolved on the first inversion of a chord of B flat, which, however, is a beauty of sound more than of sense, since it throws no light upon the text. The Hosanna has a different setting to follow, from that which precedes the Benedictus, this last-named being cast in fugal form, of which it is too dry an example for its repetition to be desirable. The Benedictus has unquestionable charm up to the point of its full-close in F; but then, the return to B flat, the standard key of the movement, is ill-managed, and the opening phrase re-enters, consequently, with clumsy effect. The vocal writing throughout, especially in the occasional use of high notes, betrays some want of experience, or at least of perception of how voices may be used to best advantage. The work is composed with orchestral accompaniment, a pianoforte arrangement of which only is printed. The shortness of this mass recommends it to frequent use, and its general interest and agreeable character confirm the recommendation; hence it may be desirably adopted in many of our London chapels.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CHANGE OF THE SYLLABLES IN MODULATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—By the method of solfaing, advocated in my former letter, the difficulty of applying the syllables to different degrees of the stave in different pieces (which I believe is at the bottom of nearly all the popular objections to moveable-doism) is entirely done away with, and the more formidable one arising from the supposed necessity for changing the position of the do, in the course of the same piece, with every change of key, however transitory (which seems to form the basis of most of the educated antagonism against it) is reduced to a minimum, by using the same modifications of the syllables for the signs of a new key as for the real accidentals which correspond with them in pitch. I said that this plan is easily applicable to the five most usual modulations, but it may be used for the most remote ones as well, whenever they are only cursorily introduced and do not obtain such a temporary sway as entirely to obliterate the predominating effect of the fundamental tonic. It is true that the syllables would, in the secondary keys, lose much of that power to suggest the actual sounds required, which, in the principal key of the piece, they derive from their association with the characteristic "mental effects" of the various degrees of the normal scale; but they would not the less afford an infallible standard for the measurement of intervals. When, however, in extended movements, by the exigencies of musical form, lengthened modulations are effected which do temporarily introduce a complete change of key, and especially when they, in their turn, become the centres of still further removes, it is undoubtedly advantageous to shift the place of the do upon the stave. But as all systems of solfaing are for the convenience of learners, who, for the most part, study in classes, the teacher could always announce at what points it would be advisable to do so, giving his reasons, and explaining which of the so-called accidentals would have to be treated as natural to the key. It would, I am convinced, be a great boon to proficient as well as tyros, to instrumentalists as well as singers, if composers could be induced to change the signatures, even frequently, in the course of the piece, rather than bespatter their pages so freely with sharps, flats, and naturals as is now the fashion.

Even more important for learners (if the established notation is to hold its own against the increasing favour which the logical consistency and general practicability of the Tonic Sol-Fa system is winning for itself), is it that some definite understanding should be come to as to the extent of the influence of the marks of transposition. In the instruction books we are told that that influence extends upon the same stave only, to all notes of the same name, in any octave, within the bar, and that when the last note of one bar is repeated in the next a sign attached to the former affects the latter also. Now I can find no fault with the rule itself, nor should I do so with any number of exceptions, if they were but explicitly stated and generally conformed to. But I believe I am within the mark when I say that ninety per cent. of the difficulties which beginners, of average ability, experience in reading music, are caused by the indiscriminate way in which counteracting signs are used long after the influence of those which they contradict is at an end. If composers cannot be brought to see the disadvantages of the present custom, I trust that compilers of instruction books, church music, etc., will avoid hampering the learners' progress by the inconsistent disregard of a very simple and sensible rule.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

A. ORLANDO STEED.

Long Melford, Dec. 15, 1873.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—The Royal Academy of Music was instituted in 1822. The list of patrons, directors, committee of management, and professors, proves that it is upheld and rendered efficient by the cream of society, and the most prominent men in the profession. Mr. Joseph Bennett, in his well-written remarks, bears testimony to the good results and rich promises connected with the institution; but he does not make a suggestion, which I have long been looking for, to the effect that the Royal Academy of Music should open its doors on one or two occasions annually for the purpose of granting decrees or certificates to musicians who have never been able to avail themselves of the excellent methods of instruction offered to students. We have training schools for schoolmasters, but the work of National Education was found to be impracticable till existing teachers—many of them of old standing—were admitted to the advantages of examination for certificates. At present, the only degrees offered, and worth possessing, must be gained at one of the universities, at a cost very much in excess of any remuneration due to the examiners, and burdensome to men having large families and limited incomes. I have always been of opinion that no institution can claim to be national which does not provide for such examinations as I have suggested; and, moreover, I fully believe that the entrance fees would form no inconsiderable item in the sources of income enjoyed by the Academy.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

CHARLES LAWRENCE.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

The notice of the Christmas Meetings of the Tonic Sol-fa College—with many other communications from correspondents, which we should have been glad to insert—arrived too late for our last number.

C. P. H.—The compromise between the fixed and moveable Do systems of notation suggested by our correspondent is, we think, scarcely an improvement upon either—especially as two different points of the Scale are named by the same syllables—unless we adopt the somewhat clumsy expedient of adding the letter l to the end of each syllable of the upper tetrachord.

DELTA.—We can only refer our correspondent to any of the standard works on Harmony, especially those of modern date.

MUSICOLO.—We scarcely perceive any material difference between the plan proposed by our correspondent and that of many musical Societies whose epitaphs, after a brief existence, we have been reluctantly compelled to write.

E. D. PALMER.—We can have nothing whatever to do with criticisms upon reviews which appear in the pages of our contemporaries.

H. H.—The E should be sung as printed. The word "to," in a later edition of the work, is inserted in the following bar.

C. H. BALL.—The progressions do not violate any rule, but we certainly do not like them.

EDWD. WHITE.—Contralto.

CANTO.—We know nothing whatever of the matter, but should recommend any intending competitor to make an application to the donor of the prize.

TO CORRESPONDENTS (Continued.)

- CAPTAIN HULLET is informed that we cannot insert an account of any private musical performance by amateurs.
- W. A. LEONARD.—The book mentioned has been received, but is not of sufficient musical interest for review in our columns.
- CH. HD.—We cannot undertake to correct or translate Latin inscriptions.
- T. J. H.—The competition was entirely free and open to all choirs, both London and country, provided they possessed the requisite number of members. The number was 500 not 1,000.
- X.—1. We believe that no such work has been published since the date you name. 2. We do not know of one.
- E. LL.—The passage stands at page 149, score 3, beginning at bar 2. It occurs also in other places in the Chorus, in different keys; for instance, in B minor at page 146, score 3, bar 2.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BARKING.—On Tuesday, the 20th ult., an evening concert was given at The Abbey Works, under the direction of Mr. Prenton, assisted by Miss Denham, Miss Claremont, Mr. Alfred Mori, Mr. Arthur Lawrence and Mr. Frank Bascoe. Miss Claremont was very effective in her rendering of "She wore a wreath of roses" and "Kathleen Mavourneen," Miss Denham received a well deserved encore for "Esmeralda," Mr. Prenton was heard to great advantage in Russell's "Lifeboat," for which, being encored, he substituted "Over the rolling sea," and Messrs. A. Mori and A. Lawrence were highly successful in the pieces allotted them. Several part-songs were sung during the evening. Mr. Frank Bascoe was an efficient accompanist. The large dining hall was crowded, the greater portion of the audience consisting of the employés of the works.

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—The Barrow Choral Society gave a performance of the Messiah in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 20th ult., which, considering the short time the Society has been in existence, was highly creditable, both to the members and their energetic conductor, Mr. Edward Brown. The principals were Miss Anna Hiles (soprano), Miss Jessie Hartley (contralto), Mr. R. Sutcliffe (tenor), and Mr. Thornton Wood (bass), all of whom did full justice to the parts allotted to them. The choruses were well rendered, and the band throughout was quite satisfactory. The audience was large and appreciative.

BRISBANE.—Mendelssohn's Oratorio Elijah, was given by the members of the Brisbane Musical Union, on Wednesday, the 28th October, before a very large audience. The orchestra comprised four first violins, four second violins, two violas, three violoncellos, one double bass, four flutes, two clarionets, three cornets, two drums and cymbals, and pianoforte. The chorus numbered one hundred voices, the whole being under the direction of Mr. R. T. Jefferies. The character of the Prophet, was divided amongst three gentlemen. The tenor solo, "If with all your hearts," preceded by the recitative, "Ye people," was well rendered by a gentleman amateur, who took the part of Obadiah. "Hear ye, Israel" was most exquisitely sung, as was the trio "Lift thine eyes," by first and second soprano and alto. The choruses "He watching over Israel," "Behold God the Lord," and "Then did Elijah," were given with great firmness. The orchestra performed throughout with much ability, and gave evidence of careful training; and Madame Mallalieu played the whole of the pianoforte score in her usual excellent manner. The highest praise is due to Mr. R. T. Jefferies, who, by a "labour of love," and in the face of many difficulties, has in so short a time brought his forces to such perfection.

—A COMPLIMENTARY concert was given on the 25th Nov., by the Musical Union, to its talented conductor, Mr. R. T. Jefferies, before a crowded audience. The orchestral and vocal performers comprised about 130 persons, the beneficiaries conducting. The Oratorio chosen was Elijah, which was performed throughout with the greatest effect.

BRISTON.—The Somerleyton Amateur Opera Company produced for this season an English version of Verdi's Opera Il Trovatore, giving two or three performances in the first and second weeks of last month. In every department the undertaking was a decided success. The scenery and lighting were excellent, the Cloister scene, especially, being very effective. Miss F. Lanville was an efficient Leonora, and Miss Maas sustained the part of Azucena in a praiseworthy style. Mr. Kossuth Hudson possesses a good tenor voice, and performed the part of Manrico with much ease. Mr. K. Hudson, we understand, was one of the four selected tenors at the National Music Meetings, held at the Crystal Palace last July. Mr. M. W. Hall represented the Count di Luna in a careful manner, and Miss Kisbey, Messrs. Knapp, W. Hudson, and Kisbey, did full justice to the characters entrusted to them. Miss Barnett discharged the arduous task of accompanist very creditably.

BURSLAM.—The Potteries Tonic Sol-fa Choristers gave their annual performance of Handel's Messiah in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 13th ult. Speaking generally, the execution, both vocal and instrumental, was fully up to the high average of excellence attained at previous concerts. The most difficult choruses were sung with accuracy, and all were given with intelligent appreciation of the sentiment of the words and the design of the composer. The customary quartet of professional soloists was composed of Miss Mary Thorley, soprano, Miss Edith Taylor, contralto; Mr. Kearton, tenor; and Mr. Brandon, bass—all of whom were effective, Mr. Brandon being very successful in "The trumpet shall sound," the obbligato to which was played to perfection by Mr. A. Robinson, of Hull. The orchestral portion of the performance left nothing to be desired, the Overture, the "Pastoral Symphony" and the accompaniments being given in perfect taste, Mr. H. Walker supporting the band most efficiently on the organ, and Mr. Powell conducting. The hall was crowded.

CAMBRIDGE.—The fifty-sixth quarterly concert of the Amateur Musical Society, took place on Tuesday evening, the 23d December. The programme consisted of the first part of the Messiah, followed by a miscellaneous selection of glees, part-songs, solos, &c. The principal performers were Madame Clara Suter, Messrs. Biltor, Ling and S. Duffell. Several pieces in the second part were encored, among which were "Sing, sweet bird," by Madame Clara Suter, and "Rupert the Ranger" (Weiss), by Mr. S. Duffell. Mr. W. C. Dewberry, R.A., was an efficient accompanist, and Mr. H. J. Brown conducted with his usual ability.

CHELTONHAM.—On Tuesday, the 30th December, Mr. J. A. Matthews's first subscription Oratorio performance (fourth season), was given in the Corn Exchange, before a crowded audience. The Oratorio selected was the Messiah, which was rendered with much effect throughout. The choruses were exceedingly well sung. The soloists were Miss Julia Jones (whose singing of "Rejoice greatly" and other airs elicited considerable applause), Madame Whitaker, Miss Clarke, Mr. Kearton, Mr. Halford, and Mr. Thomas. There was a good band, led by Mr. E. G. Woodward, and an organ (erected by Messrs. Williams for the occasion), was ably played on by Mr. Heath. Mr. J. A. Matthews conducted.

CHESTERFIELD.—On Monday, the 22nd December, Handel's Messiah was performed in the Assembly Rooms, Market Hall, before a large audience. The several solos were very expressively rendered by Miss Jennie Twigg, Madame Whitaker, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Carlos Lovatt. The choruses were well given by the members of the Chesterfield Choral Union, under the conductorship of Mr. T. T. Trimmell, who made his last appearance in public previously to entering on his new duties at Clifton.—The vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. T. T. Trimmell, who has for upwards of twenty years been organist at the Parish Church, was filled up on the 31st December, by the appointment of Mr. Henry John Vaughan, assistant organist of Gloucester Cathedral. The judge was Dr. E. G. Monk, organist of York Minster, and the conditions of contest were of the severest kind.

COLNBROOK, NEAR WINDSOR.—On Wednesday, the 31st December, a concert was given in the Public Rooms, by the Colnbrook Glee Union, assisted by several ladies and gentlemen, for the benefit of the National School. The programme consisted of overtures, songs, glees, madrigals, and part-songs. At the close Captain Bland complimented the performers upon the success of their efforts, and also the conductor, Mr. Ratcliff.

DERBY.—Mr. T. Tallis Trimmell, for many years honorary organist at the Parish Church, Chesterfield, having recently been appointed organist of Christ Church, Clifton, near Bristol, the members and friends of the Choral Union being desirous of showing their appreciation of his disinterested services, subscribed sufficient funds for the purchase of a handsome silver tea-pot and coffee pot. The presentation of this testimonial took place at the ordinary weekly rehearsal on the 16th ult. The chair having been taken by Mr. W. W. Woodward, the presentation was made by Mr. C. H. Coulson, the honorary secretary, who expressed the cordial thanks of the members for the kind interest taken by Mr. Trimmell in all matters that related to the welfare of the Society, and warmly congratulated him upon his new appointment. Mr. Trimmell, in a brief but feeling speech, expressed his sincere thanks for the kind and cordial feeling shown to him by his numerous friends in Derby, and, regretting the necessity of severing his connection with them, wished every prosperity to the Society. The following was the inscription upon the testimonial: "Presented to Mr. T. Tallis Trimmell, by members and friends of the Derby Choral Union, in acknowledgment of his services as Honorary Organist, 16th Jan., 1874."

DONCASTER.—The new organ, built by Messrs. S. Meacock, of High Street, for Catherine Street Free Church, was opened on Friday, the 2nd ult., by Dr. Spark, organist of Leeds Town Hall, who played through a well-selected programme in a most able manner, showing off the instrument, which has a fine tone, to the greatest advantage. The proceedings were opened by the Vicar of Christ Church with a short prayer.

EDINBURGH.—On Wednesday, the 24th December, Professor Oakley played on the organ in the Music Class Room, a selection of music appropriate to Christmas Eve, before a large audience. Particularly noteworthy was a very interesting addition to the statues of musicians—a beautiful bust of Beethoven, modelled by Professor Schaller, of Vienna, in 1825, a present from the London Philharmonic Society to the Edinburgh Music Chair. Two old chorals in the Christmas Oratorio, one said to be 270 and the other 330 years old, and Bach's Pastoral Symphony, which, like Handel's, is in the style of the old melody played in the streets of Rome in the Christmas week, were very acceptable. The music from the Messiah being better known, was more universally appreciated. A Pastorate by Kullak was also very warmly received, and the Professor extemporised on two well-known hymns at the close.—An excellent concert, in aid of the Mars Training Ship at Dundee, was given on the 14th ult., in the Music Hall, by the Edinburgh Sacred Harmonic Society, presided over by its founder, the Rev. John Mackenzie. The choir numbered nearly 120 voices; the conductor was as usual Mr. Geikie; Mr. Hewlett presided at the organ, and Mr. Martin at the pianoforte. The first part of the concert consisted of selections from Spohr's Die letzten Dinge (The Last Judgment), the choruses in which were sung with a high degree of precision, delicacy and intelligence. The tenor solo and chorus, "Holy, holy," went remarkably well, the solo part being entrusted to an amateur, and the same may be said of the soprano solo and chorus, "All glory to the Lamb that died." The second and miscellaneous part of the concert opened with a worthy rendering of one of the finest choruses that Handel has written, "Sing, ye Heavens," from Belshazzar, an Oratorio so seldom performed as to be almost unknown to the present generation till lately resuscitated in London at the concerts of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society. The bass duet, "The Lord is a Man of War," from Israel in Egypt, was commendably sung by two amateurs. Then came the beautiful and popular air, "Mein Glaubiges Herz," from Bach's Whitsuntide Cantata, well rendered by Miss Simpson. The six-part chorus from the Woman of Samaria, "Therefore they shall come and sing in the heights of Zion," was sung with great finish; and one of the treats of the evening was the duet, "O lovely peace," from Judas Maccabaeus, well sung by Miss Simpson and a lady with a fine and highly-cultivated contralto voice. PROFESSOR OAKLEY gave an organ performance on the 17th ult., in the Music Class Room, before a crowded audience; one of the most gratifying features of these recitals being the steadily increasing attendance of students. The programme was well chosen and excellently performed. The selection from Haydn's Symphony No. 7 (Largo, Menuetto and Trio) was loudly applauded, and Schumann's "Choral song" was given with an amount of feeling that entranced the audience, and drew forth an enthusiastic encore.

BRITH.—The Choral Society gave an inaugural public performance, at the Brith Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 13th ult., before a numerous audience. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's Cantata, Praise Jehovah, and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Oratorio, The Prodigal Son, the former printed for circulation amongst the auditors by permission of Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., the latter by that of Messrs. Boosey and Co. The choruses of Mendelssohn's Cantata were excellently rendered by the members of the Society. Miss Katherine Poyntz, Miss Alice Barnett and Messrs. Thurley Beale and Stedman were the solo vocalists, and were highly effective in both the works performed. Mr. R. Lemaire conducted.

FALMOUTH.—A concert in aid of the Royal Cornwall Polytechnic Institution was given in the Society's Hall, on Friday, the 26th December, chiefly by amateurs. Amongst the pieces deserving special mention were, a pianoforte trio, from Faust, played by the Misses Guppy (pupils of the conductor), "Sailor's Story" (Smart), by Miss Mitchell, of Camborne, "Hearts of Oak," by Mr. M. Rogers, of Helston, "My Queen" (Blumenthal), by Mr. C. W. Robinson, "O hush thee, my babe" (Sullivan), by the whole choir, and two cornet and pianoforte duets, by Mr. C. Powell and Mr. C. W. Robinson, the latter lending his services throughout as conductor and accompanist. The hall was crowded, and about £50 realised.

GLASGOW.—The second subscription concert of the season was given by the Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society, in the City Hall, on Wednesday, the 24th December, when, in accordance with a time-honoured custom, the Oratorio selected was Handel's Messiah. The members of the Society quitted the large organ gallery, and were supported by a small orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Sam. Smyth, and the organ, which was in the able hands of Mr. Charles Ferguson. The principal vocalists were Mdme. Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Jessie Blair, Mr. Parkinson, and Mr. Winn. The performance was conducted by Mr. W. M. Miller, under whose direction the Society has gradually assumed its present importance. Mdme. Alvsleben, who made her first appearance in Scotland, achieved a signal success; her singing of "Rejoice greatly" amply meriting the applause it elicited. Mr. Parkinson in "Thou shalt break them" was highly effective, and Mr. Winn in the music allotted him was careful and conscientious throughout.

GUILDFORD.—A very good concert was given on the 8th ult., under the direction of Mr. Stedman, assisted by Miss Isabel Weale, Miss Dones, Mr. Thurley Beale and Mr. Henry Parker. A well-selected programme, very successfully performed, was highly appreciated by the audience.

HEREFORD.—On Tuesday, the 23rd December, the Hereford Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabaeus, at the Shire-hall. With the exception of Madame Talbot-Cherer, who took the principal soprano music, the whole of the performers were members of the Society. The Oratorio was not so well given as we should have expected from a class having the advantage of such a skilful and painstaking conductor as Mr. Townshend Smith. In the second part, however, and especially towards the close, the choruses were better sung. "We never will bow down" went fairly, as did the succeeding choruses, except "See the conquering hero comes." Madame Cherer distinguished herself in the air, "Then shall the lute;" but the grand soprano air, "From mighty kings" was read rather than declaimed. Miss Lydia Broad sang "Pious orgies" and "Father of Heaven" exceedingly well, and showed good taste and cultivated feeling in her interpretation of both airs. The Rev. A. Robinson, who undertook the tenor airs, acquitted himself remarkably well, particularly in "No unhallowed desire" and "How vain is man." Mr. J. H. Lambert was suffering from a severe cold, and therefore simply read the notes of the bass part; he however created much effect in the bass air, "The Lord worketh wonders."

HEYWOOD.—On Tuesday evening, the 23rd December, a performance of the Messiah was given in St. Luke's Church, by the kind permission of the Rector. The admission was by free ticket, and although 1,500 were issued, many people were unable to obtain entrance. The principal vocalists were Miss Lydia Vernon, Miss Juliet Smith, Mr. J. Simpson, and Mr. Alfred Wroe, and the choruses were excellently sung by the Heywood Choral Society, assisted by a few friends from Bury. J. F. Bridge, Esq., Mus. Bac., organist of Manchester Cathedral, presided at the organ, and Mr. Richard Rigby, choir-master of St. Luke's, conducted. After the first part of the Oratorio, the Rector delivered a brief address, and at the end of the performance a collection amounting to £51 10s. 5d. was made.

HUDDERSFIELD.—On the 13th ult., Dr. Spark, organist of the Leeds Town Hall, gave a lecture on "Pianoforte Music, Ancient and Modern," with illustrations. After a brief sketch of the history of music, the lecturer proceeded to describe the mechanism of the harpsichord, showing how it differed from the pianoforte; and amongst the specimens given of the various styles of music written for these instruments were included "The Carman's Whistle," Scarlatti's "Cat's Fugue," a Fugue by Bach, and various pieces by Handel, Mozart, Haydn, and Beethoven, the playing of which drew forth much applause. At the close of the lecture the chairman (the Rev. R. Bruce), thanked Dr. Spark for the pleasure he had afforded to the audience.

HULL.—The Organ at Colman Street Wesleyan Chapel was opened by Mr. W. T. Best, on the 13th ult. The chapel was well filled, and the selection of classical organ compositions performed by Mr. Best was much appreciated. The organ has been built by Messrs. Forster and Andrews, of Hull.

HUNGERFORD.—On Thursday, the 15th ult., a very successful concert was given in the Corn Exchange, by Mr. James Newhook, organist and choir-master of St. Saviour's, before a crowded audience. The chorus consisted of twenty-five boys from the National School, and the same number of men from the choirs of the town. The singing was steady throughout, and bore evidence of careful and judicious training, the various points being attacked with a decision rarely heard in small provincial towns. Miss Turner, the solo vocalist, was loudly applauded for her rendering of "Esmeralda" and "Come back to Erin." Some young ladies of the district contributed pianoforte duets. Mr. Newhook was a highly efficient conductor, and Mr. Payne, organist of Hawley, Hants, accompanied.

KESWICK.—On Monday evening, the 19th ult., Mr. Freeman, organist of Crosthwaite, gave his annual pianoforte recital at the Keswick Hotel. The music was entirely instrumental, one of Broadwood's grand iron pianofortes being used for this occasion. Two of Beethoven's chef d'œuvres, Mendelssohn's Songs without Words, and some of the sparkling dance music of Herz, Spindler, and others were excellently played, and formed an agreeable variety. Much interest was felt in the performance of Miss Smith, pupil of Mr. Freeman, whose rendering of Heller's "La Truite" and Pauer's "La Cascade," gave great satisfaction. Mr. Wales well sustained his reputation as a flautist. The room was well filled.

KILMARNOCK.—On Wednesday evening, the 31st December, a musical entertainment was given in the Corn Exchange Hall, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Dixon, High Church organist. The audience was a large one, and the concert passed off with great success. The artists were Madame Thaddeus Wells, soprano; Mr. Darling, tenor; Mr. Christian, bass; and Mr. Nicholson, flautist; Mr. Dixon officiating as accompanist on the pianoforte. The playing of Mr. Nicholson was a great attraction; his solos were superbly rendered, and nothing could have been more charming than his execution of the florid imitative passages of "Lo! here the gentle lark," in conjunction with Madame Wells. Mr. Darling and Mr. Christian were also highly effective in their songs. Madame Wells distinguished herself chiefly at the pianoforte, of which she is an accomplished player.

LEAMINGTON.—On Tuesday evening, the 30th December, the members of the Spencer Street choir gave a sacred concert in the Public Hall, Windsor Street, in aid of the fund for improving the chapel organ. Mr. W. R. Archer, organist, presided at the pianoforte, and several picked voices from the choirs of the Parish Church, Christ's Church, and Iron Church, were added to the Spencer Street choir. The programme included Mozart's Credo; "Resignation," by Lindsay; the Earl of Wilton's anthem, "O, praise the Lord;" "Angels, ever bright and fair; Mendelssohn's air, "If with all your hearts," with the recitative, "Ye people rend your hearts;" the Anthem, "O taste, and see;" (Goss); "Arm, arm, ye brave;" "Hail, Judea;" "O rest in the Lord;" "But thou didst not leave his soul in hell;" and the "Hallelujah Chorus." Mrs. Boddington was enthusiastically encored in "O rest in the Lord," and Miss Davis and Mr. Barnett were highly successful. The programme was creditably executed, the "Hallelujah Chorus" being particularly commendable. The Rev. J. Morrell Blackie presided, and opened the proceedings with a few brief remarks, expressive of the pleasure he felt in meeting the friends at Spencer Street once more.

LEEDS.—On the 10th ult., the Leeds Harmonic Union gave a concert in the Town Hall, which was in every respect highly successful. The choir has been well trained by Dr. Spark, and several pieces were so excellently sung on the occasion as to elicit enthusiastic approbation. The Undercliffe Glee Union also took part in the concert, and vocal and instrumental solos were given, which much enhanced the enjoyment of the audience.

LIVERPOOL.—The twelfth and last concert of the Philharmonic Society, for 1873, took place on the 23rd December, the Messiah, as usual, being the Oratorio. Principal performers: Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Perkin; trumpet obbligato, Mr. T. Harper. The first concert for 1874, was given on the 13th ult. Principal artists: Madame Nita Gaetano and Signor Agnesi; solo pianoforte, Madame Leonie Michels. The overtures were those to Semiramide and Oberon; the Sinfonia, Mendelssohn's A minor (the Scotch Symphony). The committee had hoped to introduce to a Liverpool audience, Sir Julius Benedict's MS. Sinfonia in G minor, but the non-arrival of the parts from Berlin, necessitated the change. The choral members sang with great spirit Mendelssohn's part-song, "Now morning advancing" and the Swabian part-song, "Farewell," with much delicacy. Signor Agnesi was very effective in the Scena (with chorus) from Semiramide, "Si, vi sarà vendetta," and "Nazareth" (Gounod), the last song being encored. Madame Nita Gaetano and Signor Agnesi gave, excellently, two duets of varied character—the pathetic "Qual sepolcro," from Paer's Agnesi, and "Leggiadre Rondinelle" from Ambroise Thomas's Mignon. Madame Michels played Weber's "Concert-Stück" with artistic delicacy and effect. The evening's performances concluded with Mendelssohn's March from Athalia.—The third of Mr. Charles Hallé's orchestral concerts was given on the 6th ult., at St. George's Hall, which was filled in every part. The leading feature of the concert was the excellent performance of Spohr's Symphony The Power of Sound, which has not been heard in Liverpool for about two years. The intensely expressive opening, the pomp of the martial episode, and the impressive finale, were executed to perfection; and M. Viouxtemps is worthy of notice for his very effective playing of the Serenade. The other orchestral numbers were the overture to Leonora, a new concert overture by Rietz, and Gounod's overture to Mirella. Mrs. B. Porter was the vocalist, and was highly effective in the Scena from Der Freischütz "Softly sighs," and Handel's "Let me wander not unseen." Madame Norman-Neruda secured a genuine success by her playing of Beethoven's Romance in F, and (with Herr Strauss) Bach's Concerto in D minor. Mr. C. Hallé conducted, and was accorded for his reading of Chopin's Polonaise in A flat.

LYNN.—The first concert of the Philharmonic Society for the present season was given in the Music Hall, on the 16th ult., the principal vocalists being Miss Matilda Scott and Mr. Stedman. The programme included a selection from Handel's L'Allegro, both the solos and choruses in which were well rendered. Mr. Stedman received an enthusiastic encore for his singing of "The Anchor's weighed," and one of the most successful efforts of the choir was in the part-song "Silent night," which was warmly applauded. Mr. B. J. Whall was conductor, Mr. J. Bray, leader of the band, and Mr. W. O. Jones accompanists.

MANCHESTER.—On the 26th December, Signor Giulio Perkin made his first appearance at Mr. Charles Hallé's concerts, and sang the following airs: "Se il reitor e la vendetta" (La Juive), "Fallen is thy throne, O Israel" (Sir John Stevenson), and "Infelice" (Verdi), with much success. Signor Piatti was the solo instrumentalist, and was much applauded in his various pieces. His Concerto in D minor, performed for the first time here, and his smaller solos, "Abendlied" (Schumann) were exquisitely played. Mr. Hallé and Signor Piatti gave most excellently the Tema con Variazioni in D major, by Mendelssohn. The band played Beethoven's C minor Symphony in a faultless style, and also the overtures, Zauberflöte (Mozart), Mirella (Gounod), and Manfred (Reinecke).—On the 2nd ult., Haydn's Creation with Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Agnesi, as principal vocalists, drew a large audience. Mr. Hallé conducted as usual. On the 8th ult., Madame Sinico was the vocalist, and sang in her accustomed charming manner. Mr. Hallé played Litolf's Concerto Hollandais in E flat, No. 3, "Das Lob der Thranen" (Schubert and Liszt), and "Il moto continuo" (Weber). The Concerto proved most interesting. Herr Strauss was the solo violinist and received a well-merited encore in Spohr's Potpourri on Irish Airs. The overtures performed were Les Abencerrages (Cherubini), L'Eclair (Halévy), and Introduction to Lohengrin (Wagner). The Symphony was Mozart's Parisian, in D, No. 9.—On the 15th ult., a very interesting programme was performed with the assistance of Madame Norman-Neruda, Signor Piatti, and Mr. Hallé. Mdlle. Gaetano was the vocalist. The chief attraction was Beethoven's Grand Triple Concerto in C major, (Op. 56) for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello with full orchestral accompaniments. This was played to perfection, and was heartily appreciated by the audience. The novelties of the evening were Raff's Grand Symphony, "Im Walde," in F (first movement); the overture Lustspiel (Rietz), and a Ballad and Polonaise, in G, by Vieuxtemps for the violin.—On the 22nd ult. a crowded audience was attracted by the new Oratorio, St. John the Baptist, by Macfarren, with the following principal vocalists: Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Patey, Messrs. E. Lloyd and Santley. The performance was one creditable to all concerned.—On Monday evening, the 10th ult., Mr. W. T. Best gave an Organ Recital, at St. Peter's Church. The programme, which included compositions by Bach, Mendelssohn, Mozart, H. Smart, J. Lemmens, A. Guilman, G. F. Hatton, W. T. Best, &c., was attentively listened to by a crowded audience.

MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.—Six organ concerts have been recently given by Mr. Summers, in the Town Hall, with a success which shows how rapidly the taste for good music is spreading in Australia. A week's Festival is to be held at Easter, with a fine orchestra and an efficient choir, numbering nearly 1000 members. Amongst the works to be performed will be included Bach's Passion (St. Matthew), Israel in Egypt, St. Paul, The Seasons, and a new Oratorio by Mr. Summers.

PARSONSTOWN, IRELAND.—At the Christmas gathering of Model Schools, on Monday Dec. 22nd, a choice selection of music was performed by the singing-class, and much appreciated. The prizes given by Mr. Arnold, music-master, were kindly presented (to those deserving) by the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Rosse.

PENZANCE.—A very successful performance of Sir Michael Costa's Eli was given by the Penzance Choral Society, in St. John's Hall, on Tuesday the 6th ult. The part of the Judge was ably sustained by Mr. Winn; Mr. Cummings took the parts of Ekanah and Saph, with his usual carelessness and skill. Mrs. Nunn successfully represented Samuel, and Miss Katherine Poyntz, though suffering severely from a cold, was most heartily applauded for her singing in the music allotted to Hannah. The secondary bass and tenor parts were well rendered by Mr. Stephen White, and Mr. Tronsson. The choruses were as a whole well sung, and the orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. W. C. Hemmings, also deserves commendation, particularly taking into consideration that the band consists almost entirely of amateurs. Mr. J. H. Nunn conducted.

PERA.—Handel's Messiah was performed in the Memorial Church, on the 29th Dec., by the British Choral Union. The church was densely crowded, the number of applications for places having been nearly threefold that of the seats. The majority of the audience was English, but there was a considerable number of other nationalities, principally Italian, German, and Levantines. The choir was composed of ladies and gentlemen. Sixteen of the lady-singers were Armenians, students in Mr. Panossian's school, and two of the gentlemen were also Armenians. Mr. Christiani, who has trained the Choral Union from its commencement, conducted the choir, and Mr. Mohert presided at the harmonium. The orchestra consisted of Italians, with one exception, Mr. Blair, second violin. Mrs. Hanson rendered with eloquence "There were shepherds abiding in the field," "Come unto Him all ye that labour," "But thou didst not leave his soul in hell," and "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Mrs. Triandaphillides sang very classically "O Thou that tellest," "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd," and "How beautiful are the feet." Miss Easton, who has a good soprano voice, was effective in "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion!" and "If God be for us." Miss Curtis sang with great pathos "Thy rebuke hath broken His heart," and Mr. Tucker, Mr. Streater and Mr. Knighton, gave the tenor and bass solos very creditably. The choruses were all well sung, and reflect much credit upon the able conductor of the choir, Mr. Christiani. The collection amounted to the sum of £ T. 36.34.

PULBOROUGH, SUSSEX.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus, at the Corn Exchange, on the 14th ult. The solos were taken by Miss Burden, Miss Allen, Messrs. Chatfield and Ansell, and the Rev. C. P. Calvert. The choral music was very carefully sung. Mr. T. Lacey led the orchestra, and Mr. L. S. Palmer conducted.

RETFORD.—The first evening dress rehearsal of the Choral Society was given in the Town Hall, on Monday, the 21st December, before a large audience. The work selected was Mendelssohn's Oratorio, St. Paul, which was creditably given, especially the chorale of "To God on high," and the ever-popular "Sleepers, wake." The solo parts were well sung by Miss Wright, Mrs. Wilson, Miss Gylby, Miss Spencer, the Rev. Canon Gray, the Rev. A. Custance, Mr. Manning, Mr. Bradshaw, Mr. Dimock, Mr. Reachlows, Mr. Merryweather, and Mr. Denman. The pianoforte accompaniments of Mr. Wells were, as usual, thoroughly effective, and the performance was a complete success, reflecting the highest credit on the care, industry, and musical skill of the talented conductor, Mr. Hamilton White.

RICHMOND, YORKS.—On Monday evening, the 5th ult., Mr. J. H. Rooks introduced for the second time Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, which was given in the Town Hall, by the members of the Parish Church Choir, assisted by several members of the Darlington Choral Society—altogether numbering about fifty performers. The pieces which were more particularly admired were "But who may abide," "O thou that tellest," "He shall feed his flock," "Come unto Him," "But thou didst not leave," "How beautiful are the feet," "I know that my Redeemer," and "The trumpet shall sound." The singing of the Misses Young, Mrs. J. G. Croft, and Messrs. Greathead, Todd, and Burgin, was excellent. The choruses were most carefully rendered. An efficient band was engaged for the occasion. Mr. Marshall, of Darlington, presided at the pianoforte, and the concert was under the able direction of Mr. Rooks.

RIPON.—The Church Institute gave a Soirée in the Town Hall, on Thursday, the 15th ult., at which the Lord Bishop presided, and the Marquis of Ripon delivered an address. The members of the Cathedral Choir, with Mr. A. Ramsden and a few other friends, assisted by a small band, performed a good selection of music, including Mendelssohn's Sons of Art, Haydn's 1st Symphony, and the overtures to Masaniello and Clemenza di Tito. Mr. E. J. Crow, Mus. Bac., the newly appointed organist of the Cathedral, conducted, and played in a most able manner Beethoven's Sonata in D, Op. 10. The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the performers, and an expression of hope that Mr. Crow might enjoy a long, happy, and prosperous reign over Ripon Cathedral.

SHEFFIELD.—On Christmas Eve Handel's Messiah was performed in the Music Hall, Surrey Street, with Mrs. Holt, Madame Whitaker, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Wood as principal vocalists. The choir consisted of the Sheffield Choral Society, and the Rotherham Hospital Musical Union, and the band of members of the Amateur Harmonic Society, assisted by several professional instrumentalists. Mr. C. Harvey, who originated the concert, must be congratulated on the success of the performance, the choruses being in great part given with much force and precision, whilst the singing of the principals gave great satisfaction. Herr Schöllhamer officiated as conductor.

—On Christmas Day, the Sheffield Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society, assisted by the Sheffield Choral Society, gave the same Oratorio, on which occasion the Music Hall was crowded in every part. The principal singers were Miss Helena Walker, Miss Moseley, Mr. A. Kenningham, and Mr. Brandon. The performance opened with "Christians, awake," accompanied by the free band and organ. Mr. Robinson (trumpet), and Mr. J. W. Phillips, as organist, played with their usual ability. Mr. Samuel Hadfield conducted. The Messiah was also given on the same evening in the Theatre Royal to a full house.

—Many musical entertainments have been given in the new Albert Hall, foremost amongst which must be placed that in which Mr. Pyatt, of Nottingham, was the caterer on the 3rd ult., on which occasion the splendid band of the Grenadier Guards under the leadership of Mr. Dan Godfrey, gave a highly attractive performance. Madame Osborne Williams was the vocalist on the occasion, and sustained her part in a highly satisfactory manner. M. Guilman, of Paris, on the 14th ult., as well as on two previous occasions during the month, gave recitals on the splendid organ built by M. Coll, of Paris. The hall was crowded on each occasion, and the performer most effectively displayed the capabilities of this fine instrument. Mr. Charles Harvey on the 13th ult., inaugurated the first of a series of orchestral and ballad concerts, and must be congratulated on the success which attended this, the first of the series. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss M. Severn, and Mr. Henry Guy. Mr. Charles Harvey was conductor.—On the 22nd ult., the directors of the Athenæum gave a concert before a crowded and appreciative audience. The vocalists were Mdlle. Titieni, Madame Sinico, Mdlle. Justine Macwitz, Signori Fabrini, Borella, Campobello and Giulio Perkin. Mdlle. Titieni was in fine voice, her "Ernani involami" was exquisitely given, and "It was a dream" was unanimously encored. The other singers were also highly successful, and M. Colyn, in his violin solos, created more than ordinary interest.

SOUTHWELL.—The Choral Society, which has been recently revived under the conductorship of C. Bucknall, Esq., organist of the Collegiate Church, gave a very successful evening concert on Tuesday, the 23rd Dec., in the Assembly Rooms. Gounod's "Nazareth" was sung with great effect by Mr. Clegg, of the Minster choir, and followed by the chorus of men's voices in unison. This was deservedly encored, as was also "The Linden Tree," a melodious quartet composed by the conductor, and well rendered by Messrs. Shumack, Wait, Holt, and Clegg. The members of the Society may fairly be praised for their singing of Macfarren's "Three Fishers," Archer's "Required love," and Pinsuti's "Good night, beloved." The concert was highly creditable to the Society, and was well supported by a large audience.

STOCKPORT.—The organ at Tiviot Dale Chapel, which has been reconstructed by Messrs. Whiteley of Chester, was re-opened by Mr. W. T. Best, on the 14th ult. The works performed comprised Mendelssohn's Organ Sonata, No. 4, Offertoire, by Guilman, Bach's Echo (B minor) and Fugue (G major), H. Smart's Air with variations, Prelude and Fugue, by G. F. Hatton, &c.

SUDBURY, SUFFOLK.—A concert was given in the Town Hall, on Thursday, the 22nd ult., under the conductorship of the Rev. R. B. Earée. The programme was well selected, and the vocal solos were much applauded, Miss Earée and Mr. W. H. Cummings receiving enthusiastic encores. Several glees were also re-demanded, and concerted instrumental pieces and solos were successfully given, Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso (pianoforte), by Miss A. Andrews, and a violin Fantasia by Mr. Smythies, being especially worthy of commendation. The gross receipts of the concert, which amounted to about £40, will be handed over to the organ fund of St. Peter's, Sudbury.

SYDNEY.—A choral service was held in the church of St. Mark's Darling Point, on Wednesday evening, 19th Nov., to commemorate the re-opening of the organ, which has been greatly improved and enlarged by Mr. C. J. Jackson. A full choir was present, numbering in all fourteen adults and seventeen boys. The service began with the well-known hymn, "We love the place, O God." The prayers, to the music of Tallis, were sung by the Incumbent. The first lesson was read by Canon Vidal, the second lesson by the Rev. C. F. D. Priddle. The services were Cantata, in D, Harwood; Deus misericordius, Jackson in F; Anthem, "O Lord, how manifold" (Barney). A sermon, suitable to the occasion, was preached by the Incumbent. At the close of the service a collection was made on behalf of the organ fund, exceeding £20. The church was crowded in every part, many persons during the service standing in the porch. The volunteers were played by Mr. C. H. Wood, organist of St. Mark's (who also presided ably at the organ during the service), and by Mr. Rea, of St. John's, Darling-hurst.

WALTHAMSTOW.—The Musical Society gave its first concert this season at the National School-room on the 19th ult., when a first performance of a new Cantata, Psyche, the composition of the conductor, Mr. J. F. H. Read, took place. The principal vocalists were Miss Nessie Goode, Miss Kate Wilkinson, Mr. H. Guy, and Mr. Wadmore. There was a full band of about 30 performers, led by Mr. H. Weist Hill, and a chorus of about 70 voices. The performance, considering the single rehearsal that had taken place with the band, was most creditable to all concerned. The Cantata proved a great success, and the composer, at the termination of both the first and second parts received quite an ovation from the performers, and from a large audience. The proceeds of the concert are to be applied to the local Dispensary.

WESTERHAM.—The Harmonic Society gave its first concert in the Public Hall on Thursday evening the 8th ult., when a portion of Handel's Messiah was performed with much success, the principal parts being sustained by Misses Lockyer and Harris, Messrs. Cockerell, A. Frogden, Horace Buck and J. Anderson. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included several concerted pieces, admirably sung by the choir, and a good selection of vocal pieces, preceded by the Overture to Figaro. Mr. Howell presided with his accustomed ability at the pianoforte.

WEST HACKNEY.—Mr. Edwin Gray gave an evening concert on behalf of the New School Building Fund, on Tuesday, the 13th ult., in the National Schools, Church Road, under the patronage of the Baroness Burdett Coutts. Artists: Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Adelaide Bliss, Miss Lydia Elsmore, Miss L'Estrange and Madame Arnold Potter (Miss Marienne Potter), Mr. Frank Elmore, Mr. Farquharson and Mr. Chaplin Henry; violin, Mr. Viotti Collins; pianoforte; Miss Ellen Bliss, Miss Nellie Hoe, and Mr. Farquharson. The concert was excellent in every respect, and gave much gratification to a crowded audience.

WILMSLOW, CHESHIRE.—A concert was given on Monday evening, the 12th ult. before a large audience. Besides several well-selected ballads, instrumental solos were given on the flute by Mr. de Jong, on the oboe by M. Lavigne, and on the pianoforte by Mr. Horton C. Allison. A duet for flute and oboe by Messrs. de Jong and Lavigne was highly appreciated, as were also the pianoforte pieces played by Mr. Allison, which included his own "Tarantella," and a Concert Fantasia by Liszt, on Mendelssohn's "Wedding March."

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Louis Löffler, organist and choir-master to Anderston Church, Glasgow.—Mr. E. C. D. EASTER ANTHEM.

"THE LORD IS MY STRENGTH." (Short, easy, and effective.) Composed by ALBERT LOWE. Octavo, 3d.

"Mr. Lowe writes with the gravity and earnestness of a true composer for the Church. This little Anthem is well adapted to meet the wants of small choirs, and cannot fail of acceptance when looked at from the higher ground of religious edification. Moreover, it shows a thoroughly musicianly spirit, and that rare gift, the ars est celare artem."—Sunday Times.

"This Anthem amply fulfils the announcement on the title-page; it is 'short' and 'easy'—the subjects moreover, being both melodious and well harmonised. The unexpected chord of B flat, after the lingering of the voices upon D, is a point worthy of attention; and the manner in which the harmonies flow towards the final close is well deserving of commendation. The Anthem will, we think, be found extremely useful."—Musical Times.

"Mr. Lowe has contributed to Church congregations and Choral Societies a 'short, easy, and full' Anthem, which is calculated to afford much satisfaction, and to be largely in request. The subject is treated in a truly devotional spirit, and with musicianly skill, and it is well harmonised."—News of the World.

"An excellent Anthem."—The Church Times.

SACRED SONGS, BY MILES BENNETT.

(Compass from B natural to F natural.)

THE LORD IS MY SHEPHERD. (Words from Psalm xxiii.) 3s.

I WAITED PATIENTLY FOR THE LORD. (Words from Psalm xl.) ... 4s.

CONSOLATION. (Words from "The Dove on the Cross.") ... 4s.

"Good Sacred Songs are certainly rarely to be met with; but we are able confidently to recommend each of the above to every true musician. The spirit of the familiar words of the Psalms is admirably caught and sustained in these compositions. In all, the musician will find modulations and harmonies accurately arranged, airs remarkable for their sympathy with the words, and accompaniments containing passages of considerable and, in some places, of exceptional beauty and elegance. We turn to these songs with a degree of pleasure, when we remember the quality of many of the sacred airs of the present day, some of which can boast their illuminated title-page as their chief or only charm."—Church Bells, March 29th, 1873.

"Mr. Bennett has given a sacred character to his music in excellent sympathy with the words he has selected; and we cannot too much commend the musicianlike manner in which the whole of the accompaniments are written."—Musical Times, Oct. 1st, 1871.

BEETHOVEN'S SONATAS.

(NEW AND COMPLETE EDITION).

EDITED AND FINGERED BY AGNES ZIMMERMANN.

In One Volume, Folio size, handsomely bound in Cloth, gilt edges. Price ONE GUINEA.

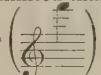

PREFACE.

NOTWITHSTANDING the many editions of Beethoven's Sonatas that exist already, the present one will stand in need of no justification if it should prove a help towards the better rendering and clearer understanding of these great works. This it aims to be.

Firstly: by the fingering. Many passages from their complication, present difficulties almost insurmountable to amateurs without some guidance, others again admit of various ways of fingering; in all such cases the one selected is that which the Editress, on careful consideration, believes to be the most conducive to the clearness of the phrasing; and even should it not seem the most easy or simple, the player may be repaid for any practice spent upon it, by a better insight into the purport of such passages.

Secondly: by the slurs, which are of such essential importance to define the phrasing, and yet are so seldom placed with due attention. These have been carefully revised; the best editions have been compared; in innumerable places where (contrary to musical sense and feeling) the slur stops short of the final note or resolution, it is here made to include such note or resolution; in fugal movements where the subject is originally slurred, the same indication is added in all its repetitions.

Thirdly: by the addition of the small staves in some places; it must be borne in mind that the compass of the Pianoforte was formerly much more limited than it is now, the highest note being at one time F  and consequently passages which, in the first part of a movement, appeared in a certain form, were obliged, when they recurred in the second part in a higher key, to be compressed for want of notes. In many cases this enforced alteration led to the addition of a new feature of interest, as, for instance, in Sonata No. 4 (page 51), where occurs, instead of  and again in Sonata No. 17 (page 221) —

In both these examples the introduction of the Pedal-note in the top part is so novel and beautiful, that it more than compensates for the loss of the original form of the phrase — wherever similar instances occur (and there are many), no alteration is proposed; but where no such compensatory element exists, where it is plain that the mechanical limitations of the instrument alone prevented a complete reproduction of the original passage, such passage is here printed in the shape in which it would probably have been written, had the keyboard in Beethoven's time had its present extent. Such alterations are offered as suggestions only; whoever prefers, can of course play the passage according to the original text.

The places where the present edition varies from others in notes, and the reasons for such variations, will be found in the accompanying list.

AGNES ZIMMERMANN.

SONATA I. Page 7, line 4, bar 2. B flat, instead of B natural, to correspond with similar passage in bar 2, line 1.

SONATA II. Page 15, line 5, bar 3,  This bar is printed in accordance both with the first editions of the Sonata and the last, by Breitkopf and Härtel; in the interim it has been made (by Moscheles and others) to correspond with the fourth bar following, for which there does not seem sufficient reason.

SONATA IV. Page 49, line 1, last bar.

In most editions the G is natural, but as it assumes the same position in the harmony as the D flat in bar 5, line 5, page 45, the G is here flattened to make both passages correspond.

SONATA V. Page 64. In the 5th and 9th bars of the second part, f is placed to the first chord instead of later, to give the same character as the opening subject.

SONATA VI. Page 78, line 2, last bar. The natural is placed to D, according to similar passage in last bar but one of page 79.

SONATA VII. Page 87, line 5, bar 2. C in the bass (instead of A), in accordance with similar passage in line 3, page 84.

SONATA XII. Page 155, line 2, bar 3. The bass octave is here printed A (instead of F, as in some editions), to preserve the uniform motion with the top part.

bass, instead of  according to similar phrase in last bar, line 5, page 252.

SONATA XX. Page 256, line 7, first bar. E is added in the bass to correspond with bar 3, last line of previous page.

SONATA XXI. Page 263, line 5, last bar. The Harmony is here printed to correspond with the same place in the five following bars. In some editions, instead of this first inversion, it appears as a second inversion, which seems to be irrelevant to the remainder of the passage.

Page 281, line 2. The touch of the Pianoforte was formerly so light, that runs in thirds and octaves could be done by sliding the fingers along the keys; this was, of course, much faster than they could ever be played from the wrist. It being now impossible to execute this passage in the manner intended, the small staves indicate the best way of dividing it between the two hands.

according to the manuscript, not as generally printed thus:  Page 350, line 5, last bar but one,

 according to the manuscript.

SONATA XXVIII. Page 360, line 2, last bar. Twice E in the left hand, instead of  as in other editions, since Beethoven evidently intended the strict imitation of the fugal subject, having even written perfect fifths to ensure this (see same page, line 4, bar 2

Page 360, line 4, bar 7, F instead of G in the bass, to preserve the subject. The same alteration is made in the right hand on page 361, line 1, bar 3.

A NEW WORK FOR AMATEUR ORGANISTS.

FAVOURITE SONGS from the ORATORIOS, arranged for the ORGAN (with Pedal Obbligato), chiefly for the use of Amateurs, by George R. Griffiths.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH.

1. HE SHALL FEED HIS FLOCK. Handel.
2. HE WAS DESPISED. Ditto.
3. ANGELS, EVER BRIGHT AND FAIR. Ditto.
4. HOW BEAUTIFUL ARE THE FEET. Ditto.
5. IF GOD BE FOR US. Ditto.
6. TYRANNIC LOVE. Ditto.

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed.

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

CHAPPELL & CO.

Have now on View the largest Stock in London of PIANOFORTES by all the great Makers, of ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS, greatly improved, and of ORGAN HARMONIUMS. Any of these Instruments can be Hired for Three Years, and, provided each Quarterly Instalment shall have been regularly paid in advance, the instrument becomes the property of the hirer at the expiration of the third year.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM.

SOLID OAK CASE, FIVE OCTAVES, AND TWO FOOT-BOARDS.

The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.

The instruments now offered to the public will be found divested of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organlike.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

From W. R. WILLIAMS, Esq., Professor of Music, Tydee, Newport, Mon.
"GENTLEMEN. "March 7, 1873.

"Having had several Instruments from you during the last ten months, I feel it nothing more than a duty on my part to candidly tell you that each Instrument has far exceeded the expectations of the purchaser, and given entire satisfaction, without a single exception. The Instrument that has arrived to-day is a model of workmanship, and a marvel of cheapness. I wish to make particular mention of the 'Pneumatic Sourdine' stop, which I thought was a sham when I first saw your list, but which I find softens the bass most effectually. In fact, your Instruments are, without flattery, really good, and wonderfully cheap. If you wish, you may give publicity to these remarks, which have been unsolicited, but duly merited.—Respectfully yours,
"To Messrs. E. and W. Snell. W. R. WILLIAMS."

(REGISTERED.)

The following Testimonial from Boyton Smith, Esq., in reference to No. 3 of this model, is addressed to all who desire the most satisfactory instrument of the Harmonium class ever yet offered to the public:—

"Dear Sir,

"The Harmonium I had of you some time since is

"The most satisfactory instrument of the class I ever had.

"The mechanical arrangement

"Is excellent, and has never been out of order.

"While from the

"Agreeable quality and variety of its tone, it is ever a pleasure to play upon it.

"I have never tired of it, as I have of other kinds; and it is

"Its capability of producing continued new effects that renders it truly as you style it

"'THE PROFESSOR'S HARMONIUM.'

"My Violoncello stop is the wonder of every one,

"So close is the resemblance.

"Yours faithfully,

"BOYTON SMITH.

Another Model, constructed with 2 manuals, surpasses all Harmoniums hitherto constructed, in offering some distinct qualities in voicing from the most delicate upwards, and some novelties.

HARGREAVES'S AMERICAN IRON FRAME PIANO

Has a double iron frame cast in one piece; cross strings, suspended soundboard: it is the ne plus ultra of Piano construction, excelling all others made with wooden bracings, or mixed iron and wood bracings, falsely called Iron Frame Pianos. It is especially addressed to all those wishing to possess the finest toned Instrument that money can purchase.

BOUDOIR GRAND, on the latest American system, cast iron frame and bars, three strings, oblique and cross strings, improved overstrung scale, called Hargreaves's American Iron-Frame Cross-strings Pianoforte; surpassing all Pianos made on the usual system, in quality, quantity, and duration of tone. These three qualities command instant recognition as soon as it is touched. Price, in the above-named length, 110 guineas.

MARCH 1, 1874.

THE POETIC BASIS OF MUSIC.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

WHEN a new system or theory is presented to the world those features in it most quickly arrest attention which have immediate practical results. The aggregate mind is itself eminently practical. Its first and governing thought is, How to live. Individual minds may exist in the shadowy realm of abstract ideas, apart from the influence of human necessity, but these are lost in the vast whole. Hence, the eagerness with which men ask themselves, when confronted with a new principle, "Will this touch us, and, if so, how?" They fix their eyes upon that in it which most obviously threatens consequences rather than upon the reasoning of which it is the outcome and representative. In fact, they are subject to the instinct of life. A particular example of this general rule may be found in the present condition, as regards England at least, of the musical questions propounded by Herr Richard Wagner. That famous person has been long before the world with a complete theory of musical development, yet he is chiefly recognised, when recognised at all, as an advocate of certain radical changes in the lyric drama—changes, that is to say, which have a serious bearing upon a very attractive amusement. So far as Wagner's theory concerning the lyric drama is understood by the popular mind, its actual and possible influence has aroused strong feeling, because it concerns, more or less, a multitude of individuals, and is, to them, a matter of subjective interest. But Wagner, looked at solely as a man who would change operatic forms, and his theory, regarded only as affecting operatic music, are imperfectly comprehended. True, this is the ultimate development of man and theory, but among the developing processes is much that has escaped general observation, and that may be considered independently of the chain in which it is a link. My purpose now is to take up one of Wagner's underlying principles and see what it is worth.

First of all, the principle chosen must be fairly and accurately described. In doing this, that there may be no doubt either of fairness or accuracy, I shall use the language of Wagner himself, and that of his champion in this country, Dr. Franz Hüffer, whose recently published book, The Music of the Future, is an authority not to be questioned. In an appendix to Dr. Hüffer's work, the author, referring to a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at Bayreuth, observes:—

"The choice of Beethoven's Symphony in D minor was the most appropriate that could be made on this occasion, because it forms, as it were, the foundation of the great development of modern German, and especially of Wagner's own, music. The principle of this new phase in art . . . is the necessity of a poetic basis of music; that is to say, a latent impulse of passionate inspiration which guides the composer's hand, and the conditions of which are in themselves by far superior to the demands of music in its independent existence. The rules arising out of these demands are in the Ninth Symphony violated, nay, completely overthrown, with a freedom of purpose and grandeur of conception that can be explained only from Beethoven's fundamental idea, as it gradually rises to self-consciousness, in the words of Schiller's Ode, 'An die Freude.'"

Speaking of the Finale to Beethoven's Symphony, Dr. Hüffer goes on to say:—

"It is the highest effort of dramatic characterisation instrumental music has ever made, and seeing that it has reached the limits of its own proper power, it has to call the sister art of worded poetry to its aid. . . . It is obvious how the introduction in this way of words, as the necessary complement of musical expression, even at its climax of perfection, became the stepping stone to the further development of poetical music, as we discern it in what is generally called the 'music of the future.'"

Here we have, clearly and boldly stated, the following theses:—

I. Music must arise from a poetic impulse, the conditions of which are superior to the demands of music in its independent state.

II. Instrumental music, even at its climax of perfection, is incapable of the highest expression of that impulse, and needs the aid of words.

Having gone to Dr. Hüffer for more concise definitions than could be found in the involved periods of his master, I now turn to Wagner himself for their exposition, and find all I want in a single chapter of his Opera und Drama—a chapter which, adopting the writer's own term, might be headed "Beethoven's Mistake." I propose quietly to accept this term, and allow Wagner to point out the "immeasurably rich master's" error. After noticing the development of instrumental music from the simple forms of the dance tune and ballad air, Wagner goes on to say that "the expression of a perfectly decided, clearly intelligible individual purport, was, in truth, impossible for a language capable only of expressing a sensation generally," and that this fact was exposed by Beethoven, in whom "the yearning to express such a purport became the consuming, glowing, vital impulse of all artistic creation."

It will here be observed that with regard to Beethoven personally, Wagner begs an important part of the question, but, without stopping to do more now than indicate the fact, I proceed with his argument.

From the moment the great master's "yearning" was manifested, instrumental music became an artistic error, within the mazes of which Beethoven remained entangled. But from the darkness of error came the light of truth, just as the effort of Columbus to reach the Indies by sailing westward led to the discovery of America. "The inexhaustible power of music is, nowadays, disclosed to us by the very great mistake made by Beethoven. Through his undaunted and most bold endeavours to attain what was artistically impossible, we have gained a proof of the boundless capability of music to perform every possible task, when it is only necessary for it to be completely and simply what it really is—an art of expression." From the "moment" that Beethoven's "yearning" after definite expression "grew to greater and greater strength"—a somewhat indefinite moment—"from that moment" continues our author, "began the great, painful period of suffering of the deeply moved man and necessarily erroneous artist, who, in the strong convulsions of the painfully delirious stammering of an enthusiasm such as that of a Pythoress, produced, as a matter of course, the effect of a genial madman upon the curious spectator, who did not understand him simply because the inspired master could not render himself intelligible to him." To this Wagner adds:—"Most of Beethoven's works of this period (his latest) must be regarded as an involuntary (the italics are mine) attempt to form for himself a language for his yearnings, so that they often look like sketches for a picture, about the subject (the italics are Wagner's) of which, indeed, the master had made up his mind, though not about its intelligible arrangement." Further on, we read of "enigmatical magic drawings, in which the master had simultaneously diffused light and horror, in order that he might, through them, publish the secret that he could never utter in music, but which, however, he fancied he could utter in music alone." This was "Beethoven's mistake," and the foregoing is Wagner's description of it.

I have thus allowed the master, Wagner, and the disciple, Hüffer, to state their case, from which logically, and therefore naturally, come certain inferences, making part of the case itself. Those inferences now demand attention; and, in the first place—

If instrumental music, in presence of Beethoven's "yearnings," became an artistic error, it is much more so, because without excuse, now that he has discovered (in his last symphony) music's highest form and expression.

This inference is proudly accepted by Wagner and his followers. The master speaks of Beethoven's "D minor" as the "last symphony ever written," and Dr. Hüffer avows that with its appearance the arts of music and poetry "became inseparable," while "the possibility of music for the sole sake of sonorous beauty virtually ceased to exist." It follows, as a matter of course, that symphony writers since Beethoven are not "necessarily erroneous," as was he, but sin in the full light of truth, and against all such Wagner, who consistently never attempted to write a symphony himself, uses his keenest rhetorical weapons. First, he attacks those who imitate principally what is external and strange in Beethoven's style. Of these he observes, that not knowing the "unspoken secret" of the master, it was necessary to find some substantial subject for their music. He continues—"The pretence of the musical description of a subject borrowed from nature or human life was placed as a programme in the hands of the auditor, and it was left to the power of his imagination to interpret, in accordance with the hint once given, all the musical eccentricities which could be let loose, with unshackled caprice, until they degenerated into the most motley, chaotic confusion." German composers, Wagner goes on to say, have made themselves less absurd. They have incorporated the new style with the old, and thus formed an artificial medley, "in which they might for a long period continue to musicise very decently and respectably, without having to fear any great interruptions from drastic individualities. If Beethoven mostly produces upon us the effect of a man who has something to tell us, which, however, he cannot communicate clearly, his modern followers, on the other hand, resemble men who inform us in an irritatingly circumstantial manner that they have nothing to tell us." Thus does Wagner in a few words dismiss Mendelssohn, Spohr, Schumann, and all post-Beethoven participators in the "artistic error." A second inference from the Wagnerian theses is a correlative of the first:—

The art of music is, in itself, incomplete, and needs to be perfected by an alliance with poetry.

In his exposition of this doctrine Wagner has used the parabolic form after a fashion which makes it somewhat difficult for me to follow him in a paper meant for general reading. Here, however, is a brief and significant passage:—"Music is a Woman. The nature of woman is love, but this love is the love that receives, and, in receiving, gives itself up without reserve. A woman does not obtain perfect individuality until the moment that she gives herself up. She is the water-nymph who speeds through the waves of her native element without a soul until she obtains one through the love of a man." Previously he had said that Beethoven vainly tried to make music fertile by "exercising it in parturition," and was at last compelled to supply the "fecundating seed" which he took from the procreative power of the poet. I am concerned to inquire neither into Wagner's theory respecting woman nor the accuracy of his parallel. Enough that what has been quoted will convey a strong and clear idea of the views he holds concerning the independence, or rather the dependence of music as an art.

Having thus thrown upon Wagner's position, with regard to the "poetic basis" of music, as much light as his own words can give, it remains to see what can be urged on the other side. Here let me say, that, in reply, I shall eschew invective, which, as Mr. Disraeli once said, when it told against him, is not argument. Invective, consequent upon Wagner's unfortunate leaning towards its use, has long disfigured this musical controversy, and given rise to an odium almost as virulent as that which springs from theological discussion. But, while avoiding sarcasm and abuse, I am prepared to do more,—I will not inquire whether Wagner, as we know him, is the result of his own theory, or whether the theory has been adapted to Wagner. In like manner, I will waive the question how far, when exalting the alliance of music and poetry as the only real musical organisation, Wagner is moved by personal vanity, or, at least, by a natural tendency to magnify his own special vocation. In brief, the man shall be separated from his theory, as ought always to be the case when theory is weighed in the balance.

Looking generally at the matter in dispute, it is impossible not to be struck with the part Beethoven plays in it. Of course, if the Wagnerian principles be true, they must have existed before that great master, and independently of him; but none the less do we find Beethoven held up as the Messiah of a new musical dispensation wherein Wagner takes the rôle of St. Paul. Wagner has built his theory upon Beethoven; and it may, therefore, be worth while to see whether, between the foundation and the superstructure, there exists a real and natural connection. Here, then, we touch a vital part of the subject. The question stands thus:—Did Beethoven, in the latter part of his career, strive "involuntarily" to make instrumental music a definite means of expression? Are his later works examples of a "mistake" which he rectified only when worded poetry was united to music in the Finale of the Choral Symphony? I answer that in putting forth such a doctrine Wagner has acted upon assumption merely. He seems to be conscious of the fact, and takes measures to place himself beyond the reach of refuting evidence. Mark, for example, how he insists upon the word "involuntary" in connection with Beethoven's efforts; how he compares his utterances to those of a Pythoness, and defines him as a "genial madman." All this shows considerable skill, because, if Beethoven be regarded as an unconscious and irresponsible medium,—Dr. Hüffer accepts as true of all creative musicians what Vogl said of Schubert, that they compose in a state of clairvoyance—then, of course, any theory can be built upon the man's doings without reference to the man himself. But will my readers accept this premise? I trow not. They will insist, with me, in looking upon Beethoven as a conscious and responsible worker, who knew what he did, and why he did it. Wagner would keep Beethoven out of the witness-box, under what is sometimes euphuistically termed "friendly restraint." I call him into court and ask that he may be allowed to influence the verdict. Under these circumstances it appears rather damaging to Wagner's theory that Beethoven having found the right still pursued the wrong. If, before the Ninth Symphony, the master was struggling to give expression to his thoughts, and if, in the Ninth Symphony, he found the means of doing so, how comes it that, after the Ninth Symphony, he went back to his artistic error, made more "enigmatical magic drawings," and more "sketches about the subject of which he had not made up his mind" in the shape of the so-called "posthumous quartets." This was not the act of a man conscious that he had found the light and liberty of perfect expression, established the inseparableness of music and poetry, and proved that the existence of instrumental music, "for the sole sake of sonorous beauty" was no longer possible. In good sooth, Wagner has excellent reasons for keeping the master in a state of irresponsibility. Furthermore, by those who reject that irresponsibility as an unwarranted assumption, it must be thought strange that Beethoven left no record of his struggles and of his victory. Here was a man who, having great and definite things to say, laboured for years with an indefinite means of expression, and kept absolute silence about his disappointments. Here, moreover, was a man who, after sore efforts, made a great and glorious discovery, and said nothing about it. Strange, indeed, is this; and from it I can only draw one inference—that the fabric which Wagner has built upon the latter part of Beethoven's artistic career, is neither more nor less than the creation of a man resolved to bolster up a preconceived theory. How much is this inference strengthened when we note that Wagner says not a word about the Choral Fantasia, which appeared as early as 1811, and in which voices are united to the solo instrument and orchestra, just as in the Choral Symphony. Here, let me quote a passage from a letter of Beethoven's, addressed to the publisher, Probst:—"I must now, alas! speak of myself, and say that this, the greatest work I have ever written, is well worth 1,000 florins c.m. It is a new grand Symphony, with a finale and voice parts introduced, solo and choruses, the words being those of Schiller's immortal 'Ode to Joy,' in the style of my pianoforte Choral Fantasia, only of much greater breadth." Note, here, the almost complete parallelism which the master saw between the two works. But Wagner says nothing about the Fantasia, because, to do so, would tend to upset his theory. That work was not preceded by "yearnings," "sketches" and all the rest of it. Yet, if ever Beethoven ceased to be a "necessarily erroneous artist" it was in 1811, not in 1824.

Let me not be understood to have said anything in depreciation of the Choral Symphony. My contention simply is, that Wagner has taken the plan of a particular work and treated it as an outcome of general principles, which were never in the composer's mind.

Dismissing thus the Beethoven phase of the question, I now come to the question as a whole, and have to meet the proposition stated by Dr. Hüffer, that the arts of music and poetry are inseparable, and that "the possibility of music for the sole sake of sonorous beauty has ceased to exist." In another place, it is true, Dr. Hüffer admits that the highest type of musical development "does not make impossible or irrational the perpetuation and perfection of a lower and simpler species as such," but, herein, he confessedly differs from Wagner, and, as the disciple is not above his master, I shall take the proposition in its unqualified form. Is it true, then, that instrumental music is a defective organisation—that it is the soulless Woman, who cannot be complete till she find the Man? In answering this question, I may surely appeal to the universal instinct, which ought never to be overlooked when discussing matters of universal application. "Instinct," said Sir John Falstaff, "is a great matter," and it must have an important effect upon this controversy, according as we find its weight thrown upon one side or the other. Can we, then, discover anywhere the existence of a feeling that instrumental music is an incomplete and, consequently, unsatisfactory thing within its own province? An affirmative reply to this may be challenged as regards every form of instrumental music, from the wild notes of the Alpine herdsman to the C minor symphony of Beethoven. Nowhere do we find evidence of such a feeling, which, if it ever had a universal existence, would speedily remove the cause of offence. Above all, would the unfinished organisation of instrumental music have made itself obvious to those with whom the art generally has been a constant study and delight. But it is just these who find the highest forms of instrumental music satisfying. Where is the amateur who detects incompleteness in the first three movements of the Choral Symphony. When listening to them, has he the impression of looking upon a half-finished temple, or upon—if Wagner's theory about the female sex be right—a woman who has never loved? Is he conscious of an abhorrent vacuum, and does he thrill with satisfaction when the voices enter to fill it up? Direct and plain questions like these, undarkened by grandiloquent verbiage, excite a smile, but none the less do they comprise the Wagnerian theory. The answer to them must be easy. Every amateur knows that he is free from such a consciousness; that the purely orchestral movements are complete in themselves, and that, when vocal music is added, he recognises no more than a temporary alliance of powers which may exist apart. I confess to a high estimate of the argument derivable from the general sense of completeness with which instrumental music is received, but it is not all necessary to my present purpose. A refutation of Wagner's doctrine may be found in the very nature of music itself; and here we come at length to the pith of the whole question.

Dr. Hüffer, in the book already named, after drawing largely upon the philosophy of Schopenhauer to support his views, remarks on the other hand:—"Schopenhauer seems to have considered music as an art of entirely independent and self-sufficient means of expression, the free movement of which could only suffer from a too close alliance with worded poetry. He even goes to the length of highly commending Rossini's way of proceeding, in which the words of the text are treated quite en bagatelle, and in which, therefore, music speaks its own language so purely and distinctly that it does not require the words at all, and has its full effect even if performed by instruments alone." This dictum of his favourite philosopher Wagner rejects, and Dr. Hüffer says that it "cannot but surprise us." But as regards the independence and self-sufficiency of music, it exactly defines the position I mean here to assume. To look upon music as an indefinite expression, needing alliance with that which is definite, is to do it gross injustice. It is an expression truly, just as the forms and colours in a painting are the expression of the artist's subject, but it is also a suggestion. For the truth of this Wagner himself shall be a witness. In his remarks on the Choral Symphony, he substantially says that the work represents (I quote Dr. Hüffer) "the struggle of the human heart for happiness. In the first movement this longing for joy is opposed and overshadowed by the black wings of despondency. . . . The second movement, on the other hand, with its quick and striking rhythmical formation, describes that wild mirth of despair which seeks respite and nepenthe in the waves of physical enjoyment. The trio again may be considered as a dramatic rendering of the village scene in 'Faust.' The Adagio, with its sweet pure harmonies, appears after this like a dim recollection of former happiness and innocence. . . ." Considering that Wagner regards music alone as barren, and only capable of being "exercised in parturition" without bringing forth, it is astonishing what the purely orchestral movements of the Symphony convey to him. In this description he "unconsciously" indicates the true grandeur, independence, and self-sufficiency of the unaided art. Its strength and glory lie in the very qualities which he elsewhere speaks of as its weakness and shame. To make it the mere expression of worded poetry is to harness Pegasus; for the genius of music is never so noble and attractive as when free in its own domain. Carlyle hints at this when he speaks of music as "a kind of inarticulate unfathomable speech, which leads us to the edge of the infinite, and lets us for moments gaze into that." Make it the accompaniment of articulate, comprehensible speech, and you limit its powers. There is no question of gazing into the infinite then; the bounds which confine it are narrow and visible. But leave music free to range the world of sound, and it brings back infinite and infinitely varied treasures. How thankful ought we to be for what Wagner calls an "artistic error." To it we owe the intellectual wealth of Bach, the gaiety and humour of Haydn, the tenderness and grace of Mozart, the sublimity and pathos of Beethoven, the refined beauty of Mendelssohn, the artless song of Schubert, and the fervent, soul-revealing poetry of Schumann. If these things be the results of "artistic error," let us cling to error, and reject the truth. At any rate, let us not proclaim the doom of music as a separate art at the bidding of one who, having a mission, seeks to magnify its importance, and who, being at the head of a movement, would make the little sphere in which he works comprise the whole world.

THE curiosities of the present law of licence will at some future time be regarded with wonder. On Ash-Wednesday last the Moore and Burgess Minstrels were not allowed to perform in St. James's Hall, but were permitted to appear at the Gaiety Theatre. At the Opera Comique (which, like all the theatres, was closed against any dramatic representation) we had the "Dancing Quakers," a "Juvenile Tragedian" in two scenes from Shakespeare (concluding with a "terrific claymore combat"), and Leotard, "the wonder of the trapeze." For the benefit of those who give dramatic and musical entertainments (if not for that of the general public) it would be well that some light should be thrown upon this matter; for, pending more accurate information on the subject, it appears incomprehensible that people who are not permitted to black their faces and sing at St. James's Hall, should be allowed to do so at the Gaiety; and that where an Opera is positively prohibited, "Dancing Quakers" may exhibit their laughable contortions, and a "Juvenile Tragedian" act upon a stage from which a full grown one is rigidly excluded.

As in our notice of the Prospectus of the British Musical and Dramatic Institute, we commented upon the want of strength in the staff of musical professors engaged, we are glad to be able to call attention to the recent appointment of Mr. Brinley Richards for the Pianoforte, Dr. Rimbault for Harmony and the Harmonium, and Mr. Charles Herring for the leadership of the orchestra. This is a step in the right direction; and we trust shortly to attend one of the Practice evenings, and report upon the progress of the students. Meantime we cordially wish all the success so enterprising an undertaking deserves.

HERR PRAEGER's lecture "On the Fusion of the Romantic and Classical Schools of Music, culminating in the Works of Richard Wagner," recently delivered at the Society of Arts, is somewhat in advance of the time—even more so than Wagner's music itself. We see no reason, for instance, for attacking the "Sonata" more especially when we find that Liszt's "splendid Sonatas, composed of the legitimate movements," are held up as models for imitation. That the word is derived from "Suonare," to sound, has nothing whatever to do with the matter, for it has been accepted to mean a certain species of composition, and like the Symphony, Overture or Concerto, therefore, its construction is subject to certain conditions, the order of the movements allowing of variation, but never being, as Herr Praeger says, "reversed." The lecturer's admiration of Wagner is evidently founded on an intimate knowledge of his theory and his music; but we believe that he would have made more impression upon his audience had he rigidly kept to his strictures upon operatic reform.

THERE have been two "Musical Festivals" during the last month. That, under the supervision of Professor Oakeley, at Edinburgh, was in every respect highly creditable to all concerned, the programmes presenting attractions beyond those usually offered at our musical gatherings nearer the metropolis. Specimens of all styles have been presented, from Bach to Wagner, and much interest was excited by Mr. Hallé's performance of the Pianoforte part of Liszt's "Concerto Symphony," a work which fully deserves a hearing in London. At Brighton Mr. Kuhe has also provided an excellent series of concerts, the selections being judiciously made from the works of living as well as deceased composers. Mr. Sullivan's "Light of the World" and Signor Randegger's Cantata "Fridolin," were received with the utmost favour, the singing of Mr. Santley in the former composition having (as at Birmingham) created a profound impression.

WE understand that Mr. Mapleson intends to open Drury Lane Theatre for the Italian Opera season in the middle of the present month. Balfe's "Il Talismano" is, we believe, positively to be produced; and two singers, Madlle. Lodi and Madlle. Louise Singalée, are to make their first appearance before a London audience. The season at the Royal Italian Opera commences on the 31st inst. As far as we can ascertain, the music of the "past," and not of the "future," is again to reign triumphantly throughout the season at both houses.

We understand that Sir Michael Costa intends to lower the pitch at Her Majesty's Opera, Drury Lane, during the coming season. Much as we welcome this concession to long suffering vocalists, we cannot but express our regret that this step was not taken when, some time ago, the subject was so pressed upon the attention of conductors, and Mr. Barnby, entirely unsupported, introduced the diapason normal at the performances of his Choir in St. James's Hall.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE performance of Handel's charming and far too long neglected Oratorio, "Theodora," on Saturday, the 7th ult., afforded an instance of the disadvantage which attends a departure from a successful rôle. The concerts which are presided over by Mr. Manns are ordinarily of a kind which almost defy criticism. The rendering given of a Symphony by Beethoven, Mendelssohn or Schubert is usually well-nigh perfect; it is only necessary to "put up" an Oratorio to find that nothing is absolutely so—not even the Crystal Palace Band. The performance in question was singularly infelicitous, the band being as much at fault as the chorus. It was only when we turned to the soloists that anything like satisfaction was obtained, Madame Sherrington's Theodora being all that could be desired, as was also Mr. Cummings's Septimius; Signor Agnesi, as Valens, added another to the many triumphs this great artist is achieving in English Oratorio; and Miss Dones indicated, by a quiet but artistic rendering of the part of Irene, how thoroughly she deserves the success she is gaining; whilst Miss Sterling, the American contralto, appeared to be the only one of the soloists who failed to enter into the spirit of the Handelian recitative. Her magnificent voice was heard to some advantage in the air "Sweet Rose and Lily;" but her style would seem to require considerable modification before she can hope to take a position as an exponent of sacred music of the highest class. The orchestral accompaniments, which had been revised and added to by Dr. Hiller, were, as we have already hinted, not rendered with that faultless accuracy and finish we have learned to expect at the hands of this body of musicians. Dr. Stainer presided at the organ, with his usual efficiency. The reception of Herr Joachim at his first appearance this season, on the 14th ult., must have convinced him how thoroughly his consummate artistic qualities are appreciated by an English audience. His rendering of Spohr's Concerto in E minor was in every respect absolutely perfect; and in some Hungarian dances—composed by Herr Brahms for two performers on the pianoforte, and adapted by Herr Joachim for violin and pianoforte—he afterwards aroused the enthusiasm of the audience to such an extent that an encore was positively insisted upon. A word of praise is also due to Mr. Franklin Taylor, who played the important pianoforte part with much skill and intelligence. At the concert on the 21st ult., the whole of Mendelssohn's music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream" was given, the solos being well sustained by Miss Emily Spiller and Miss Dones. The choral parts of the work were scarcely up to the high standard which the public have a right to expect at these concerts; but the intrinsic beauty of the composition elicited the warmest applause, and any deficiency in the choruses was amply atoned for by the purely orchestral movements, which were played with a delicacy and precision rarely attained; the clarinet and flute in the Scherzo, especially, moving together with such excessive accuracy and finish, as to raise a storm of applause, which could only be appeased by a repetition of the entire movement. The "Funeral March" of the Clowns, too (one of the most perfect specimens of genuine musical humour in existence), was also universally re-demanded. Another welcome item in the programme was the Chorus of Maidens, from "King Stephen," by Beethoven (preceded by the Overture), which was fairly sung, and much applauded. Mendelssohn's "Surrexit Pastor," for soprano solo, female chorus and organ, written for the French nuns at the convent of "Trinità de Monti," in Rome, is just one of those purely religious compositions which he could easily throw off at any moment, and as easily forget. The solo was well sung by Madame Otto-Alvsleben, and the organ part was carefully played by Dr. Stainer. Mr. Alfred Holmes's new Overture, "Le Cid," although placed last in the programme, made a highly favourable impression; the subjects throughout being bold and melodious, and the instrumentation showing much command over the resources of the orchestra. Mention must also be made of Madame Patey's excellent rendering of the air "O thou afflicted," from Benedict's "St. Peter." At the concerts we have noticed Mr. Manns conducted, with the exception of that on the 14th ult., when, in consequence of a family bereavement, he was worthily replaced by Mr. Wedemeyer.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

At the eighth concert, on the 5th ult., Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, the solo parts being sustained by Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Emily Spiller, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Miss Dones, Messrs. W. H. Cummings, Raynham, and Signor Agnesi. The choruses were rendered throughout with that care and finish which invariably characterise the performances by this choir—"Thanks be to God," especially, being sung with extraordinary precision and accuracy—and Signor Agnesi, in the part of the Prophet, again proved himself a thoroughly reliable and conscientious exponent of Mendelssohn's exacting music. On Ash-Wednesday the "Messiah" attracted a large audience, the performance being in every respect one of the best yet given by this Society. The principal vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams (who created a highly favourable impression, in spite of an obvious and pardonable nervousness), Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Agnesi. We have scarcely ever heard the choruses better sung, or produce a more profound effect upon the listeners than upon this occasion; and the members of the choir, as well as the conductor, have a right to be congratulated upon lending their best energies towards the due rendering of a work, the more subtle beauties of which, from constant repetition, are too often disregarded. Mr. Barnby conducted at both these concerts with his accustomed ability, and Dr. Stainer was an efficient accompanist at the organ.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.

THE first concert of the present season was given at St. James's Hall on the 19th ult., with a programme in the highest degree interesting to those who believe with us that the delicate part-singing of this finely trained choir should be the main attraction. The first part—devoted entirely to the compositions of Mendelssohn—contained three part-songs for male voices, never before given in public, although, judging not only from their intrinsic beauty, but from their enthusiastic reception, it is not likely that they will return to the obscurity from which they have emerged. By vigorously encoring the spirited Hunting song, "Waken, Lords and Ladies gay," the audience at once elected the popular favourite; but, beautiful as this piece undoubtedly is, there can be little question that the composer appeals to us in a higher form in the one which stood first in the programme, "Festal Greeting," one of the most fanciful, melodious and delicately harmonised of the many compositions of this class which Mendelssohn has bequeathed to us. "Land of Beauty" has also the indescribable charm of the composer's style throughout, and was received with a warmth of applause which fully attested the delight of the listeners, both at the excellence of the music and the perfection, with which it was interpreted by the choir. We must also speak in high terms of the part-song, "On the sea," which had never before been sung by Mr. Leslie's choir, and will no doubt, in consequence of this performance, receive the notice which its excessive merits demand. In the second part—selected exclusively from the works of English composers—a genuine success was created by Mr. Leslie's new part-song, "Lullaby of Life," one of the best specimens of the kind yet furnished by this composer. The words, by the Rev. S. J. Stone, are set with a sympathetic feeling rarely shown in modern part-music, the introduction of the word "Sleep" at the conclusion of each verse, on a charmingly melodious phrase, giving a character to the composition which lifts it far above the works merely written for the display of what is conventionally termed "light and shade." The song was exquisitely sung, and repeated by a demand as unanimous as it was well deserved. The other part-songs given for the first time were, "Midst grove and dell," by J. F. Barnett, "Gather ye rosebuds," by Blumenthal, and "Lives of great men," by John C. Ward, all of which earned the good opinion of the audience, but created no remarkable enthusiasm. Miss Edith Wynne was as excellent as ever in the soprano part of Mendelssohn's Anthem, "Hear my prayer," and Mr. E. Lloyd sang the same composer's song, "The Garland," with so much genuine and unaffected expression as to elicit a spontaneous encore. The vocal music was agreeably relieved by the pianoforte playing of Miss Josephine Lawrence, who in a selection from Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte" and Benedict's Fantasia on "Where the bee sucks," gave indication of powers which will no doubt ripen with age and experience.

WAGNER SOCIETY.

THE fourth concert, on the 13th ult., was rendered exceedingly attractive by a selection from "Lohengrin," the reception of which amply proved the hold which—whether for good or evil—Wagner's music is rapidly obtaining in this country. The Prelude, Bridal Procession, and instrumental Introduction to the third Act are now sufficiently well known to make them safe items in a programme; but the scene of the arrival of Lohengrin and Farewell to the Swan, in the first Act, was new to the hearers, and produced such an electrical effect as to be universally demanded. Elsa's Dream, and Lohengrin's Song to Elsa also stirred the audience to enthusiasm; and the applause throughout the selection was, indeed, of so universal a character as to increase the wonder why the experiment of presenting one of the composer's complete operas is still delayed. The vocalists were Madame Corani, Mr. Wallace Wells and Mr. Bernard Lane, all of whom—especially the lady—acquitted themselves of their difficult task with the utmost credit. The orchestra was perfection, not only in the Wagner music, but in the stirring and fanciful Overture of Berlioz, "Le Carnaval Romain," Gluck's Overture to "Iphigenia en Aulide" (to which Wagner has generously written a coda, to replace one already supplied by Mozart), and the Abbé Liszt's "Fest March," which worthily concluded an interesting concert. Mr. Edward Dannreuther conducted with his usual intelligence and earnestness.

MR. ARTHUR SULLIVAN'S Oratorio "The Light of the World" is to be given for the first time in London, by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, on Thursday, the 19th inst. The principal vocal parts will be sustained by a quartet of the first English singers, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Santley (the latter gentleman breaking through his rule of not singing in the Royal Albert Hall on this special occasion), and the Oratorio will be conducted by its composer. We are authorized to state that their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and other members of the Royal Family, intend honouring the performance with their presence.

MENDELSSOHN'S "St. Paul" is to be performed for the first time by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, on Thursday next, the 5th inst., the principal vocalists announced being Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, with Dr. Stainer at the Organ. The performance will be conducted, as usual, by Mr. Barnby.

ON Friday evening, the 30th January, a concert was given in the Boys' School, Hornsey, in connection with the Hornsey Choral Society. The programme consisted of solos, part-songs, &c., all of which were very well rendered. Miss Rose Harrison gave two songs with much effect, and Miss Rose contributed a song by A. S. Gatty. Mr. W. Fletcher sang "I dream of thee at morn" (H. Smart); and "At sundown" (Kücken), the latter being encored. Mr. P. Bazeley gave "The Beacon fire" (Moul); and Mr. Walton sang "To Anthea" (Hatton), and "The Shepherd's Winter Song" (Hatton), afterwards joining Mr. Fletcher in Benedict's duet, "The moon hath raised her lamp." The choir sang effectively several part-songs by Mendelssohn, Smart, Macfarren, &c., and received an enthusiastic encore for a capital rendering of "Hark the merry drum" (Krug). The quartet, "Hark! above us" (Kreutzer), was excellently given by Messrs. Close, Rendall, Froome, and A. Close; the trio in Bishop's "The winds whistle cold" being also effectively sustained by the three first-named gentlemen. Mrs. Nicholls played a piano solo, and Mr. G. W. Spencer conducted. The room was well filled.

THE results of the late Birmingham Festival have, we are glad to say, been even more successful, in a pecuniary point of view, than we anticipated, for at a recent meeting of the Governors of the Birmingham Hospital the last instalment of money received in aid of its funds was paid, making the total amount £6,577 11s. 9d. This is the greatest sum ever realised at these meetings.

THE second concert of the British Orchestral Society, which was given on the 5th ult., contained no item of importance, if we except David's Concertino for the Viola, which was excellently performed by Mr. W. C. Doyle, and warmly applauded. Mention must also be made of the clever playing of Madame Kate Roberts in Sir Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Caprice in E. In spite of Mr. Mount's earnest conducting, the execution of the orchestral pieces wants refinement and finish.

MR LEMARE is to be congratulated on his earnest attention to the claims of English composers, for at the Brixton Choral Society, which meets in a confined room at the Angell Town Institution, he has already produced Mr. Sullivan's Oratorio, "The Light of the World," and Signor Randegger's Cantata, "Fridolin," neither of which—in spite of their success at the Birmingham Festival—has yet been heard in the metropolis. It is true that the merits of these compositions can be but imperfectly revealed with the accompaniment of a pianoforte and organ; but the choir has been well trained to its work; and although "Fridolin" (which was given on the 16th ult.) occasionally baffled the efforts of the choristers, the performance on the whole was highly commendable. Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter" is announced for performance at the next concert.

It is with the sincerest regret that we record the death of Mr. Henry John Kirkman (the junior partner in the well-known firm of Kirkman and Son, pianoforte makers), which occurred on the 9th ult. Mr. Kirkman—whose sound reasoning powers and quick grasp of a subject led him originally to desire the Bar as a profession—was of the utmost service in raising the fortunes of the house as soon as he became a partner, his new and striking inventions in the construction of pianofortes having called universal attention to the firm of "Kirkman and Son." At his funeral, which took place at Kensal Green Cemetery, on the 14th ult., the esteem in which he was held was fully shown by the number of members of the musical profession who attended, and, as a mark of respect to his memory, the Royal Academy of Music, of which Institution he was a Director, was entirely closed during the day.

THE West London and Kilburn Musical Society, on Monday January 26th, gave a performance of the "Messiah." The solos were well rendered by Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Isabel Weale, Miss Tomset, Miss Warwick, Mr. Greenhill and Mr. Pratt. The choir sang steadily; and was well supported by the band. Mr. W. Beavan conducted.

At the Church of St. Mary Abchurch, Abchurch Lane, on Thursday evening January 29th, a service was held (consisting of the shortened form of Evening Prayer), after which a recital of classical music was given by Mr. Albert E. Bishop, organist of the church. The programme included, among other works, Mendelssohn's Sonata in D minor.

ON Tuesday, the 3rd ult., the choir of the Wesleyan Chapel, Bayswater, presented the organist, Mr. W. S. Brocklehurst, with a handsome travelling-bag and dressing-case. The Rev. G. Follows, who made the presentation, eulogised the care and efficiency displayed by Mr. Brocklehurst in conducting the services at Denbigh-road. The following was the inscription upon the testimonial: "Presented to Mr. Walter S. Brocklehurst by the Members of the Denbigh Road Choir, in token of their affectionate regard."

Two Pianoforte Recitals have been given during the past month by Miss Clara Gottschalk, at St. George's Hall, the chief object of which was to introduce some of the compositions of her brother, the late L. M. Gottschalk. The varied style of the pieces selected, and their earnest and sympathetic rendering, excited much interest, and the applause was both enthusiastic and appreciative. Miss Gottschalk was assisted in the vocal department by several eminent singers.

THE first of three "Chamber Concerts of Modern Music" was given by Mr. Willem Coenen at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 20th ult., before a most attentive and critical audience. Rheinberger, Bishop, Bach, Brahms, Liszt, Rubinstein, and Mendelssohn were worthily represented during the evening, the instrumental executants being Messrs. Coenen (pianoforte), Wiener (violin), Zerbini (viola), and Daubert (violoncello). Miss Ferrari and Miss A. Sterling were the vocalists. Concerts so excellently organised should command the attention of all who sympathise with Mr. Coenen's efforts to spread a knowledge of the finest specimens of modern chamber music.

THE Southwark Choral Society gave an excellent concert on the 27th January, at St. Peter's Schools, Emerson Street. The first part consisted of sacred pieces from the compositions of Handel, Bach, Mendelssohn, Dr. Chipp, &c. Mention should be made of the selections from Handel's "Occasional Oratorio," which were welcome as much by reason of their novelty as by their excellence. Mr. J. Courtney's Anthem, "Sing forth the honour of His name"—a very meritorious composition—was well given, as were also the other items in the programme. The second part was devoted to secular music, and seemed to be highly appreciated by the audience. The soloists were Mrs. Underwood, Miss Dear, Mrs. W. Shoveller, Mr. W. Shoveller, Mr. Bunker, and Mr. J. Harper. Mr. W. H. Harper presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Ralph Horner at the pianoforte.

THE Service of Song held at Surrey Chapel, on the 10th ult. (in connection with the South London Auxiliary Sunday School Union) recounted the leading events in the history of David. The music was sung by a choir of three hundred, mainly composed of children, who were supplemented by a small band of teachers and friends, directed by Mr. J. Courtney, the conductor of the Southwark Choral Society. The Rev. Newman Hall read the connective readings. The hearty voices of the children led off with the favourite hymn "Good David," to the melody of "Jesse;" and in the following piece, descriptive of child life, sung to the familiar strains of "Home, sweet Home," the entire choir took part. The ancient Hebrew melody associated with the ancient Hebrew benediction, "The Lord bless thee and keep thee," was grand; so also was the Russian air descriptive of the approach of the giant and its effect upon the chosen people, accompanied with the heavy tramp of the Philistines upon the pedals of the organ. The single chant, "Woodward," was beautifully sweet, alternating its snatches with the reading of the preparation of David for the conflict. Mr. W. H. Harper presided at the organ, and played with his accustomed ability.

A SUCCESSFUL concert was given on the 11th ult. at the All Saints' School Room, Kensington Park Road, in aid of the Choir School of All Saints' Church. The artists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Miss Dones, Messrs. Stedman, Patey, E. H. Birch, Viotti Collins, W. H. Callcott, Henry Parker, and the choir of the Church, assisted by about twenty members of Mr. Henry Leslie's choir. The various numbers of the programme were much appreciated by a large audience.

WE regret to have to record the death of Mr. John Lowick, clerk to Messrs. Kirkman, of Soho Square, through accidentally falling down the staircase in the establishment, on the 12th ult. His very obliging manners had won him much respect from the members of the musical profession.

At the monthly concert of the St. George's Glee Union, held at the Pimlico Rooms on Friday evening, the 6th ult., W. H. Birch's Operetta, "The Merry Men of Sherwood Forest," was successfully performed. Among the soloists, Miss Horder and Mr. Jekyll distinguished themselves by their rendering of the music allotted to Maid Marian and Robin Hood, respectively. The choruses were sung by the choir of about 100 voices in a satisfactory manner. The second part included an Etude, in three movements, on the Mustel Organ, well played by Mr. Tamplin; also a song by the same gentleman, entitled, "Why I love thee," rendered with much taste by Mr. Jekyll. Miss Buley and Mr. Rushton Odell were very successful in two songs. Miss Ada L. Matthews and Miss Julia Augarde were efficient accompanists, and Mr. T. Garside conducted with his usual ability.

A CONCERT was given on the 20th ult. at the Assembly Rooms, Eyre Arms, St. John's Wood, by Miss Isabel Weale, assisted by Miss Dones, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Thurley Beale, Herr Röver, and Mr. Henry Parker.

MADAME DE GOUTIN gave a concert at the Assembly Rooms, St. John's Wood, on the 25th ult., before a large audience. In Schubert's Sonata in D (Op. 137, No. 1), for pianoforte and violin (in which she was assisted by Mr. Henry Holmes), Beethoven's "Waldstein Sonata," and a Fantasia of Mendelssohn, the concert-giver displayed good executive powers and an intelligent appreciation of her authors; some pieces of a less classical character also affording her an opportunity of showing her grasp of what may be termed "passage playing." In all her pieces she was much and deservedly applauded. Mrs. Alfred Gilbert, Miss H. Rice, Mr. W. C. Bell, and Signor Torretti contributed several songs, and Mr. Lansdowne Cottell conducted.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Cathedral music, by Francis Edward Gladstone.

MR. GLADSTONE puts forth here a large collection of pieces that have doubtless been prompted, if not exacted by his late office of organist of Chichester Cathedral, and he dedicates the fruits of his labour in the service of the sanctuary to the Dean. We have a setting in E of the Te Deum, which is purely written, nicely distributed for the voices, and overcomes the difficulty imposed by modern use upon musicians of composing for this long, grand, and very diversified Canticle, without repetition of words—difficulty, because the length of the text suggests amplitude in its various portions, because its grandeur is hard to be embodied without continuity, and because its diversification would naturally exact such variety in the music suited to it as, without rare skill in the design, might induce a fragmentary and unsatisfactory effect: There is the music in G for the Benedictus, that will be available on many occasions to which music of higher pretension is inappropriate. The setting in D of the Cantate Domino is animated and brilliant. The Deus Misereatur, in the same key, may be regarded as a companion to the foregoing, to which its more placid character makes a good contrast. These are followed by three Anthems: the first, intended for Advent, begins "The Lord, even the most mighty God," which first words are set as recitative for a solo bass, and this is followed by a Larghetto and an Allegro Moderato for the full choir; the second, "Teach me Thy ways," consists of one movement, which is grave in character and generally melodious; and the third has the well-known and frequently set text, "O how amiable are Thy dwellings," which will win attention in spite of intimacy with other renderings of the same passage. Finally, there are two short Anthems or Intros: one "Render your heart" is for eight voices, and aims, not unsuccessfully, to picture the penitential words; the other "Lift up your heads" will not obliterate the memory of Handel's Chorus to the same text, any more than the foregoing will teach us to forget Mendelssohn's Recitative; it is injudicious to set new music to passages with which some former rendering is known to everybody, for recollection is a child that will not be laid to sleep, and its troublesome prattling prevents our giving due regard to music that might be found meritorious, had it a fair undisturbed hearing. It is highly commendable in our composer to take full advantage of all the opportunities his position may afford for exercising his abilities; he is perhaps less to be praised for putting into print everything he writes, for were he more sparing in his demand on public opinion, he might still gain valuable experience, and might only challenge criticism with works that might be as full of merit as the many that come before us are free from fault.

AMONG the many compositions by the organist of our Metropolitan Cathedral with which it has been our fortune to meet, we far prefer this now before us. The harmonies are for the most part simple, though coloured occasionally with so much of the chromatic element as gives them life, and strength, and variety; and they are so distributed for the voices as to produce a full and sonorous body of tone. There is so much of interest in the part-writing as to make the music attractive to the singers, which is a sure means of effect upon an audience. The organ part extensively amplifies the vocal score, and enriches, without obscuring, the sounds to be poured forth by the singers. The piece consists of three movements, which are well contrasted in character. Each is self complete, the first having a few bars after the close of the voices, to lead into the second, and the last opening in like manner with some interludial matter to link it to the second. The said second movement, already twice named, "They that wait upon the Lord," is expressly stated to be available as a separate piece without the context. It is directed to be sung by semi-chorus or by solo voices, and the ingenious interweaving of the parts throughout it, is admirable in purpose and certain of good effect. In the last movement, there is a fugal point on the words "For in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength," which is worked with some freedom, but yet gives the advantage of variety to the work, and the inestimable relief of a timely cessation of full four-part harmony. From the time of Mendelssohn, we have been made more and more familiar with previously unusual forms of final cadence, all tending to show how the dominant and the more extreme chords derived from it govern the key, and necessarily lead to a satisfactory conclusion; here we have a chord of the dominant major 9th for the penultimate harmony, with the 7th in the bass leaping to the tonic in the closing chord, and with the rare distribution of the 3rd standing in a higher part than the major 9th from the root; the effect is novel, and the verdict on its beauty in such a situation has to be pronounced by those who may hear it. Let us repeat a protest that has many a time been urged in these columns, against the anomaly of encumbering music which is as modern in style as in date, with the notation of the age before Handel and Bach: supposing even it to be generally admitted that the employment of four minims in a bar were the necessary and only means of expressing music of the Elizabethan period, or music which technically emulated its manner, on this very account, the said white notation is inappropriate to the setting down of nineteenth century ideas, and we cannot countenance its assumption.

Twelve Popular Hymns. Set to music by Guido Aretino.

UPON examination it would appear scarcely necessary for the author of these tunes to seek to shelter himself under a nom de plume, which this obviously is; for although there may not be much in these compositions which rises far above the average of modern hymn tunes, there would seem to be little which falls greatly below it. A novel feature strikes us at first sight in the naming of each tune after some one of the ancient Philosophers, who have written upon the art of music: but has the question as to whether a name is essential to a tune ever struck the author? Few, if any, among the musical nations on the Continent seem to have considered it necessary to label their tunes further than to give the first line of the hymn to which the music is set; nor do we in England endeavour to distinguish Chants, Songs, Kyries, &c., by the names of towns, saints, or other objects, animate or inanimate. However, the question resolves itself into a matter of taste, pure and simple. The first tune, "Pythagoras," is flowing, and presents some pleasing sequences, together with the novelty of a tenor part which "doubles" the melody. The unsatisfactory features are the high range of the melody (G ♯) and a kind of bass which is sometimes called "vamping" for want of a better term, and which could only be excused on the ground of the character of the hymn being martial, which this is not. No. 3, "Aristoxenus," would be a wholly successful tune, were it not for the fact that it contains three full closes. No. 6, likewise, is full of right feeling, and only suffers from bad accentuation. Each of the remaining tunes possesses some special merit needless to specify. But on the general question of tempi it appears to be necessary to say a few words. The pace at which some of these tunes are intended to be sung, if we may judge by the metronome marks, is sufficient to take one's breath away; for example, $O = 80$ in a tune which contains minims and even crotchets, indicates a pace which might fairly be called racing. We would strongly urge the author to reconsider his metronome marks, as the evils resulting from this hurried singing are not confined to the spoiling of the music.

Perpetuum Mobile, for the Pianoforte. Composed by F. Mendelssohn Bartholdy.

THIS sketch, forming No. 48 of the Posthumous works of Mendelssohn, will be warmly welcomed by all who believe with us that, whether good, bad, or indifferent, the merits of any compositions left by a deceased author should be judged by the world rather than by a section of it. There can be little doubt that Mendelssohn's fame, although it may not be materially raised, will never be lowered by the publication of any one of his pieces; and it seems strange indeed that, whilst we read with the utmost interest every letter penned by this popular composer, we should throw aside even the merest Impromptu written in the language of his art. The "Perpetuum Mobile" is a lively and melodious piece, reminding us occasionally of the last movement of Weber's Sonata in C (known as the "Moto Continuo"), but thoroughly individual in character, and so excellently written for the hands as to make the task of playing it, as it is marked, "Prestissimo," one of no great difficulty to pianists with agile fingers. The frequent modulations prevent anything like monotony arising from the unceasing flow of semiquavers; and the return of the original theme has a remarkably fresh effect. Both as a study and as an attractive composition for performance, we cordially commend this piece to the notice of all who desire worth as well as novelty.

Second Gavotte for the Pianoforte. By Walter Macfarren.

THE fine, bold diatonic harmonies in this piece are so thoroughly characteristic of the "Gavotte" age, to which we are now so lovingly looking back, that we unhesitatingly recommend it to all admirers of that school of writing. The subject, too, is so extremely melodious as to ensure its welcome even with those who cannot appreciate the musicianlike manner in which it is treated. For the benefit, however, of those who wish to study as well as to play this composition, we would especially point out the beautiful sequence of four-twos and sixes, commencing at the end of the 8th bar, page 3, and also, in the coda, the descending scale in the bass, harmonised with alternate triads and sixes, a point of much interest, and a fitting termination to one of the composer's best contributions to our rapidly increasing healthy stock of pianoforte music.

In the Gloaming. Reverie for the Pianoforte. By Frederick F. Rogers.

IF it be found necessary to give titles to pianoforte pieces, we think the more indefinite they are the better. Assuming that our modern compositions are destined to a prolonged existence, it is undoubtedly true that to future generations such a description as "Rondo in E flat" or "Capriccio in D minor" would convey no idea of the piece intended, and this is the reason why, in speaking of the well known B flat Sonata of Dussek, for instance, we invariably call it the Sonata "dedicated to Mrs. Chinnery." Composers, then, would do well to consider how in naming their works they can give them a sufficiently distinctive title, without challenging criticism upon its applicability, by labelling them as "descriptive music," which, after all (although perhaps the most general in the present day), is about the most difficult class of composition a young writer can attempt. Now the piece before us is a "Reverie," and "In the gloaming" will do as well for an inoffensive title as anything else, because it merely expresses the hour of peacefulness and repose, and these are precisely the characteristics of the majority of those "Songs without Words" of which Mendelssohn set us the pattern. Mr. Rogers has written an extremely melodious theme, in D flat major, the accompaniment to which has some little character of its own. The second subject, in the subdominant, serves sufficiently well as a contrast; and the original melody on its re-appearance ends the piece, with a short coda and a plagal cadence.

Three Autumn Songs, for a Contralto or Bass voice.

1. A Lament for the Summer.
2. A Rainy day.
3. A Song for November.

Composed by W. Howell Allchin.

MR. ALLCHIN must be a bold man to publish "Three Autumn Songs," although he announces on the title-page that they may be had separately. Even Madame Patey, to whom they are dedicated, would scarcely have the temerity to sing all three in succession; and smaller vocalists, therefore, can hardly be expected to make so hazardous an experiment, even upon the most indulgent listeners. Although we have occasional—and, perhaps, pardonable—reminiscences of Mendelssohn, the composer has set the words he has chosen with much judgment; and—chiefly by giving a variety of character to his accompaniments—has succeeded in being less monotonous than might have been expected. No. 1 will, we fear, be dragged through at a crawling pace by amateur singers, for it is written in 6-4 rhythm, and marked "Lento." The melody has much eloquence; and, if singers can be persuaded to feel two beats in the bar, it may be made effective. No. 2, with an obstinate syncopated accompaniment throughout, is the best of the three songs; but a good vocalist and a sympathetic pianist are absolutely necessary, to realise the intention of the composer. There is a simplicity in the treatment of No. 3, which may, perhaps, make it a more general favourite than its companions. The change into the tonic major shows that Mr. Allchin has well considered the meaning of the verses to which he has given a musical colouring; the hopeful character of the final words, especially, being set with much poetical feeling.

Six Trios for Female Voices. The words translated by H. W. Dulcken, Ph. D. Composed by Franz Abt.

- No. 1. Ave Maria.
- " 2. The Wanderer's greeting.
- " 3. Where deepest shadows hover.
- " 4. Parting beam of daylight.
- " 5. Once again the day hath flown.
- " 6. Thou Heaven blue and bright.

THIS series of melodious Trios will be a real boon to amateur vocalists who wish to cultivate part-singing, for they present no difficulties which careful practice will not overcome. No. 1 has a calm theme in true sympathy with the words, the snatches of arpeggio accompaniment stealing in with good effect, and a solo for a fourth voice adding much brightness to the composition. No. 2 is a well harmonised melody, flowing throughout without any break, and exceedingly simple, both in the voice-parts and accompaniment. No. 3, although equally unpretending, contains somewhat more variety, the triplet accompaniment contrasting well with the arpeggio quavers, which continue until the change from major to minor. No. 4 has an attractive subject, but we do not quite like the enharmonic changes which occur so frequently as somewhat to disturb the quiescence demanded by the poetry. No. 5 is in our opinion unquestionably the gem of the series. Commencing with a melodious theme, in E major, we get some highly effective imitative phrases; and a solo, for alto or mezzo-soprano voice, answered by the trio, with which it is united at the close of the verse, is a point of the utmost interest. This beautiful composition deserves, and will no doubt receive, a large amount of attention both from masters and pupils. No. 6 makes a worthy close to the series. It has an exceedingly pleasing subject, which is appropriately harmonised, and so quietly accompanied as to help timid singers, a characteristic which cannot be too highly commended in simple part-music. We may mention, in conclusion, that any of these Trios may be had separately.

Two-Part Songs. With Pianoforte accompaniment for the use of schools:—

- No. 1. Monarch Winter. Poetry by W. S. Passmore.
- " 2. The Skylark. Poetry by Richard Yates Sturges.

Composed by Stephen S. Stratton.

THIS is just the sort of simple part-music that we should like to see introduced into schools, for it is both melodious and well written. No. 1 has a bold subject, the harmonies to which flow naturally enough to enrich, without disturbing, the melody. Of the two, however, we much prefer No. 2, although it is perhaps somewhat more difficult to sing. The theme colours the words with excellent effect, and point is gained by the occasional breaking of the voice-parts, instead of allowing them to flow on smoothly, as in the first song. We believe, however, that in most elementary schools it will be found necessary to transpose No. 2, if not No. 1, to a lower key, for the constant strain upon the upper G and F sharp is rather to be avoided than encouraged in young singers.

The Scalometer and Chord Indicator. Invented by Dr. L. M. Bonn.

OUR opinion (founded upon many years of experience) is that the rudimentary part of music cannot be effectually taught by contrivances, showing "at a glance," by sliding a piece of pasteboard up and down, or twirling round a circle, the number of sharps and flats required in each key, the position of the tones and semitones in the scale, and the relative minor (as it is still absurdly called) to every major key. However a student may pore over a diagram like this (peering through little holes to discover whether a note should be sharp, flat, or natural), it is on music-paper that he must eventually read music, and it is the staff, therefore, which should first be submitted to the eye. Our conviction upon this point, however, shall not prevent us from bestowing praise upon Dr. Bonn's very ingenious invention. On one side—termed the "Scalometer"—the construction of every major scale is clearly shown, by moving round to the fixed place of Do any note which is chosen as the starting point, the naturals, sharps, or flats being indicated respectively by a white, red, or blue square. A minor third below Do major, the relative minor is given, both ascending and descending, according to the orthodox manner. But in examining this system closely, we find two embarrassing difficulties. In the first place, when a note is moved over Do, upon which a major scale is not constructed—as, for instance, D sharp—no sharps or flats are placed on the staff: this may mean that a scale is not usually written upon a sound so noted; but there is no explanation of this; and what learner is supposed to make it out for himself, especially when he finds that the scale of C appears precisely the same to the eye? In the second place, B and C are placed on the same square, the first coloured red and the second blue, forming, for example, the fourth sound in the scale of G flat major. According to Dr. Bonn's own explanation, this must mean that B sharp and C flat are identical: it is true that a musician knows better; but we presume that the "Scalometer" is to be used for the purpose of tuition, and not as a toy for those who already understand the matter. On the other side—called the "Chord Indicator"—the chords of the key-note, subdominant and dominant in the major key, are shown, corresponding with the note chosen for the Do on the opposite side; and the method of making the key-note and subdominant chords minor is also given. The received method of naming the notes according to their value—as semibreve, minim, &c.—is supplemented by the German plan of taking the semibreve as the whole, the minim as half, the crotchet as a quarter, &c., a system which we should like to see adopted in all instruction-books. Dr. Bonn's invention will especially appeal to the disciples of the Tonic Sol-fa method; for the syllables of the scale always appear in the same places, whatever may be the key-note; and thus the fixed sounds produced may be studied rather as a curiosity than a necessity. Much thought must have been bestowed upon the method of carrying out this invention; and we trust that its author will see that we appreciate his labours by devoting so much space to a discussion of its merits. We believe that if any contrivance of this kind can be of service in early tuition, the "Scalometer" will be found most valuable; and should Dr. Bonn see with us the defects we have pointed out, he can easily remedy them by a few words of explanation.

Popular Classics for the Pianoforte. Selected and Edited by Walter Macfarren. Third Series.

THAT the idea of producing a carefully edited selection of those pianoforte works which have been allowed almost to fall into oblivion has proved a thoroughly successful one is amply shown by the issue of a third series of the "Popular Classics," every number in which we may at once say is a veritable gem. The Series contains (like those which have preceded it) twelve numbers; and Mr. Macfarren has, wisely we think, abstained from including any compositions of a very modern date, preferring to show how much sterling music of a former time we have neglected, rather than to point out the many works by composers of our own day which should command our attention. In the collection we have a Gavotte and Musette in D minor, and a Passepied, in B minor, by Bach; an "Allegro con Brio" (from the Sonata Op. 13) and a "Rondo Brillant" in B flat, by Hummel; a Sonata and a "Toccata" by Paradies; two Romances by Steibelt; the "Presto" in A flat, from Haydn's Sonata, No. 6; Woelfl's Sonata (Op. 53); Dussek's Saxon Air, with variations; and Handel's Gigue in F sharp minor. As persons previously unacquainted with these pieces may find it difficult to make a selection from this list, it will be better for those with a classical taste—or for those who wish to acquire one—to possess themselves of the entire series; but timid travellers in the regions of art hitherto unknown to them may be too cautious to hazard such an experiment, and to such, therefore, we unhesitatingly say that they cannot be wrong whichever number they may choose.

F. PITMAN.

New Practical Singing-class Handbook. The Instructions written and the Music principally composed or arranged by George Wells.

THE gradual spread of the "Moveable Do" theory for the purposes of vocal class teaching is leading to strange results. Given the starting point—that we are no longer to pay attention to fixed sounds—Instruction books without number appear, the sole novelty in which is that the lessons (written in the present notation) are to be sung to the intervals of the scale, presuming only that the pupil can manage to find them out. Mr. Wells says that "the strongly-felt want of this book has given rise to its existence;" let us see how he has supplied this want. Commencing by showing the names of the notes, and explaining the beats in simple duple time, he gives us some "Rounds for two voices," written in different keys without any signature. Music in two parts afterwards appears, noted on the same principle, and then the student is told (without having had the sharp or flat even mentioned) that he is to commit a list of "key signatures" to memory. Upwards of twenty harmonised lessons (some in four parts) are then given, with the proper signatures to the keys; and at the end of all these the formation of scales, by means of sharps only, is explained, and immediately tunes are given in keys with flats. Now it appears to us that although an intelligent pupil might be able to sing all these lessons without the help of the explanations, he certainly would never be able to do so in consequence of them, for passing over the fact of tunes being written in keys with sharps and flats before anything has been said about the formation of scales—the effect of a sharp is not even shown until the 17th page, and the effect of a flat is never mentioned at all. However, as it is stated in the Introduction to the book that it "does not pretend to teach the pupils without oral instruction," we will pass to the music, which consists partly of compositions by the author, and partly of selected pieces harmonised by him. Mr. Wells says that in studying these lessons "the taste of the pupil is cultivated while he is learning to sing." Let the reader judge whether the following harmonies (selected at random) will cultivate the taste: "Fruitful Fields," between the first and second bar, two fourths rising; "Farewell to the Village," between the fourteenth and fifteenth bar, a fourth rising to a fifth; "Cheerful Strains," eleventh bar commencing on the second quaver, three perfect fifths in succession; "Up the Hills," leading to the last bar before the Da Capo, perfect fifths between soprano and bass; "My Highland Home," third bar, an incomprehensible harmony upon F♯; and, worst of all, the first phrase in "Cherry Ripe," harmonised with a bass in perfect fifths with the melody, every time it occurs. Like many authors whose works have been submitted to us for notice, Mr. Wells may defend the illogical arrangement of the instructions in his book; but the defects in his harmonies are inaccuracies which speak for themselves, and we should not be doing our duty as reviewers were we to neglect pointing them out.

Le Joueur de Flûte (Opéra de Hervé), pour Piano.

Une Heure de Royauté (Opéra de Armand Roux), pour Piano.

Une Fête aux Champs; Danse Rustique, pour Piano.
Par J. Rummel.

MR. RUMMEL's two Operatic Fantasias are the very best we have ever seen from his pen, which as our readers know is a somewhat prolific one. No. 1 commences with a stirring theme, followed by an "Allegro Vivo," an "Allegretto" and a melodious Waltz, all of which are excellently arranged. But No. 2 will unquestionably become the favourite, for not only are the airs tri-², but the passages which link them together are so vivacious and carefully written for the instrument that we heartily recommend the piece to teachers who desire something that shall combine pleasure with instruction. The Bolero, in A minor, is particularly effective, and the change into the tonic major makes a joyous Finale. In the "Fête aux Champs" the composer has given us an attractive rustic melody, in C minor, for the principal subject, and his second theme, in B flat major, is in good keeping with the character of the piece. Feebleness, however, is apparent before the return to the original motive, especially where the hands are crossed. The piece nevertheless is a good one of its kind, and does much credit to its composer's inventive faculty.

AUGENER AND CO.

Original Pieces for the Organ, by Francis Edward Gladstone.

AN obvious familiarity with the capabilities of the organ and a fluent command of musical resources enable the fertile author of these pieces to contribute to the large stock of modern music for his instrument such matter as is pleasing in itself, if not conspicuously unlike the productions of other writers. The present series comprises a graceful Andantino in C, which flows on melodiously; a Postlude in E flat, of which the good effect is in some sort jeopardised by the constant prevalence of one figure or rhythmic arrangement of the notes; then a movement called Preludio Religioso, which is a Larghetto in D, and which, as a matter of taste more than of principle, we prefer to its companions; next, a movement described as In Modo di Minuetto in which, further, the antiquated direction "A Tempo Ordinario" leads us to look for an imitation of the style of past generations, and the agreeable music in A minor disappoints not our expectations; and, lastly, an Allegro Moderato, which has the additional direction "E Pomposo," is in the somewhat unusual measure of $\frac{3}{2}$, is extended to greater length than the others, and presents more variety than any of them. There is an independent pedal part in each of the numbers, they are all of moderate difficulty, the stopping is judiciously marked, and the collection deserves to be considered by those who need music for unostentatious effect and useful practice.

SCHOTT AND CO.

The Music of the Future. A letter to M. Frédéric Villot by Richard Wagner. Translated from the original German by Edward Dannreuther.

HERR DANNREUTHER, to whose zeal it is in a great measure due that the music, at all events the instrumental music, of Herr Wagner has of late obtained a fair hearing in this country, has now, in the above translation, afforded the general public a glimpse at the same composer's strivings in another department of his art, in which there is more room for polemical controversy—that of theory. The selection, on the part of the translator, is a judicious one, and we congratulate him upon his having successfully surmounted the obstacles which a subject, dealing to a great extent with abstract conceptions, necessarily presents. The object of the letter, from which Herr Dannreuther has already given some extracts in a lecture delivered at the Royal Institution in January last, is to explain the artistic aims of Herr Wagner's theories, showing, at the same time, how far they have been applied to his Music Dramas, composed up to the period from which the letter is dated (1860). It may thus be considered a résumé of theories and ideas advanced by the author in his more elaborate pamphlets, and particularly in his "Kunstwerk der Zukunft" (Work of Art of the Future), published more than twenty years ago, and which created so much angry controversy among German musicians at the time of its appearance. The above "letter" will be welcomed by all who have taken an interest in this new phase of German musical efforts. Those among us who, as yet, look upon Wagner as the innovator who would sacrifice all melody for the sake of declamatory correctness, will be startled by passages such as this: "Let us settle, first of all, that the only form of music is melody, that without melody music is not conceivable, and that music and melody are entirely inseparable." And, again, persons who have been accustomed to entirely identify the movement set on foot by Wagner, with the efforts of the Lisztian School, will read with surprise that "it is not a programme . . . but only the dramatic action on the stage, which can fully express the significance of symphonic music." Whether or not we agree with theories, little more than hinted at in this pamphlet, there is a good deal of original thought contained in it, which will, in his turn, set the reader thinking and, we doubt not, make him desire for more.

PATERSON AND SONS, EDINBURGH.

Robert Schumann's "Soul of my Soul, my inmost Heart," "Sunday on the Rhine," and "Fare thee well." Transcribed for Harmonium, or American Organ, and Pianoforte, by Otto Schweizer.

THE growing love for Schumann's vocal music in England is a healthy sign of the time; and although not especially fond of "transcriptions" ourselves, we welcome the appearance of these beautiful songs in their present shape, because we know the more they are heard, the more must they win their way to a place in our affections. In combination with the pianoforte, the harmonium or American organ, they will be found extremely effective; and, if well played, a very good idea may thus be formed of these compositions, upon the many merits of which it is now unnecessary to enlarge. In the second and third upon our list the words of the songs are printed at the commencement; and we may also mention that very full directions for the management both of the harmonium and American organ in the performance of each piece are given at the bottom of the page.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

UNISON SINGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—As a constant reader of your valuable Circular, I have looked anxiously, but in vain, for some comment upon that portion of Mr. Barnby's Paper on Church Music, wherein he advocates the singing of hymns, &c., in unison, and not in parts. There may be some who, like myself, would regret the exclusion from our parish churches of part-singing not contrary to laws of harmony; and in default of a more able exponent, I venture to lay before you some views on the subject. Supposing a hymn to be sung in parts, Mr. Barnby points to three disturbing elements that will probably be present. Firstly, some of the congregation will be singing the melody an octave below others. Secondly, they will produce inharmonious combinations and progressions when heard together with the lower parts in the choir. Thirdly, there will be aspiring amateurs inventing parts of their own. Now, taking the last first, it is very doubtful whether the aspiring amateur will be induced to relinquish his contrapuntal impromptu, even by the abolition of part-singing in the choir. This individual must, I fear, in any case be endured, simply because he can't be cured; and I question whether his harmony (?) will not be more excruciating than ever, when combined with the "free" accompaniments some organists will add to unisonous singing. I do not understand that there is necessarily any objection to the "doubling" of a melody in octaves, in vocal, any more than in instrumental music; on the contrary, in many operatic concerted pieces, and other works of some of the best modern composers, examples are to be met with of melodies sung by voices in octaves, together with other vocal parts. Many hymn tunes and chants, when sung in parts by the choir, with the air doubled in octaves by the congregation, produce no inharmonious effect; disagreeable sensations being only experienced when a lower part moves in fourths with the air, or stands at the interval of a seventh from it (as in the inversions of the chord of the ninth), or when the bass is less than an octave distant from the treble, and, perhaps, in a few other "un-invertible" harmonies (see the first line of No. 106, "Hymns Ancient and Modern"). I hope I may not be thought too bold when I hint that if the arrangers of the hymn tunes of the future will only make up their minds to avoid such questionable chords and progressions, the unmusical men of a congregation need no longer form a "disturbing element," potent enough to drive out of church the best of music, viz., vocal harmony.

Your obedient servant,

J. CONWAY BROWN,
Organist and Choirmaster, Parish Church,

TALLIS MEMORIAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to make an appeal in a good cause through your widely circulated columns? Thomas Tallis lies buried in the Parish Church of St. Alphege, Greenwich: his remains were deposited immediately in front of the altar rails. When the Church was destroyed, in 1710, all record of the interment was lost, and it has been thought desirable that a Brass should be placed in the wall, near his grave, as a memorial of the father of English church music. A small influential committee is being formed, the names of which will be duly published, together with any donations to the "Tallis Memorial Fund" which may be sent to me at the undesigned address.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

(Rev.) H. WALTER MILLER,

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

E. S. BENGOUGH.—A transcription should not be regarded merely as a pianoforte piece. The art of the arranger is to reproduce, as carefully as possible, the salient points of the original composition; and the art of the performer is so to manage his hands as to give due effect to the most important notes. Viewed in this light, we cannot agree with our correspondent that the specimens he encloses are "miscalled arrangements."

R. B.—We cannot give an opinion without seeing the manuscript.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

BILSTON.—The new organ built by Mr. W. Johnson, of Moxley, at a cost of £140, for the Baptist Chapel, Wood Street, was opened on Sunday the 25th January, by Mr. George Bond, of Wednesbury, who gave selections from the works of Handel, Haydn, and Mendelssohn, which were highly appreciated by the congregation. The instrument, although comparatively small, has wonderful capacity and variety; it contains two complete manuals, CC to G, pedal organ, CCC to C, &c. The sermons by the Rev. W. Best, B.A., were very appropriate; and the collections amounted to £24 8s. 6d.

BRADFORD.—On the 9th ult. the Choral Society gave a performance of Handel's Oratorio, Israel in Egypt. The principal artists were the Misses M. B. Crichton and Louisa Thorley, and Messrs. R. Sutcliffe, Thornton Wood, and Brandon, all of whom were highly effective in the music allotted them. The choruses were exceedingly well sung, and the orchestra, which comprised the full strength of the Society, was ably conducted by Mr. Broughton. Mr. Moorhouse officiated at the organ.

BLACKPOOL.—The members of the Vocal Society gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms, Talbot Road, on Monday evening, the 9th ult., before a large audience. The principal singers were Miss Clelland, Miss Webster, Mr. William Dumville (Manchester Cathedral), Mr. Carlos Lovatt (Manchester Cathedral), and Mr. William Lister. They were supported by a choir of 49 voices. Mr. N. Dumville (Manchester Cathedral) officiated as conductor, and the Messrs. J. Grindrod and J. G. Wrigley, F.C.O., presided at the pianoforte and the harmonium. Haydn's Oratorio, the Creation, occupied the first part of the programme, and the second was miscellaneous. The Oratorio was exceedingly well rendered, and the choruses were given with an unanimity and spirit that greatly increased its success.

BROMPTON (Kent).—A concert was given on the 10th ult., by the Chatham Sacred Harmonic Society. The programme consisted of selections from the Messiah and Judas Maccabeus, the vocalists, Mrs. Miles, Miss E. Colegate, Miss Huzzey, Miss Tyrrel, Miss Peeke, Mr. Wildish, and Mr. Rowe, giving satisfactory renderings of several of the well-known solos and duets. The choruses were sung with good effect, under the direction of Mr. Ward, and Master Chant presided at the harmonium. The Society proposes performing Mendelssohn's Athalie at the next concert.

CATFORD BRIDGE.—The Trinity Church Choral Society gave a very admirable performance of Sir Michael Costa's Eli, under the conductorship of Mr. Fred. Stevenson, on the 5th ult. The dramatic character of the work was well sustained throughout, Mr. R. J. Ward giving a very artistic reading of the Judge Eli. The solos and concerted portions were creditably rendered by members of the Choir. Mr. Fountain Meen and Mr. R. H. Bird very ably accompanied at the pianoforte and harmonium.

CIRENCESTER.—A successful concert was given in the Corn Hall, on Thursday evening, the 5th ult., by the members of the Choral Class, assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, Mr. T. Hunt, and Mr. O. Christian. The first part consisted of the Ancient Mariner, by Mr. J. F. Barnett, which was admirably performed. The choir, numbering over seventy voices, was under the conductorship of Mr. E. S. Cockton. Mr. Bradshaw presided at the harmonium.

CLAPTON.—On Thursday evening, the 29th January, a concert by the members of the Choir of St. James's Church, Clapton, ably assisted by some friends, was held at Brooke House. The boys of the choir sang several choruses in an admirable manner. Among the principal vocalists were Miss Lucy Newson, Miss White, Mrs. Batchelor, Mr. Haines, Mr. Anthony, Mr. Willis, and Mr. A. Grimsby Jopp, R.A.M. The pianoforte accompanists were Miss L. Newson, Miss Williamson, and Mr. W. G. Youens. Mr. W. Batchelor, Precentor of St. James's Church, and singing master to Brooke House, conducted.

COATBRIDGE.—The Choral Union gave a concert at the Temperance Hall on the 6th ult., which was attended by a large and appreciative audience. The first part of the programme consisted of Dr. Spark's Ode to Labour, and the second part of selections from the works of Handel, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, all of which were well given. The solos encored were "But Thou didst not leave," Messiah, and "But the Lord is mindful," St. Paul, which were creditably sung by members of the Society. The "Hallelujah Chorus" was also re-demanded. Mr. T. Dixon was an excellent conductor; Mr. Jack (of Glasgow) presided at the pianoforte, and Miss Fincher rendered valuable aid at the harmonium.

DEVIZES.—The Amateur Choral Society gave a miscellaneous concert at the Town Hall, on Thursday evening, the 12th ult. Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Cantata, May Day, was heard with great satisfaction by a large audience, and the solo for the May Queen richly merited the applause it received. The accompaniments were ably played by Mr. Sly (pianoforte), and Mr. W. Price (harmonium). Mr. J. T. Abraham conducted.

DRIFFIELD.—On Friday, the 6th ult., the members of the Harmonic Society, numbering about 100 performers, gave Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, in the Assembly Rooms, for the first time. The quartet of principal singers were Mrs. Poskitt (Hull), Miss Anyon, Mr. H. Thompson, and Mr. T. Dodds (of Leeds), who rendered their several parts to the entire satisfaction of a numerous audience. "He was despised," "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and "The trumpet shall sound" (the obbligato played to perfection by Mr. A. Robinson, of Hull), being especially admired. The choruses were exceedingly well sung, reflecting great credit upon the conductor, Mr. H. Blakeston, of the Royal Academy of Music. The orchestra was under the efficient leadership of Mr. E. Winter, of Beverley.

DUDLEY.—The members of the Choral Society gave a performance of the Messiah, on the 28th January, in the Public Hall; the surplus (about £14) being divided with the Town Dispensary. The principal artists engaged were Miss Woolley, Miss Blower, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Tuke, of Lichfield Cathedral. The first violin was taken by Mr. G. Roberts, the harmonium by Mr. D. Leyshon, and Mr. Eyland conducted. The band was very efficient, and the choruses went well, and to the great satisfaction of the audience.—The annual sermons on behalf of the Parish Church Choir were preached on Sunday the 1st ult., by the Rev. Dr. Thornton, to large congregations, morning and evening. Full choral services were given. The Venite was sung to Dr. Hayes, the Psalms to Monk and Turle, Te Deum, Fubilate, Sancius, and Kyrie, to Dr. Chipp, in A, all of which were admirably rendered, the Te Deum especially being given with marked effect. In the evening the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis (Hopkins's fine service in F) and the Anthem, by Sir John Goss, "Stand up and bless the Lord your God" were performed. Mr. G. H. Mainwaring, choirmaster, is to be congratulated on the manner in which the services were conducted, and the choir for its very efficient aid on the occasion. Mr. Harper presided at the organ with ability. The collections amounted to over £30.

EDINBURGH.—Professor Oakeley gave an Organ Performance in the Music Class Room, on Thursday the 5th ult. The programme was in part allusive to the recent Royal wedding, and contained a good many novelties, among them the beautiful Motet by Hauptmann. The Professor's improvisation on six Russian themes, the last the National air, was much appreciated; and the Gavotte, by Gluck, a souvenir of Dr. von Bülow's recent concert, was repeated in response to a warm encore.

HIGHAM FERRERS.—On Thursday evening the 29th January Mr W. J. Lamb gave his third concert, to a crowded audience. The principal artists were Madame Gilbert, Miss Estelle Emrick, Mr. Percy Rivers, Mr. F. H. Eales, and Mr. A. W. Warren. The programme consisted of a portion of the Oratorio Samson, and a selection of secular music. The choruses were sung by the members of Mr. Lamb's new Choral Society in a highly creditable manner, and the soloists acquitted themselves most satisfactorily. The band and chorus (numbering nearly one hundred performers) was under the efficient leadership of Mr. Henry Greenough, of Northampton. Professor Wildsmith presided at the Organ, and Mr. W. J. Lamb conducted with his usual ability.

HONG KONG.—The members of the Choral Society gave the first concert of the season on Tuesday evening, the 30th December, before a large audience. His Excellency the Governor, and Miss Kennedy, and a number of the leading residents being present. Some songs, duets, and part-songs, were exceedingly well sung, but the great feature of the evening was a Quintet of Reissiger's for two violins, viola, violoncello, and pianoforte, excellently performed by members of the Society. Mr. Sangster was an admirable conductor.

HORTON (near Windsor).—On Tuesday the 3rd ult. a concert, under the patronage of the Rector and Mrs. Foot, was given in the School Room, by the Colnbrook Glee Union. The vocalists were Miss Clara Fraser and Fraulein Grocker; cornet, Mr. Walter Attenborough; pianoforte, Mrs. Grinstead and Miss Lucas. The Glee Union sang several songs, glees, and part-songs, in a highly creditable manner, under the direction of Mr. Radcliffe. The whole of the performers kindly gave their services, the proceeds of the concert being for the benefit of the National Schools.

JARROW-ON-TYNE.—A special service was given at the Church of the Venerable Bede, on Wednesday evening, the 11th ult., on the occasion of opening a new organ. The instrument has been built by Messrs. Connacher and Co., of Huddersfield, from the specification of Mr. J. A. Waddington, A.R.A.M. (organist of the church), and is a very fine and powerful one. There was a crowded congregation, and the sermon was preached by the Venerable the Archdeacon of Lindisfarne. Mr. Waddington presided at the organ, and afforded a treat to all lovers of good music by his masterly performance.

KANDY (Ceylon).—The 25th anniversary of the priesthood of the Very Reverend Dr. Leo Cingolani, D.D., O.S.B., Pastor of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Anthony, was celebrated on the 15th January. A solemn thanksgiving service was held in the church, which was most beautifully decorated with evergreens and inscriptions. The Reverend Doctor officiated at Mass, assisted by Fathers Fernando and Boldoni, and Fathers Palla and Assawe, being deacon and sub-deacon respectively. A new Mass in C (composed expressly for the occasion, and dedicated to the Reverend Father, by Mr. N. Brohier, the organist) was given, the soloists being Messrs. Paul de Silva (treble), Aloysius Perera (alto), Peter de Silva (tenor), and the Rev. Father Pagnani (bass). The Mass, which was a difficult one, was sung very creditably, entirely by amateurs. After the Holy Celebration, Dr. Cingolani received the congratulations of his friends and the members of his congregation in the Boys' School Room, which was tastefully fitted up. Various gifts were also presented, among which were a silver tea set, a large silver plate with an inscription, a silver salver by the choir, and a purse containing £80, subscribed by the general community. On the day following was the Sunday School Festival of the same Church, which included the usual accompaniments of sports, tea and cake, and fireworks. Two dramas were also performed by the Sunday scholars, between the acts of which were sung a few operatic choruses. A Tarantella (composed by Father Palla, in honour of Dr. Cingolani) was much admired.

LEAMINGTON.—Mr. Frank Spinney gave his first Pianoforte Recital to a large audience, at the Royal Music Hall, on Thursday morning, the 29th January. The programme included Beethoven's Pastoral Sonata in D, Bennett's "Maid of Orleans," Hummel's Grand Capriccio in F, Mendelssohn's Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, &c. Mr. Spinney was assisted by Mr. Charles Fletcher (violinist), who played "Fantasie Caprice" by Vieuxtemps, "Prière de Moïse (Alard), and operatic selections.

LEEK.—The second concert of the Amateur Musical Society for this season was given in the Temperance Hall, on Monday evening, the 16th ult. There was a large audience. The first part of the programme consisted of W. H. Birch's Operetta, The Merry Men of Sherwood Forest. The soprano recitatives were entrusted to Mrs. Cooke (of the Lichfield and Newcastle-upon-Tyne concerts), who rendered them with precision. Mr. Disley, tenor, represented Robin Hood, and sang his music with correctness. The other recitatives and solos were sung by the Rev. F. W. Piercy, and Messrs. Beckett, Ritchie, and Warrington. The choir sang well throughout, the "Ave Maria" (unaccompanied), and the chorus, "We'll dance, we'll sing" being encored. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous. Mr. Powell conducted.

LIVERPOOL.—The Second Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society for 1874 was given on Tuesday, the 27th January: principal artists, Madlle. Titiens and Madame Sinico; solo pianoforte, Mr. Frederic H. Cowen. The overtures were The Isles of Fingal (Mendelssohn [The Siege of Corinth] (Rossini), and that to Le Lac des Fées (Auber). The sinfonia was the melodious and artistic No. 1, in C minor (F. H. Cowen), conducted by the composer, and received with genuine admiration and applause. The Pianoforte solo was Mendelssohn's "Rondo Brilliant." The two ladies gave several solos, and the great duet in Norma, all of which the audience wished to encore. The choral members sang well in the "Nightingale Chorus" from Solomon—the accompaniment to Madlle. Titiens's grand song in St. Cecilia (Benedict), and Morley's madrigal, "Fire! fire!"—On Saturday morning, the 7th ult., Dr. Hans von Bülow gave, to a crowded audience, at the smaller concert room of the St. George's Hall, one of his Pianoforte Recitals; in the course of which he played, to perfection, selections from the works of Mozart, Beethoven, J. S. Bach, Gluck, Handel, Mendelssohn, Chopin—Liszt—"Chant Polonais varié," and Liszt—"Venezia e Napoli."—The third concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 10th ult. Principal artists, Madame Lemmens and Mr. Vernon Rigby; solo violoncello, Signor Piatti. The great work of the evening was Sir Julius Benedict's MS. Symphony in G minor—second time of performance, but heard for the first time in Liverpool. It is a composition of great learning, and yet full of brilliancy—the instrumental effects being exceedingly fine. The orchestral rendering was full of spirit, both in this and in the overtures to Leonora No. 3 (Beethoven), Le Pré aux Clercs (Herold), and the splendid Entr'acte in Wagner's Lohengrin. The opening overture was that to Iphigenie en Aulide (Gluck). Signor Piatti played exquisitely. His solos were the Larghetto and Finale, Allegro vivo, from his own first Concerto; a Siciliana of Veracini; and a Gavotte by Geminiani.—On Tuesday, the 17th ult., the third performance of the present series, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, was given at the Philharmonic Hall. Executants: Herr Joachim (1st violin), Herr L. Ries (2nd violin), Mr. Zerbin (viola), Signor Piatti (violoncello); solo pianoforte, Madame Carreno-Sauret; vocalist, Madame Eleanor Armstrong; accompanist, Mr. Zerbin. The programme was as follows:—Part I. Quartett in E flat (No. 10, Op. 74), for strings (Beethoven), interpreted to perfection; Romance, "Sombre forêt" (Rossini); Ballade (solo pianoforte), in A flat, Op. 47 (Chopin), encored, and replaced by one of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte. Part II. Quartett in B minor (No. 3, Op. 3), for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello (Mendelssohn), finely played; Aria, "Qui la voce," Puritani (Bellini); Sonata in A, Op. 47, for pianoforte and violin (Beethoven); the so-called "Kreutzer Duett," which went admirably, and worthily completed a most charming concert.

LOWER NORWOOD.—The third of a series of suburban concerts, with readings, under the direction of Mr. Geo. Tolhurst, was given at the Institute on the 23rd ult. The various songs, part-songs, piano solos, &c., comprised in the programme were rendered in a manner which gave much satisfaction to a numerous audience.

LYTHAM.—On Wednesday evening the 4th ult. Mr. Lamb gave his second concert, in the Assembly Room. Selections from the Creation and the Messiah occupied the first part of the programme, and the second was miscellaneous. A feature in the concert was a new musical instrument, the invention and the manufacture of Mr. Lamb—a combined organ and harmonium—both instruments being within the same case and played by the same person. Miss A. T. Lamb performed the march from Athalie, which was well adapted to bring out the power and effects of the instrument. Mr. Lamb conducted.

MALVERN.—At the concert given on the 3rd ult., at the Winter Promenade, a selection from Mr. Philip Klitz's Cantata, The Viking, was given with complete success. The choral portions of this work, as well as the solos, are spoken of with much admiration by the local press; and there is no doubt that, but for the length of the programme (the first part of which was devoted to a performance of Mr. Birch's Operetta, Robin Hood) many of the pieces would have been remanded.

NEWBURY.—The special services connected with the opening of the new organ at St. John's Church took place on Tuesday, the 27th January. The anthem "Blessed be Thou, Lord God of Israel" (Kent), was exceedingly well rendered (reflecting great credit on the choir-master, Mr. Hussey), as were also the hymns. After the morning and evening services Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, of Lewisham, who had presided at the organ, performed a selection of music, showing off the capabilities of the instrument to the greatest advantage. The collections during the day were over £45.

OXFORD.—Sir Frederick Ouseley's Oratorio, Hagar, was performed for the first time in Oxford on Tuesday, the 17th ult., in the Sheldonian Theatre, by the Oxford Philharmonic Society. The principal vocalists were Miss Katherine Poyntz, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Hallowell. Mr. Taylor conducted, and the performance was a great success.

FAISLEY.—On Thursday evening, the 12th ult., the members of the Tonic-Sol-fa Institute gave a concert in St. George's Established Church, before a large audience. The principal artists were—Madame Pauline Rita (soprano), Madame Demerit Lablache (contralto), Mr. J. H. Pearson (tenor), Signor Celli (bass), Mr. Radcliff (autist), Mr. Hamilton Clarke (pianist), and Mr. W. H. Cole, leader of the orchestra. The first part of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, which was well performed; and the second of selections from The Prodigal Son, by Arthur S. Sullivan. The concert concluded with Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, which was highly appreciated. Mr. J. A. Brown conducted.

PARSONSTOWN (King's County, Ireland).—A Musical Society has recently been formed amongst the élite of the neighbourhood, with Mr. Matthew Arnold as conductor. The programme for the last meeting, held at Chesterfield on the 12th ult., was very well selected. The musical pupils of Chesterfield School have just presented to Mr. Arnold an elegant edition of Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas as a small token of their appreciation of his kindness to them.

PECKHAM.—The Choral Society gave the first annual concert of the present season at St. Mary's College, on Thursday, the 19th ult., when J. F. Barnett's Ancient Mariner was performed before an audience of between 400 and 500. The soloists were Miss Marchant (pupil of the conductor), Miss Serjeant, Mr. C. J. Circus, and Mr. Henry Pope (of the Crystal Palace), who sang the parts allotted to them in a very satisfactory manner. Mr. Pope was encoered for his rendering of the Recit. and Aria "O happy living things." The choruses were steadily sung by the members, numbering about 70, under the conductorship of Mr. Ralph Horner. Mr. W. H. Harper (pianist to the Society) accompanied the choruses, and Mr. Horner the solo parts; the latter also played Gottschalk's "The last hope." At the next concert Sir Sterndale Bennett's May Queen is to be performed.

ROCHESTER.—The second subscription concert for the present season of the Rochester, Strood, and Chatham Choral Society was given in the New Corn Exchange on the 9th ult. There was a band and chorus of about 200 performers, the Rev. W. H. Nutter, M.A., minor canon of the Cathedral, conducting. The programme was miscellaneous, comprising selections from Guillaume Tell, Masaniello, &c. The principal vocalists were Madame Clara Suter and Mr. Henry Guy, both of whom were very successful. The violin playing of Mr. Charles Fletcher and Mons. C. Jacquinot was much admired. Beethoven's Choral Fantasia (Op. 80), was well rendered, the pianoforte solo being played by Miss Kappey, of Chatham. There was a large attendance, and the concert was a complete success.

ROSS.—Mr. J. Squire gave a lecture on "Violins and Violinists" at the Corn Exchange, on Thursday, the 12th ult. The object of the lecture was to trace the history of the violin from its earliest known introduction to the present time, and to compare by practical illustration the compositions of the founders of the school of violinists with those of a later period. There was much to interest and instruct the hearers, and the illustrations were excellently performed by Mr. and Mrs. Squire.

RUNCORN.—On Tuesday, the 17th ult., the Runcorn Madrigal Club gave a concert in the National Infants' School. Romberg's Lay of the Bell formed the first part, the second part being miscellaneous, and comprising songs, part-songs, pianoforte duets, &c. The solos were sustained by members of the Club, assisted by the Rev. G. Willett, of Little Leigh, in a very satisfactory manner; and the choruses were generally successful. Miss Barclay accompanied, and the Rev. W. Statham conducted.

SCARBOROUGH.—The annual concert of the Amateur Vocal and Instrumental Society was given at the Prince of Wales's Hotel on Monday evening, the 16th ult. Gounod's Messe Solennelle, and Smart's King René's Daughter were performed, with Dr. Sloman, the choir-master of the Society, as conductor. The audience was much gratified at the success of the concert, and at the opportunity of hearing two of the best works of these celebrated composers.

SHEFFIELD.—On the 31st January commenced a series of Saturday Evening Concerts, promoted by Mr. C. Harvey, whose endeavour to make them of a popular character by a scale of cheap admission is highly deserving of encouragement. On the 2nd ult., Mr. J. Peck gave an excellent concert, on which occasion Dr. Spark, of Leeds, played four solos on the organ, and the pieces selected gave ample opportunity for the display of his abilities; and the performances of Mr. J. Peck, whose talent as a violinist is of the highest order, gave much satisfaction, his playing of Spohr's Barcarole in G, especially, eliciting the warmest applause. Madame Hall and Signor Celli, in the vocal music, materially assisted in promoting the success of the entertainment. On the following evening the second of Mr. C. Harvey's subscription concerts was attended by a very large assembly. The artists were Miss Blanche Cole and Mr. Santley, as vocalists, and Messrs. J. Carrodus, J. B. Zerbini, J. Zerbini, and W. Pettit as instrumentalists. The programme was one of a highly interesting and artistic character. The violin playing of Mr. Carrodus elicited the most enthusiastic applause. Miss Cole sang "Tell me, my heart," and other songs, with great ability. The singing of Mr. Santley received a perfect ovation, Hatton's song, "To Anthea," and "The Stirrup Cup" being encoered; but the greatest effect was created in Gounod's "Nazareth," Mr. J. B. Zerbini officiated as accompanist.

SLIGO.—A concert in aid of the poor of Sligo, was given in the Town Hall on Wednesday, the 11th ult., by a number of ladies and gentlemen. The programme was miscellaneous, and contained several favourite songs, part-songs, pianoforte solos, and duets, all of which were highly appreciated by a very large audience.

STAFFORD.—On Tuesday, the 10th ult., the choir of Christ Church assembled in the National School adjoining the Church, for the purpose of presenting the organist, Mr. W. A. Marson, with a very handsome silver snuff box, as a token of their kind feelings towards him. The presentation was made by the Vicar, the Rev. H. Knight Eaton, who spoke in very high terms of Mr. Marson's kind and valuable services.—On Monday, the 16th ult., Mr. W. A. Marson, organist of Christ Church, gave his third concert, in the new Rowley Street School, on behalf of the School Fund, before a large audience. The principal performers were Miss Lucy Marson, Mrs. Averill, Miss Bennett, the Misses Lea, and Miss Bridgwood; Messrs. Chas. Smith, Goddard, Bates, Taylor, Yates, Ebbert, and Henry Deakin. Mr. E. Shargool, organist of St. Mary's, presided at the pianoforte. The sum of £17 was realized, which, with the profits of the two previous concerts, amounting to £35, was handed over to the vicar of Christ Church.

STONEHOUSE (Gloucestershire).—On Thursday, the 12th ult., the Stonehouse Choral Class gave a performance of the first part of Mendelssohn's St. Paul, and a selection of songs, part-songs, &c., under the conductorship of Mr. Brandon. The concert was very successful. With the exception of Mr. Kearton and Mr. Brandon, the soloists were all members of the class.

STRATFORD.—The West Ham Philharmonic Society gave the second concert of the sixth season on Monday, the 16th ult., in the Town Hall. Mr. J. S. Bates conducted, and Mr. F. C. Kitson accompanied. The whole of the music was performed by members of the Society. The principal items in the programme were two motetts; Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and Gounod's "By Babylon's Wave," both exceedingly well rendered. The first part of the programme terminated with Beethoven's "Hallelujah Chorus." Great credit is due to those members who undertook solo parts. The Misses Jones rendered invaluable assistance, and joined in a trio by Smart, entitled "The Sunbeam." Mr. Atherton Latta gave a very good rendering of Pinsuti's dramatic song "The Raft," and was recalled. There was some very good pianoforte playing by Miss Hattie Rivett, a youthful pupil of Mr. Alfred Carder. Mr. Clutterbuck contributed a solo on the English concertina (accompanied on the piano by Mr. Kitson), and was enthusiastically encoered. The programme closed with the Gipsy Chorus from Preciosa, which had to be repeated.

TORONTO.—The Philharmonic Society gave two performances of the Messiah, in the Music Hall, on the 5th and 6th of January, before appreciative audiences. The solos were exceedingly well sung by Mrs. Grassick, Miss Corlett, Mr. W. H. Stanley, and Mr. Marriott. The choir showed wonderful improvement in regard to precision, unanimity of phrasing, and attention to general expression; reflecting the greatest credit on the conductor, Mr. Torrington. The orchestra was very efficient. Mr. A. Marshall led; Mr. Collins presided at the organ, and Mr. Derville played the trumpet obbligato in "The trumpet shall sound."

WALTHAMSTOW.—A concert was given in the Public Hall, on Tuesday, the 10th ult., in aid of the organ and choir funds of All Saints', Leyton. An attractive programme of sacred and secular music was well rendered by a choir of about 50 ladies and gentlemen, under the direction of Mr. G. Booker, choir-master of the Church. Features of the evening were Miss C. Hoar's tasteful rendering of "O rest in the Lord," the duet from Barnby's Rebekah, "O flower of the verdant lea," capitolly sung by Mrs. Shenstone and Mr. C. W. Hoar, and Mr. J. R. Norman's violoncello solo, "Souvenir d'Irlande." Mr. C. E. Parslee was highly successful in "The Warrior bold" (encoered) and "Give me the man of honest heart," as was also Mr. R. C. Richardson in "Just as of old," by Mr. W. H. Cummings. Mr. Alfred Gore, organist of St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate, contributed a piano solo, and rendered efficient aid as accompanist, and Mr. W. J. Millson, honorary organist of All Saints', presided at the harmonium. The concert was well attended by an appreciative audience.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL (Lancashire).—A very successful concert was given on Friday evening, the 30th January, in the Congregational Church, Walton Park, by the members of the Highfield Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. B. Carmichael. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from the works of Haydn, Mozart, and Handel; and the second of part-songs, &c. The soloists were Mesdames Clay, Concannon, Chapman, and Carmichael, and Messrs. C. A. and D. Webster. The accompanists were Miss Bretton, Mrs. Clay, and Mr. C. Wesley Evans.

WESTBURY (Wilts).—The members of the Westbury and Bratton Singing Classes gave a concert in the Public Hall, on Tuesday, the 3rd ult. The programme was miscellaneous, consisting of glees, trios, songs, and vocal and instrumental duets, all of which were well rendered, reflecting great credit upon the conductor, Mr. Leach, organist of the Parish Church. Mr. T. Grant presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. C. Grant at the harmonium. The Overture to Rossini's Tancrède, the "Volunteers' March" (Lemmens), and a very effective pianoforte solo were well played by Messrs. Leach, T. Grant, C. Grant, and Joyce, and warmly applauded.

WHITTINGTON MOOR.—On Monday evening, the 16th ult., a testimonial, consisting of a gold Albert chain and ring, was presented to Mr. T. Cooper, of the Chesterfield Parish Church Choir. After the presentation, a musical entertainment, under the patronage of the Mayor of Chesterfield, was given, the programme consisting of songs, duets, &c., executed by several ladies and gentlemen of the neighbourhood.

WINDSOR.—The second concert of the present season, of the Windsor and Eton Choral Society, took place at St. Mark's School on Monday evening, the 16th ult., Handel's Oratorio Samson being selected for the occasion. The singing of Miss Katherine Poyntz, Madame Poole, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Christian, and Mr. Briggs, left but little to be desired. The trumpet playing of Mr. T. Harper was, as usual, perfection. Sir George Elvey conducted with his usual ability, and the accompaniments were well rendered by the band of the Orchestral Society, led by Mr. Gunness, of her Majesty's Private Band. The choruses, which had the assistance of several ladies of the Amateur Madrigal Society, reflected much credit upon the Society. Her Royal Highness Princess Christian (accompanied by the Hon. and Rev. the Dean of Windsor and Mrs. Wellesley) honoured the concert with her presence.

WORCESTER.—The Musical Society gave the third concert of the season, on Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., at the Music Hall. The programme was well selected, including the music to Mendelssohn's unfinished Opera Loreley, selections from Horsley's unfinished Cantata Euterpe, a "Bridal Chorus," by Cowen; and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," the two latter in honour of the Duke of Edinburgh's marriage. Mrs. A. J. Caldicott sang the solos in Loreley excellently, and the choruses were given with great precision. Miss Webb was very effective in the contralto solo from Euterpe. Mr. A. R. Quarterman presided at the organ, and Mr. A. J. Caldicott conducted.

YORK.—A very successful concert took place on Wednesday evening, the 28th January, at the Corn Exchange, in aid of the parochial charities of All Saints' and St. Michael's. The overture to Guy Mannering, and the charming Entr'acte from Schubert's Rosamunde, and Auber's overture, Zanetta, were efficiently executed by a select band of amateurs. The vocal music was well rendered by Miss E. Groves, Miss Kate Morley, Dr. Needham, and Mr. H. Preston. A duet of Mendelssohn's, for pianoforte and violoncello, was admirably played by Miss F. Morley and Mr. J. Groves, and Mr. Acomb gave an excellent performance of De Beriot's Violin Concerto. The room was well filled by an appreciative audience.—The third of the Winter Concerts was given on Tuesday evening, the 3rd ult., under the management of Mr. Wilson. The programme contained the overtures to 400 pages of New Music by eminent Composers, for all the great Festivals, Saints' Days, and Holy Seasons of the Church. Bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.; Specimen copy for 6s. Nearly 1,000 Subscription copies have been sent out, and the work is highly praised by Professors and Amateurs. The Daily Telegraph writes, "The work shows a careful regard for general usefulness, while the taste and skill displayed call for generous recognition; and it is unquestionable that Dr. Fowle has supplied our Parish Churches with Anthem Music generally good in itself, and always adapted to their needs." A leading Organist at Liverpool writes, "Your volume surprises me, and I cannot conceive how you could produce the work at such a price." The Anthem by Sir R. Stewart, and one of your own, are alone worth double the price of the book. Your 'Daughters of Jerusalem' for Palm Sunday is a gem." Another says, "Choirs who do not possess your book do not know what they lose. As Anthems it ought to have as great a sale as Hymns Ancient and Modern as Hymns. It is a marvel of excellence and cheapness." Other opinions would fill two pages of the Musical Times. All applications to be made to Dr. Lloyd Fowle, 48, Hunter-street, London, W.C. The Contents page sent post free.

ANTHEMS SPECIAL AND GENERAL.

ANTHEMS SPECIAL AND GENERAL. The Anthem for Lent, Palm Sunday, and two for Easter Day (four Anthems), sent post free for 15 penny stamps. Address Dr. Fowle, 48, Hunter-street, London, W.C.

WHAT WILL THIS COMPOSITION COST TO PUBLISH? This often-asked question will be answered by Dr. FOWLE, who has had nearly twenty years' experience in producing most successful works. Manuscripts revised and corrected. Address Dr. Fowle, 48, Hunter-street, London, W.C.

EASTER ANTHEM.

"THE LORD IS MY STRENGTH." (Short, easy, and effective.) Composed by ALBERT LOWE. Octavo, 3d.

"Mr. Lowe writes with the gravity and earnestness of a true composer for the Church. This little Anthem is well adapted to meet the wants of small choirs, and cannot fail of acceptance when looked at from the higher ground of religious edification. Moreover, it shows a thoroughly musicianly spirit, and that rare gift, the ars est celare artem."—Sunday Times.

"This Anthem amply fulfils the announcement on the title-page; it is 'short' and 'easy'—the subjects moreover, being both melodious and well harmonised. The unexpected chord of B flat, after the lingering of the voices upon D, is a point worthy of attention; and the manner in which the harmonies flow towards the final close is well deserving of commendation. The Anthem will, we think, be found extremely useful."—Musical Times.

"Mr. Lowe has contributed to Church congregations and Choral Societies a 'short, easy, and full' Anthem, which is calculated to afford much satisfaction, and to be largely in request. The subject is treated in a truly devotional spirit, and with musicianly skill, and it is well harmonised."—News of the World.

"An excellent Anthem."—The Church Times.

"Good Sacred Songs are certainly rarely to be met with; but we are able confidently to recommend each of the above to every true musician. The spirit of the familiar words of the Psalms is admirably caught and sustained in these compositions. In all, the musician will find modulations and harmonies accurately arranged, airs remarkable for their sympathy with the words, and accompaniments containing passages of considerable and, in some places, of exceptional beauty and elegance. We turn to these songs with a degree of pleasure, when we remember the quality of many of the sacred airs of the present day, some of which can boast their illuminated title-page as their chief or only charm."—Church Bells, March 29th, 1873.

"Mr. Bennett has given a sacred character to his music in excellent sympathy with the words he has selected; and we cannot too much commend the musicianlike manner in which the whole of the accompaniments are written."—Musical Times, Oct. 1st, 1871.

SCHUMANN'S SONGS,

NATALIA MACFARREN,

In One Volume, Folio size, Cloth, Gilt, 10s. 6d. or Singly.

PREFACE.

The present collection is a first instalment of the Songs of Schumann in the order of their production; as his vocal works are extremely voluminous, it does not seem desirable to re-publish all his songs, but wherever there is a connecting link between the different numbers of an Opus, as in the nine Songs of Op. 24, and the 26 of Op. 25, they will all be given. None of the Narrative Songs will be included in this series.

Four of the Songs will be found transposed: Nos. 12 and 16, because the publishers have already two editions of them in the original keys; and Nos. 19 and 29, because they lie beyond the range of voice generally practicable.

In adapting the original English words of those Songs, which Schumann set to translations, the music has been made the paramount consideration, and words have been altered to suit the musical text when necessary; thus Nos. 13 and 31 are called "Some one," and "No one," since the redundant syllable in Somebody and Nobody disfigures the musical phrase. Moreover, considerable alterations had to be made in the Songs of Burns, without reference to the declamation.

The present edition absolutely follows the text of the Composer, rejecting some supposed emendations which appear in several editions; a few slight changes in the distribution of syllables to notes have been made to accommodate the English text, and a very few evident oversights in the original editions have been amended with the sanction of Madame Schumann.

(REGISTERED.)

The following Testimonial from Boyton Smith, Esq., in reference to
No. 3 of this model, is addressed to all who desire the most satisfactory instrument of the Harmonium class ever yet offered to the public:—

"Dear Sir,

"The Harmonium I had of you some time since is

"The most satisfactory instrument of the class I ever had.

"The mechanical arrangement

"Is excellent, and has never been out of order.

"While from the

"Agreeable quality and variety of its tone, it is ever a pleasure to play upon it.

"I have never tired of it, as I have of other kinds; and it is

"Its capability of producing continued new effects that renders
it truly as you style it

"THE PROFESSOR'S HARMONIUM."

"My Violoncello stop is the wonder of every one,

"So close is the resemblance.

"Yours faithfully,
"BOYTON SMITH.

ON MODES AND TONES.

BY GEORGE ATKINS.

INTRODUCTION.

THE subjects of this sketch have been badly treated through ignorance of the Ancient Greek Musical System. This ignorance has varied in degree from the decline of the ancient Greek nation to the present time. Soon after the Reformation, among other learned men, Marcus Meibomius appeared with his edition of the seven Greek authors who had written on the subject of music. It was published at Amsterdam, in 1652. One of this seven, Alypius, gives the ancient Greek alphabetical notation. Hawkins has noticed this as a curiosity, and Burney has endeavoured to explain it, but has failed through the want of the key to the principle upon which it is founded. Having in 1868 discovered this key, and constructed one complete diagram of the whole, that diagram soon helped to explain many things that were before mysterious and contradictory; and now gives that confidence with which this sketch is written.

MODES AND TONES.

Power is a determined and fixed order of scale.

Position is actual concert pitch.

A key note is a note of Power, but its concert pitch will depend on its position in the standard scale of musical sounds.

A knowledge of these ancient Greek musical terms of Power and Position is a preliminary necessity. The Tonic Sol-fa system will help us to this knowledge.

Let the following three scales stand for three Powers; all similar in form.

No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.
Do	Do	Do
Si	Si	Si
La	La	La
Sol	Sol	Sol
Fa	Fa	Fa
Mi	Mi	Mi
Re	Re	Re
Do	Do	Do

Place these three Powers in Position, so that there may, between each, be a whole tone of difference in pitch in their positions, thus—

No. 1.	No. 2.	No. 3.
		Do
		Si
	Do	La
	Si
Do	La	Sol
Si
La	Sol	Fa
		Mi
Sol	Fa	Re
Fa	Mi
Mi	Re	Do
Re	Do
Do

If the standard of concert pitch be in No. 1 Power, then that scale will be Do in Power, and Do in Position; Power and Position will coincide in that scale. And No. 2 Power will be Do in power, but Re in Position. And No. 3 Power will be Do in Power, but Mi in position.

But if the standard of concert pitch be in No. 2 Power, instead of No. 1 Power, then No. 2 scale will be Do in Power, and Do in Position; Power and Position will coincide in that scale. And No. 1 Power will be Do in Power, but Si in Position. And No. 3 Power will be Do in Power, but Re in Position.

A repetition of the two cases put is here given, with the notes of Position placed by the side of the notes of Power, to show the actual sounds.

The Power or scale of Do is a section taken from out of the Power or scale of the ancient Greeks, which extended from La below Do, to the second La above; and embraced a compass of two octaves, thus:

NOTE.—Small b used to mark the sound of B flat. It is the parent of the B. The ♯ is the altered form of h the remnant of a capital B mutilated to distinguish it from B, the octave below. ♭ is made use of to express B flat; and ♮ to express B natural.

La (A) is the root of our alphabetical notation of music. As a scale in its primitive simplicity, La is now practically abandoned; Do (C) being the only scale used without having \flat , \sharp or \natural applied to its notes.

The Power or scale of the Tonic Sol-fa system is based on Do, and has a compass of one octave. That of the ancient Greeks is based on La, and has a compass of two octaves.

The ancient Greeks possessed 15 modes. The following are the 7 Powers of the 7 principal modes, (taken out of the 15) all being similar in form.

(For Illustration see next column.)

Place these seven Powers in Position, so that there may be a whole tone of difference in pitch between the 1st and 2nd, the 2nd and 3rd, the 4th and 5th, and the 5th and 6th; and a semitone between the 3rd and 4th, and the 6th and 7th. This is the ancient Greek arrangement—place the notes of Position by the side of the notes of Power, to show the actual sounds.

Dr. Wallis, in editing Ptolemy, mistook the ancient rule of placing these seven principal modes, as will be seen by comparing the following with the preceding.

Sig. and key notes.

He mistook the correct Positions of the Hypo-Lydian and Lydian, and placed each of them a semi-tone too low.

NOTE.—The standard of concert pitch in the Dorian, as favoured by Ptolemy, shows that rise in concert pitch was no novelty in his day. His attempt to fix the standard in the Dorian failed. The Hypo-Dorian either regained or never lost it entirely. It holds the standard of concert pitch now.

Let the following stand for the ancient Greek tone, or instrument of seven chords, or strings, tuned to concert pitch. The standard of concert pitch being in the Hypo-Dorian.

THE TONE OF SEVEN CHORDS OR STRINGS.

The seven notes of this tone can be so adjusted that they will be available for playing, or giving every sound, in each of the seven species of octave, called in later times, tones; belonging to the seven principal modes of the ancient Greeks.

MUSICAL NEIGHBOURS.

BY HENRY C. LUNN.

WITH a sympathetic feeling for musical artists, let me strenuously advise them, in selecting a house, to choose a detached villa, with a sufficient amount of private garden-ground on each side to prevent the possibility of any human habitation being afterwards built in too close proximity. Or, if this be impossible, either from the situation being too retired for a professional man, or (what is extremely probable) the rent being too high, I would recommend a "semi-detached" house—providing that the rooms for musical study and practice can be on the "detached" side. It is true that this may appear somewhat unsociable, but then musical men are unsociable; and if you must be looked upon as an ogre, it is as well to earn your character honestly. The fact is that although music of all arts should produce the most harmonious relations, I scarcely know anything which gives rise to such angry feeling—I mean when the artistic powers of an entire family are solely displayed through the wall. For myself, I candidly confess that the commencement of the scale of C, with both hands, in that stately manner which too evidently showed a steadiness of purpose—one beautiful morning soon after I had taken possession of my house—although no doubt proving that the musical studies of my next-door neighbour were proceeding in the right direction, sounded to me like the death-knell of all the hopes of quiet which I had been long anticipating. And then imagine the horror to which I was afterwards doomed; the necessity I felt under of listening to every note—of realising exactly when the thump of the thumb upon the key would come—of following with the utmost interest each fresh attempt to gain equality—of actually imagining (in a sort of waking night-mare state) that I was playing the scale myself, and was to be decapitated by the public executioner if the tone were not perfectly even to the end. A slight pause restored me to consciousness; but the respite was brief—my tormentor was off again, and I need scarcely say carried me through the tortures of that minor scale which even more mature artists seem to have left in the unsettled form which now struck upon my ear. Sometimes the sixth was major, sometimes minor, and as for the seventh, it was so extremely vague that it became a relief when I didn't hear it at all. When this occurred, however, I am bound to confess that a very audible tap was administered—probably given by the teacher—which I sincerely trust (for I like to forgive my enemies) was not on the knuckles of the player. But now came the "Piece"—the relaxation after study—Fantasia on airs from that sweet Opera "Lucrezia Borgia." I attended minutely to every note, criticised every passage, and at last fancied that I was conducting it with a baton, having entered into a compact with the performer that I would cough very loudly whenever a difficult part occurred, so that her defects in execution should pass unnoticed. It may be said that I might have moved from the spot; but, strangely enough, I felt incapable of motion, fascinated, mesmerised if you will; but at all events, like the Wedding Guest in Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner," bound to listen, and even to smile approval when I was most horrified. There are degrees in misery; and I am constrained to say that although the execution of the five-finger Exercises and light pieces of the modern school caused me infinite torture, it was nothing compared to what I suffered on the "classical" mornings. I could bear to hear imperfect "Cascades," half stagnant "Flowing rivers" or "Nightingale's Trills," such as never issued from the throat of the most dyspeptic bird; but to be compelled to listen to the grand works of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Weber and some of the older composers travestied and tortured in execution, and utterly misapprehended even by the person (whoever he or she might be) appointed to teach them, was beyond human endurance, and I take credit to myself for not knocking frantically on the wall and demanding instant satisfaction. I have often read in romantic stories that a man has become enamoured of a lady he has never beheld, by seeing the shadow of a beautiful form on the blind of an opposite window, or of catching a glimpse of an exquisitely chiselled arm arranging the flower-pots on a window-sill, and has ardently longed for a meeting with his unknown charmer that he might forthwith declare his love. Now with me the case was reversed, for I as anxiously yearned for an opportunity to declare my hatred: I wanted, by a withering look, to let my fair one (whom I as yet knew but by ear) see that she was gradually deteriorating the best feelings of my nature, and to convince her that I was determined not to put up with it quietly. With this resolve I was always rushing out whenever anybody issued from next door. I scowled (as I afterwards found) at two intimate and unoffending friends of the family, at both the nurserymaids, at a dressmaker, who had just brought home a new dress for my persecutor, and when at last I found (on enquiry) that I had encountered the right person, my "withering look" was met by a complacent smile which seemed to say "you are a fellow worker in the same art, and I am delighted to meet with you."

There is an old proverb which tells us that "what cannot be cured must be endured;" but in this case would it not be possible to so organise the endurance of the evil as, in some degree at least, to lessen its effects? Could not certain Streets, for instance, be kept strictly for a specific style of music? We might have a light locality, a classical locality, and a sacred locality, and house-agents might inform their customers of the kind of music which they would hear every morning through the wall. Thus, a person fond of "pretty pieces," might become acquainted with all the latest productions of that school of writing within a short time of his taking possession of a house. An artist of course would avoid the "classical" Street, and indeed all other musical Streets, if he could (as I have already advised him to do) take a perfectly detached house; but there are many individuals who think it fashionable to be classical, and yet who do not know good from bad; and they may be lulled to slumber in an arm-chair at home as comfortably as if they were at the "Monday Popular Concerts," and without the fear of being suddenly awakened by some artistic friend at their elbow. Then a sacred Street should be inhabited solely by "serious families," who might, by the arrangement I propose, rest assured that no worldly operatic airs or frivolous ball-room strains should interfere with the solemnity of their daily life. It is true that their serenity might be occasionally disturbed by doubt as to whether the extremely secular music they are forced to listen to had been originally written to sacred words; but by the terms of their lease, they should be empowered to enquire into the matter, and even compel their neighbours to furnish them with an authentic history of the compositions performed. Thus "wall-music" might be properly systematised, and both players and listeners be made happy.

It may perhaps be urged as an argument against the practical working of these suggestions that persons would not like this interference with their right of performing various styles of music; but when was a reform proposed which was not immediately met by a host of conservative objections? Why should ladies refuse to have their music chosen for them when they submit without murmuring to adopt the latest fashion in dress? Do they not meekly bow to a hat, like the Swiss peasantry at the bidding of the tyrant Gesler, in the market-place, and would not a female Tell, who dared to defy such a mandate be treated with contempt and scorn? Do they not wear small bonnets and large bonnets, high dresses and low dresses, and are not these dresses one year inflated like balloons and the next hanging down in limp folds at the side? Surely those who obey these capricious edicts of fashion for no possible reason would willingly consent to abide by laws expressly made for the benefit of their fellow creatures; and, with a full conviction, therefore, of the success of my experiment, I boldly put it forth with no hope of reward save the consciousness of having helped to alleviate human suffering.

At length we find that the lessees of our two Opera Houses are beginning to discover that it is safer to make no rash promises at the commencement of a season, but simply to state what vocalists they have engaged, and to give a list of Operas from which a selection will be made for performance. We have already mentioned two new singers announced by Mr. Mapleson, and have now to add the names of Signori Paladini and Ramini (tenori), Signor De Reschi and Galassi (baritoni), and Signori Perkin and Costa and Herr Behrens (bassi). Mr. Gye cannot quite get rid of the flowery style of his former prospectuses, but contents himself with dwelling upon the "splendid tokens" and "substantial marks" of the favour of the Imperial Family at St. Petersburg and Moscow, which have been bestowed upon Madame Adelina Patti and Madlle. Marimon, the latter vocalist having this year transferred her services to the Royal Italian Opera. First appearances will be made by Mesdiles. Ghiotti, Clemence, Calasch, and Diani, Signori Bolis, Sabater, and Piazza, and M. Blume, the four last-named being included in the list of tenors. We are glad to find that Sir Michael Costa retains his post of conductor at Her Majesty's Opera, and equally sorry that Signori Vianesi and Bevigiani are to divide this responsible office at the Royal Italian Opera. As will be found in another column, Mr. Mapleson commenced his season on the 17th ult., and Mr. Gye's opening night was the 31st ult., too late for a notice in our present number.

It would be a "cruel kindness" to say, that at the "Practice Rehearsal" of the members of the "British Musical and Dramatic Institute," which we attended on the 24th February, we could see sufficient indication of the studies of the pupils being directed in the right manner. We speak only of the musical department; for amongst the dramatic recitations, there were some which reflected much credit upon the method pursued in the establishment by those who have charge of this branch of study. But it became painful to listen to songs rendered by pupils who should have been practising the sustained note and solfeggi, or to hear a classical pianoforte work attempted by one who had not mastered an even scale. The Secretary told us that all they wanted was a larger house, with a more extensive concert-room for the exhibition of the students; but it strikes us that the premises are quite large enough for the display of all the pupils who are competent to appear. We can perfectly understand that a good dramatic school might grow from this Institution; but if vocal and instrumental pupils are to be fitted for the concert-room, they must not be deluded into the belief that a round of applause from their friends is any indication of artistic progress.

IN noticing the Reid Festival at Edinburgh in our last number, we spoke of Mr. Charles Hallé's performance of Litolff's "Concerto Symphony," and expressed a hope that it would shortly have a hearing in London. We now find that it is the same work which was played with such brilliant success by Mr. Willem Coenen at the "Exhibition Concerts," and also at M. Rivière's concerts at Covent Garden last season. The excellent rendering of the composition by Mr. Coenen is too fresh upon our memory to have prevented our falling into this error, had not the name—"Concerto Symphony"—led us to believe that it was an unknown work here. We may also say that it was announced to be performed by Mr. Oscar Beringer at the Crystal Palace concert, on the 28th ult.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE Symphony, by Mr. Ebenezer Prout, given for the first time, on the 28th February, achieved a success, which proves that there is always an audience ready to appreciate and acknowledge worth, wherever it may be found; and much credit is due to Mr. Manns, whose love for the music of his own countrymen is well known, for affording a hearing to a work of such importance by an Englishman. Upon so carefully planned a composition as Mr. Prout's Symphony it would be unjust, on a single hearing, to say more than that it impresses us with a conviction that it is the production of a profound thinker upon his art, for every movement has a defined plan; the subjects are melodious, and skilfully treated; and the instrumentation shows an intimate knowledge of orchestral effect. The début of Miss Emma Barnett, who played Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in G, was another marked feature in the concert, her performance being remarkable throughout for intelligence, fluency of execution, and rhythmical accuracy. The two cadences, written by her brother, Mr. J. F. Barnett, were excellently played, and elicited a well-deserved burst of approbation. At the following concert Beethoven's fine music to "Egmont" was given, and received with enthusiasm. Brahms's variations, for the orchestra, on a theme by Haydn, which was also performed, is a remarkable work, the originality and variety of the composition, and the masterly instrumentation of each variation, keeping the attention of the hearers alive to the last note. It was loudly applauded, and will, we trust, frequently have a place in these excellent concerts. Of Schubert's Overture, which was played, on the 14th ult., with all the stringed instruments of the orchestra, and the wind instruments doubled, we prefer not to speak, as we have on more than one occasion freely expressed our opinion upon this desecration of a fine work. Mr. Sullivan's Overture to "The Sapphire Necklace" opened the concert, on the 21st ult., with much spirit; and after the hackneyed "Qui la voce," well sung by Madame Sinico, came Mendelssohn's ever-welcome violin concerto, which was played as only Herr Joachim can play it. The only absolute novelty in the programme was the "Song of Destiny" (Schicksalslied), for chorus and orchestra, by Brahms, which shared the fate of most novelties, in being indifferently performed, the first movement demanding, on the part of the chorus, an amount of refinement, which it hardly received at the hands of the Crystal Palace choir. Without entering into an analysis of its merits, we may mention that it was recognised by its hearers as a work of genius of the highest order, and in this opinion we cordially agree. The verdict which had been given by nearly the whole of musical Germany upon the composition was on this occasion unanimously endorsed by perhaps the most critical audience ever assembled at Sydenham; and Herr Brahms may reckon at least upon a cordial reception being accorded to any future work from his pen. The English translation of the text is by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, M.A. Beethoven's Symphony (No. 4, in B flat) received such a rendering as can hardly be looked for outside the Crystal Palace—the Adagio narrowly escaping an encore, which, but for the extreme length of the concert, would have been inevitable. The next item of interest was to a great extent spoiled, by being placed at the end of this too long programme. When will English people become alive to the fact that high-class music cannot be properly listened to without some fatigue to the brain; and that, if one great work follows close upon another at the same concert, the attention must after a time become wearied? Who has not experienced a sense of fatigue produced by the regulation two Overtures, two Symphonies, and a Concerto, which form the ordinary orchestral programme of most of our classical concerts? In this, if in nothing else, a good example was given at the "Exhibition Concerts" of last year, where an Overture, a Symphony or Concerto, some ballet music, and a March, with two vocal pieces, formed a programme which satisfied without satiating. To return—the orchestral variations of Brahms produced less effect than they had done on their first performance at these concerts, and the reason is not far to seek: they came after two hours and a quarter of classical music without a break.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

This establishment opened for the season on the 17th ult., with Rossini's "Semiramide," the character of the Assyrian Queen being sustained by Madlle. Titien with all her wonted energy. The only novelty during the evening was the repetition of the Overture, between the Acts, by desire of the Duke of Edinburgh, who, with the Duchess, arrived at the theatre after the performance had commenced. "Il Trovatore" on the 19th ult., introduced Signor Galassi in the part of the Count. He has a good baritone voice, sings smoothly and with good expression, and was encored in the popular solo, "Il balen." The first appearance of Madlle. Lodi, as Amina, in "La Sonnambula," which took place on the 21st ult., may be pronounced a success, although what this success may be worth we must wait to determine. Her voice is a pure soprano, light, flexible, and well cultivated; but a pardonable nervousness and a tendency to gain additional strength by forcing her natural power somewhat detracted from the effect of her performance. The house has been uniformly well filled.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.

A LARGE audience assembled on the 5th ult., attracted by the announcement of a performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, "St. Paul;" for, beautiful as this work is acknowledged to be by all competent to judge, the opportunities for hearing it are too rare to be neglected. Evidence of careful rehearsal was apparent throughout; the choruses, and more especially the chorales, being sung with precision and a due management of tone which should not pass without a word of praise, seeing how difficult it is to achieve these results with so large a body of vocalists. The principal parts were most effectively rendered by Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss A. Sterling, Mr. George Bentham, and Mr. Thurley Beale, the latter gentleman having, at a short notice, supplied the place of Mr. Lewis Thomas, absent from indisposition. A good word must be said for Mr. Bentham, whose well-trained voice and unaffected style were advantageously displayed in the air, "Be thou faithful." The work was conducted, with his usual intelligence, by Mr. Barnby. At the eleventh and last concert of the series, on the 19th ult., the first performance in London of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Oratorio, "The Light of the World," and the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, with other members of the Royal Family, filled every available place in the Hall. The appearance of the Royal visitors was the signal for the commencement of the National Anthem, which was followed by Mr. Barnby's arrangement of the Russian Hymn, both of which, it is needless to say, were received with loud and prolonged applause. The Oratorio was conducted by the composer, and knowing how few rehearsals can have been bestowed upon this intricate music, it is marvellous how the choir could have so well mastered its difficulties. True there was occasional hesitation in attacking the points, especially in the second Part, but this was scarcely observable to those who did not follow the work with the score, and most of the choruses elicited the warmest marks of approbation. Since the performance of the Oratorio in Birmingham, Mr. Sullivan has cut out many numbers, chiefly from the first Part, and made many minor alterations which materially improve the work; but we still think a re-consideration of the subject would suggest other excisions which might have the effect of bringing the libretto into more compact form. Our opinion of the composition was so fully expressed on its production at the Birmingham Festival that we have now but to chronicle its decisive success before a London audience; and with all the influence of Court patronage, we have but little doubt that it will have that repeated hearing to which its undoubted merits entitle it. Madame Sherrington, Madame Patey, and Mr. Santley fully sustained their high reputation in the solos, Mr. Santley, especially, delivering the recitatives in a style which renders it almost impossible for any other vocalist to supply his place on a future occasion. Mr. Cummings was, as usual, a thoroughly efficient exponent of the tenor music; and in the secondary soprano and bass parts Miss Spiller and Mr. Maybrick rendered important service. Mr. Sullivan was most warmly received, and conducted throughout with much skill. The opera-glasses were turned somewhat too much towards the Royal box during the evening to satisfy a real lover of art; but let us hope that amongst the fashionable assemblage many who came to see remained to hear.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," on the 20th ult., attracted an overflowing audience. It might be reasonably supposed that a work of such importance, by a composer who has slowly but surely earned his right to a hearing, would have been submitted for judgment to a London public in the first instance; but English musicians have now learned to look away from the metropolis for encouragement in their efforts; and we have to thank, with all earnestness, the enterprising Committee of the Bristol Festival for permitting Mr. Macfarren to place this—his ripest composition—before his countrymen, and the Sacred Harmonic Society, for at once responding to the desire for its presentation in London. That the verdict of the Bristol audience has been fully endorsed might be at once anticipated; but such a success as the work achieved must have astonished even those who have laboured most zealously in the cause, for the final Chorus of the first Part was so vociferously encored, that Sir Michael Costa—who throughout the evening displayed a reverence for his task which cannot be over-praised—was compelled to return to the platform and recall many of the performers who had left the orchestra; and the same compliment was also bestowed upon the chorus, "This is My beloved Son"—with its lovely harp and muted violin accompaniment—and the unaccompanied quartet, "Blessed are they," so exquisitely sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss A. Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, as to cause a desire with many of the audience to hear it a third time. The Oratorio has been already so fully analysed in these columns that it will be unnecessary again to dwell in detail upon its manifold beauties. The instinctive dramatic feeling with which the composer has treated every subject he has taken in hand during his long career before the public, has in this Oratorio been developed in its most mature form; for throughout the work—if we except the two solos, “In the beginning was the Word,” for contralto, and “I rejoice in my youth,” for soprano—there is no “abstract” music, every piece, and every phrase in every piece, being so appropriately and faithfully coloured, as to render it impossible to estimate its real value apart from its situation. The instrumentation is masterly throughout: that in the Banquet scene, on the entry of Salome, especially, is positively novel in effect, the dance melodies being founded upon the scales in use among Eastern nations; the first, in the minor, with the two augmented 2nds; and the second, in the major, remarkable for the avoidance of the 4th and 7th degrees of our diatonic series. The choruses were all well sung, the fugue based upon the tune of Croft, known as “Hanover,” in the last chorus of the first Part, coming out with remarkable clearness, and so exciting the listeners as to elicit the demand for its repetition, which we have already alluded to. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington was highly successful in the florid air, “I rejoice in my youth;” and Miss Sterling (who improves rapidly) delivered the whole of the recitatives which fell to her share with much truth of expression. Mr. Santley created a marked effect in the air, “He that hath the bride is the bridegroom,” and, indeed, in the whole of the exacting music of John, thoroughly identified himself with the character of the stern and self-denying Baptist. Mr. E. Lloyd’s pure tenor voice was admirably suited for the solos given to Herod, and he was rewarded throughout with warm demonstrations of approval. The excellent conducting of Sir Michael Costa contributed materially to the success of the Oratorio; and, to the credit of the band and chorus, it must be said that his efforts were most ably seconded. Mr. Macfarren, who sat in one of the side galleries, was compelled to bow his acknowledgments at the end of the first Part, and at the conclusion of the work he received a perfect ovation, as hearty, unanimous, and sincere, as it was well deserved.

MR. WILLEM COENEN’S CHAMBER CONCERTS.

THE second of these excellent concerts, on the 4th ult., commenced with Miss Agnes Zimmermann’s clever Suite in D, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, which we have already favourably noticed on its performance at the composer’s concerts. The brilliant and well written “Suite,” by M. Camille Saint-Saens which followed, was listened to with much satisfaction; and, partly from its novelty and partly from its merit—which however is not of the highest order—would have demanded more attention from us had not an Overture in A major, for four violins, two violas and two violoncellos, by Johan S. Svendsen, so completely taken us by surprise from its excessive originality, melodiousness, and skilful treatment of the various instruments employed, that we could think of but little else in the programme. This young composer is in this country, we may almost say, utterly unknown; and to Mr. Coenen indeed thanks are due for making us acquainted with at least one of his works, for it is extremely unlikely that any concert-giver on the look out for novelty will not search more deeply into the compositions of a man who can present us with anything so remarkable as this Overture. It is scarcely necessary to say that ample justice was done to the beauties of the work by Messrs. Wiener, Amor, Eayres, Jung, Zerbini, Stehling, Pettit, and Daubert. At the third concert, on the 18th ult., a stringed quartett by F. Gernsheim, was an interesting item in the programme. On a first hearing, and without the work before us, it would be impossible to do more than give a generally favourable opinion upon so elaborate a composition; but we may say that the “Andante con moto” is based upon a charming subject, and that the final movement, a “Rondo all’ongarese,” is full of character, and written throughout with remarkable skill. The Sonata in F minor, for pianoforte and violin, by Waldemar Bargiel (played to perfection by Messrs. Coenen and Wiener), although abounding with passages of extreme beauty, is wearisome in length, the last movement especially not having sufficient interest to rivet the attention of the listener throughout. Rubinstein’s Quintett in F, for pianoforte, flute, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, is a thoroughly musician-like composition, the “Scherzo” and final “Allegro appassionato” being the movements we should especially select for praise. In this work, however, we feel the want of that concentration of idea which seems to be the weak point of the modern German school; and, grandly as the immensely difficult pianoforte part was played by Mr. Coenen, the effect upon the less enthusiastic hearer was that many of the showy passages appeared to be written for display rather than to be the spontaneous growth of an original design. Associated with Mr. Coenen were Messrs. Svendsen, Lazarus, Wendland, and Wotton, all of whom acquitted themselves with the utmost credit. The vocalists at these concerts have been Miss Ferrari, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Madlle. Helène Arnim, and Miss Dones, who by the introduction of some well chosen songs, gave a welcome relief to the instrumental portion of the programmes.

WAGNER SOCIETY.

THE fifth concert, on the 13th ult., again contained those popular extracts from Wagner’s works which can but increase the longing to hear them in their only legitimate place—the Operatic stage. The chorus of Messengers of Peace, from the early Opera “Rienzi,” almost made us wish that the so-called development of the composer’s genius had been arrested, so thoroughly legitimate are the vocal effects, and so pure and attractive is the melody. The Overture to “Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg,” was finely played and received with enthusiasm; and the choral song “Wachet auf,” from the same Opera, was encored. A warm welcome was accorded to the specimens from “Lohengrin,” the Prayer and Finale to the first Act eliciting the most solid marks of approval. Beethoven’s “Choral Fantasia” did not go well, notwithstanding that the pianoforte part was ably rendered by Mr. Walter Bache; but the same composer’s Overture to “King Stephen,” although, as we conceive, out of place at these concerts, received ample justice. In a song by the Abbé Liszt, Miss Sterling, created a marked effect, and she also gave with good expression Rubinstein’s “Die Waldhexe,” both of which were accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Dannreuther, who conducted the concert with his usual energy and skill.

BRITISH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

THE only novelties produced at these concerts have been two Overtures—the first “Inez de Castro” by Mr. Alfred Holmes, and the second entitled “The Witches’ Frolic,” by Mr. Henry Gadsby. The romantic style is evidently that in which Mr. Holmes’s real strength lies, for, although the indulgence of the desire for elaborate tone-painting occasionally leads him into excesses, there is very much to admire in his new work. Mr. Gadsby’s Overture is fully worthy of a more intimate acquaintance, for it is evidently the composition of an artist who thinks and writes in the true school. The themes are clear and well defined, and the instrumentation appropriate throughout. Mr. Gadsby is steadily winning his way to a high position amongst English composers, and we are glad to find that this Society is holding out the hand of welcome to our most talented native writers.

MR. HENRY LESLIE’S CHOIR.

THE second concert, on the 24th ult., consisting exclusively of sacred compositions, included a Motett for double choir, “Dixit Dominus,” composed by the late Samuel Wesley, and performed on this occasion for the first time. That such fine old Church music as this should have so long remained unknown appears almost incredible; and whilst bearing testimony to its remarkable merit, we cannot but feel that thanks are due to Mr. Leslie for rescuing from obscurity so rich a treasure in sacred art, and bestowing his best energies upon the task of revealing its beauties before a public audience. The writing is masterly throughout; and, as in all the works of this composer, the earnestness with which the words are expressed has the effect of impressing the hearer with that reverence for the text without which the most scholarly contrapuntal treatment has but small value. It was finely sung and much applauded. A "Tantum Ergo," by John Francis Barnett, written for an eight-part choir—smoothly harmonised and with a most attractive subject—and a melodious and charmingly voiced part-song, called "The Rainbow," by Mr. Henry Leslie, both given for the first time, pleased so much as to be re-demanded, a compliment which was also awarded to M. Gounod's expressive "Ave Verum," Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," and the concert-giver's part-song, "The Lullaby of Life," which was repeated on this occasion "by general desire." We must also mention a Motett by Walliser, "Gaudent in Coelis," composed at the end of the 16th century, a bright and well written composition, but somewhat high throughout for the treble voices. Two other novelties were an Evening Hymn, "The Shadow of the Evening Hour," by Blumenthal, which was warmly and deservedly applauded, and an Anthem, "I was glad when they said unto me," by Charles Horsley, for soprano solo and chorus, with organ accompaniment—the solo well sung by Miss Katharine Poyntz—which, although somewhat conventional in style, is a solid and musician-like work. Mr. Ainsworth, a débutant, displayed a good voice in Pergolesi's Air, "O God, have mercy," but nervousness evidently prevented him from doing himself full justice. Solos were also given by Miss Katharine Poyntz and Mr. Bentham, both of whom were most favourably received. The room was very full.

We are informed that the London Church Choir Association intends to offer a prize for an Anthem, to be composed for the next Festival of the Society. Further particulars will, we presume, shortly be made known.

THE March concert of the St. George's Glee Union was held on Friday evening, the 6th ult., and comprised, in the first part, selections from the "Messiah," the "Creation," "Judas," &c. Some of the choruses were rendered with remarkable precision. Miss Horder was deservedly applauded for the spirited manner in which she sang "The marvellous work." Mr. Thurley Beale and Mr. Carter were highly effective in their solos, the former gentleman being encored in "O ruddier than the cherry." The second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Garside conducted with his usual ability.

THE 150th anniversary festival of the "Most Honourable and Loyal Society of Ancient Britons," in aid of the Welsh Charity School at Ashford, was held at Willis's Rooms, on Saturday, the 28th February. During the evening a selection of music was performed under the direction of Mr. Brinley Richards (who gave his gratuitous aid in behalf of the charity), by Miss Mary Davis, Miss Marian Williams, and a select choir. Subscriptions amounting to upwards of £900 were announced by the Secretary.

We are informed that Mr. Lemare has purchased the Angell Town Institution, Brixton, and intends making alterations and improvements in the building, so as to make it more available for musical entertainments.

To be prepared for the opening in June next, the members of the Alexandra Palace Choir hold their meetings for rehearsal every week, under the personal direction of Mr. H. Weist Hill; and, in recognition of the valuable services rendered to the Society by Mr. William Lockyer, who attends to the necessary details of the rehearsals, this gentleman was recently presented with a handsome gold watch and chain bearing the following inscription on the inside case: "Presented by H. Weist Hill to William Lockyer as a small token of esteem for his honourable fidelity, displayed in connexion with the Alexandra Palace Choir. Feb. 24th, 1874."

An excellent concert was given on the 3rd ult., at Tolmer's Square Church, Hampstead Road. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and a miscellaneous sacred selection. The artists were Miss Jessie Royd (soprano), Miss Alice Barnett (contralto), and Mr. Henry Guy (tenor), all of whom were most efficient. The choruses, sung by sixty voices, were very effective; the most successful numbers being "All ye that cried," and "The night is departing." The second part included J. S. Bach's eight-part anthem "Blessing and Glory;" two sacred part-songs by A. S. Sullivan, and Gounod's "By Babylon's wave." Mr. T. Mountain rendered invaluable assistance as organist, and Mr. T. Pettit deserves every commendation for the able manner in which he conducted the performance.

We regret to record the death—at his residence, 3, New Bridge, Dover—of William Walter Sutton, aged 80 years and 11 months, for 60 years Professor of Music, and senior partner of the firm of Sutton and Potter, of that town.

MR. CARL ROSA has decided upon founding a scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music in memory of his late wife, Madame Parepa-Rosa, which will bear her name. It will be awarded by competition to British-born female vocalists between the ages of 18 and 22 years, and the successful candidate will be entitled to two years' free education in the Royal Academy of Music. In connection with this scholarship there will be also a prize of a gold medal, with Madame Parepa-Rosa's likeness, which will be awarded to the best female vocalist in the Royal Academy of Music, at the annual public distribution of prizes, in July. The first election will take place during the present month, for the admission of the successful candidate at the commencement of the Midsummer Term. We are glad to find the number of free Scholarships steadily increasing at this Institution.

We translate the following from L'Echo du Parlement Belge, of the 2nd ult.:—"We hear from Aix-la-Chapelle that the noble support our fellow-citizen, M. Naus, continues to give to young Belgian artists has procured for our celebrated Conservatoire, a fresh and brilliant success in the foreigner, Mr. Rummel (the 5th of the pupils introduced by M. Naus to our 'Soirées musicales'), who was heard last Thursday at the fourth winter concert, and with a success which will be remembered by the young and brilliant pianist. Warmly applauded after Weber's Concertstück, M. Rummel was recalled three times after his masterly interpretation of a delightful Romance by Brassin, and a Tarantella by Liszt ('Venezia et Napoli'). The fire and enthusiasm displayed by the young performer in the difficult piece by Liszt, delighted the audience beyond measure, and the applause did not cease until M. Rummel had again seated himself at the piano to add another piece to the programme. If the youthful fire of M. Rummel were somewhat tempered, Belgium might well be proud of having given light to a veritable rival of Liszt."

THE performance of Bach's Passion music (St. Matthew) on Tuesday evening, the 31st ult., at St. Paul's, under the direction of Dr. Stainer, and on Wednesday afternoon, the 1st inst., at Westminster Abbey, under Mr. Barnby, may be accepted as sure indications that this sublime work is now steadily assuming its real place as service music in the church.

In some newspapers recently forwarded to us we read glowing accounts of the success of Miss Rosa Isidor, who is now prima donna at Cadiz. She is said to possess a fine voice—soprano sfgato—and to sing with much fluency and dramatic feeling. In "La Sonnambula" and "Lucia," she has created an extraordinary effect, and was several times called before the curtain.

It is announced that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has consented to preside at the Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians on Monday, the 27th inst., at Willis's Rooms.

We understand that a Musical Festival is positively to be held this year in Leeds. A guarantee fund of £5,000 is to be raised, and a provisional committee appointed, under the presidency of the Mayor, who heads the subscription list with £500.

This was originally printed as a Dialogue for two voices, accompanied by viola. The Editor is answerable for the present arrangement, likewise for the adaptation of the words. To give greater effect, it may be sung by two Choirs, as indicated by the difference of type. The first phrase, consisting of three bars and a half, as also the last two bars, may be sung "tutti."

A Folio Edition of this Part Song is also published by Novello, Ewer and Co., price 1s.

audience. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from an Oratorio, entitled "The Prodigal's Return," composed by the Rev. H. F. Limpus (Minor Canon of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor). Mrs. R. Limpus gave a very effective reading of the air, "Rejoice, O young man in thy youth." Miss Jessie Giles's singing of "Let God arise," called forth loud plaudits from the audience, as did also the reading of the air, "I will arise," by Mr. Evison. The duets, chorals, quartetts, and choruses were admirably sung, the final chorus, "O Lord, our Governor," narrowly escaping an encore. Between the parts Miss C. Nash gave as a piano-forte solo, Thalberg's Fantasia, "Home, sweet home." The second part of the programme was miscellaneous. The glees, &c., by the choir were "Blow, blow, thou winter wind," the "Maiden of the Fleur-de-Lys," Tramp Chorus, and the National Anthem. Miss Fenton ably accompanied, and Mr. Limpus conducted.

THE Passion Services at the Church of St. Anne, Soho, are being repeated each Friday evening during Lent with increased effect upon the worshippers. The recital of the sufferings of our Lord—illustrated by the marvellous music of Bach, and declaimed with a power of expression rarely excelled—produces upon the large congregations an impression not easily described. To this we may add, that a small but effective orchestra, including harp and organ, an efficient chorus, and a hearty participation on the part of the congregation in the beautiful chorals with which this work abounds, combines to render the service exceptionally complete and impressive. The Princess Christian attended the service on Friday, the 20th ult. We are requested to state that the Passion Service on Good Friday will commence at four o'clock in the afternoon, instead of the usual hour.

IN continuance of the plan so successfully inaugurated last year, the Directors of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society's Concerts are again giving a series of Oratorios, in the Royal Albert Hall, during Passion Week, commencing on Monday with the "Messiah," followed on Tuesday by Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater." On the three succeeding days (Wednesday, Thursday, Friday) Bach's sublime Oratorio of the "Passion" (according to St. Matthew) will be given; and the series will conclude on Saturday with the "Messiah." The list of artists include M^{me}. Sherrington, Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Cummings, Signori Uriò, Campobello, Giulio Perkin, and Agnesi; while Dr. Stainer, Mr. Hoyte, and Mr. W. T. Best will severally preside over the organ. The whole series will be conducted by Mr. Barnby.

WE understand that Mr. Rowland Mellor Winn, a youth of eighteen, has been appointed organist to the Parish Church, Harborne, near Birmingham, where there is a full choral service by a surpliced choir. Mr. Winn was some time ago elected pianist to the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, after a competition test with six candidates.

THE Motett, "Dixit Dominus," by Samuel Wesley, which was performed at Mr. Henry Leslie's Concert on the 24th ult., is in the press, and will be shortly published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. It was composed in the year 1800, and the MS. Score was presented in 1843 to the British Museum, by the late Vincent Novello.

WE are requested to state that a Committee has been formed for the purpose of placing a Memorial Brass in the Parish Church of St. Alphege, Greenwich, as a record of the interment of Thomas Tallis, and that the Rev. H. W. Miller, of Richmond Hill, S.W. (whose letter on the subject appeared in our last Number) is empowered to receive subscriptions towards this object.

THE anniversary services of the Sunday School in connection with the Craven Hill Congregational Church, took place on Sunday, the 8th ult. The Morning Service included Te Deum (Hopkins) and G. W. Martin's "No shadows yonder," and in the evening, A. Sullivan's "Onward, Christian Soldiers," Hopkins's "Lift up your heads," a Hymn, "Only gone before," and the Magnificat were sung. All the foregoing were well rendered by the teachers and scholars, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Lee Davies, the organist, to whom much credit is due, for his careful training of the singers. The sermons were preached by the Rev. A. McMillan and the Rev. Dr. Manning.

ON Wednesday, the 25th ult., a tea and concert was given at the Parker Street Schools, Drury Lane, to about 350 of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. Among those who kindly contributed to the amusement of the evening, were Miss Antoinette Sterling, Madame Liebe Konss, Mr. Newton Baylis, and Mr. Frederick Oakland, their efforts being highly appreciated by the audience.

REVIEWS.

NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

"Ponder my words, O Lord." Anthem. By Henry Gadsby.

THERE is much poetical feeling in this composition, which stands distinctly under the head of "Short Anthems." As to its technical merit, there is more to admire in the purpose than in the means; that is to say, we should be disposed to dispute with the author the principle on which some of his harmonies are founded. One who has so much music in him as the piece evinces has, however, a right to an opinion, and he would doubtless contend for, if he could not establish, his ground against us; but the discussion would better suit a private meeting than a public review, and uninterested persons shall therefore not be wearied by a statement of the case. The anthem will find welcome with many a musician, and to every one there will be something charming in its effect.

"Rejoice greatly." An Anthem for Palm Sunday. Composed by Henry Gadsby.

NOTHING can be more unlike than is this anthem to Handel's setting of the same text from Zechariah; and yet, so perverse is the mind of man, it is impossible to hear Mr. Gadsby's work and not compare it with the grand outbreak of jubilant enthusiasm in the Messiah; and again, so strong is the prejudice founded on life-long associations, it is impossible but that the comparison must be in disfavour of the new composition. Most dangerous it is to reset passages, earlier music to which is universally familiar; and, because we like and always will like the song in question better than any other music that can go to the words, we find it difficult to render such justice to the piece before us, as we naturally should, had it other words. Like the last noticed, it is a short anthem, and like that, therefore, it will be acceptable on many occasions whence greater length might debar many a piece of equal merit. The effect of the voices will be brilliant, and this will be heightened by that of the organ, which is in accord with the truly joyful character at which the author successfully aims. This, also like the above, abounds in technical points that show the composer's views to differ from ours—not through the inadvertency of a careless writer, but results obviously of a fixed, although we feel ill-founded, principle. Not to be thought hypercritically querulous, we will break through the restraint we purposed, and adduce some instances:—the progression from the chord of the second of the key to the first inversion of the chord of the tonic (p. 1, score 2, bar 2), of which the effect is unsatisfactory, as the reason why it is so is clearly demonstrable; the progression (p. 2, score 1, bar 4), from a chord of seventh of A, to a common chord of G, an upper voice repeating the G while the bass proceeds A, G, and while the leading-note C \sharp descends a whole tone; the employment of the second inversion of the chord of E minor, the key being D (p. 2, score 2, bar 1), a chord that is unavailable in that relationship, &c., &c., &c.

"O, how plentiful is Thy goodness." A short, full Anthem for four voices. Composed by T. Mee Pattison.

PRaise is due to this piece for its correctness, but praise with the qualification that there is not much more to admire in the music than to blame. Melodious it is truly; but yet it has no definite, distinct, rememberable tune. Harmonious it is, beyond question; but the harmony is, like the melody, such as might be, and has been many a time, extemporised, and has no need of commission to paper. The ear is wearied by the alternation of the keys of G minor and B flat, in the main matter of the movement, which is ostensibly in the key of E flat, and then, these two keys of B flat and G minor reappear in the episode, which thus extends instead of relieving the wearisomeness of the foregoing; and afterwards, the return of the earlier portion brings back its somewhat cloudiness of character with a lessening of its interest by the likeness of the context. The said episode, "But my hope hath been in Thee," presents the well judged variety of being for three instead of for four voices, but otherwise affords no contrast to what surrounds it. Whoever is accustomed to the manipulation of a sustaining keyed instrument must be aware of the temptation to meander through its pleasing undulations of sound, and may often yield to its charm; but it is one thing to indulge one's own self-satisfaction in the producing of progressions that are due as much to the finger as to the thought, and totally another thing to invest such extemporanities with the trapping of pen, ink and paper, that are due only to studied compositions.

"Praise the Lord, O my soul." Anthem. Composed by George M. Garrett, Mus. D.

HERE we have a composition of considerable extent and much merit. It consists of a chorus, "Praise the Lord," which will have a broad, bold effect, from its successful employment of triple measure, and its bright vocal distribution; a tenor solo interspersed with chorus, "Who forgiveth all thy sins," which has great melodious charm; and a final chorus, "Blessed be the Lord," that maintains the musicianly character of the whole. The author might perhaps advantageously modify the last portion of the second movement, where there is some confusion between the keys of E, minor and major, and C; this is at the words, "and crowneth thee with mercy," and though there may be a good intention in the employment of the major chord to illustrate the idea of mercy, the obscurity of the passage worse than counterbalances this.

Scherzo, for the Pianoforte. By Walter Macfarren.

HOWEVER much may be said and written upon the ill effect of the quantity of bad music issued to the public, there can be no question that a large number of healthy and instructive works by modern composers are constantly published which must, to a certain extent, neutralise the evil; the bane and antidote are both before us; and we cannot do better than counsel those who have enfeebled their constitution by indulgence in the "sweet" pieces carefully manufactured for musical children, at least to make the experiment of feasting for awhile upon the more solid fare so plentifully existing around them. Amongst those who have set themselves the task of introducing a higher tone of thought into the lighter compositions provided for amateurs, Mr. Walter Macfarren deserves to be honourably mentioned, for in all his original works—even those in which the more severe form has not been attempted—there is always an under current of latent power which, like the style of a classical scholar in literature, gives a tone to his writing, impossible to be imitated by an inferior artist. The "Scherzo" now before us will be warmly welcomed both by sound performers and conscientious teachers. It is charmingly written throughout, the playful subject, first simply given out with the right hand, obstinately appearing wherever it is least expected, and cleverly used even to accompany a legato theme, with which it forms an admirable contrast. The coda of the piece, too, is exceedingly effective, the character of the movement being well sustained to the end. As a study for the acquisition of a light and even touch, as well as on its own intrinsic merits as a composition, we confidently recommend this little Sketch to public attention.

Sehnsucht (Longing). Waltz. Composed by E. A. Sydenham.

In reviewing mere dance pieces to which their composers have affixed pretentious and affected titles, we have often expressed our regret that they have not been simply called what they are; but in the case of Mr. Sydenham's composition we cannot but think it a pity that he has styled it a Waltz, because it is in fact something very much better. What Herr Wagner calls the "poetic basis" of music is here we find distinctly traceable throughout—the word "Sehnsucht" clearly defining the origin of the many refined and melodious phrases with which the piece abounds. The eloquent theme, beginning on a key-note pedal, in C minor, is happily expressive of the leading idea, and the graceful passages which follow seem to grow up so naturally that not a bar betrays a sign of weakness. The second subject, in A flat major, is extremely attractive, and a brief passage of part-writing—a low bass note being sustained with the pedal—is a point of much interest. Mr. Sydenham, we think, might with confidence attempt a more important composition; for there is sufficient indication of talent in his modestly styled "Waltz" to prove that he both thinks and writes in the true school.

A Race between two Walking Dolls. Marche Grotesque. By Alfred B. Allen.

THE title of this piece is unquestionably the most "grotesque" thing about it. A comic March is certainly a good idea—and that it may be made thoroughly successful has been proved by Mendelssohn in his Clowns' Funeral March in the "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, and by Gounod in his "Funeral March of a Marionette"—but if the humour is not inherent to the composition itself, no description upon the title-page will make its character felt by the listeners. It is never so wearisome to sit out a Tragedy at which we can laugh, as a Comedy at which we cannot; and although Mr. Allen's exceedingly common-place March might pass amongst the multitude of works of its class if its composer did not assume the cap and bells, we cannot allow such a production to escape without a word of protest when its claim to be "funny" is so boldly declared. Mr. Allen is we believe no novice, and may have taken advantage of a former success to break ground in a fresh quarter; but he must remember that the choice of subject rests with the artist, and that even a landscape painter who fails in his execution of a sea-piece, must expect his work to be as dispassionately judged as if he had not already made his name in another department of art.

Six Part-Songs, for four and five voices. Composed by Jacques Blumenthal.

- No. 1. Evening Hymn.
- " 2. What care I how fair she be?
- " 3. A Shadow.
- " 4. Gather ye Rosebuds.
- " 5. The Loyal Lover.
- " 6. The Butterfly.

THE melodious character of these Part-songs, and the musicianlike manner in which they are treated, will be certain to ensure them a cordial welcome amongst the many Choral Societies desirous of increasing their répertoire by the introduction of sterling music by modern composers. No. 1 has a placid theme expressing with remarkable fidelity every change in the feeling of the words, a beautiful effect being produced at the commencement of the third verse by the fresh harmony which accompanies the original subject. No. 2—written to those well-known words of Wither which have inspired so many composers—is full of character throughout. Starting with a staccato subject for the basses, answered in full harmony, we get some excellent points by the repetitions of the defiant questions propounded by the poet; and, even if we are of opinion that the music somewhat halts in the phrase, "I will die ere she shall grieve," it must be remembered that at least the defect arises from the over zealous attempt of the composer to give an appropriate colouring to the words. The song is written for two tenors and two basses, and although occasionally reaching to the high A in the first tenor part, even timid amateurs need be under no fear of the composition over-taxing their powers. No. 3 we like least of the set; not because it is crudely written; but the theme does not strike us, and we care not for the modulations. The close of each verse, however, is beautiful. No. 4 was heard at the first of Mr. Leslie's concerts this season, and created the effect which its excessive merits must always ensure. It is one of the most charming Part-songs written by a living composer that we are acquainted with, and we cordially commend it to the attention of all vocal classes capable of realising its beauties. Those who wish to attempt it, however, should know that there are occasionally five, and sometimes six, real parts to be sung; but the composition presents no difficulties which earnest practice will not overcome. No. 5, composed to some words from a manuscript of the time of Henry VIII., has a melodious subject, in Minuet time, beginning in B minor and changing to the tonic major in each verse. It is simply, but most effectively, written for five voices, and would, we think, prove highly attractive in performance. No. 6 has the disadvantage of being written to T. H. Bayley's well-known verses commencing "I'd be a butterfly," a melody to which (bad or good) has grown up with us from childhood. The song, however, although not one of the best of the set, has a pleasing and appropriate theme; and if it can be judged without former associations intruding themselves, will, we think, be much liked.

DUFF AND STEWART.

Woodland Carols. Morceau de Salon, for the Pianoforte.
Russian Boat Song. Transcribed for the Pianoforte.
Sound the loud Timbrel. Capriccio for the Pianoforte.

By J. Theodore Trezell.

THE only original piece in this selection—"Woodland Carols"—shows that Mr. Trezell is not obliged always to rely on others for subjects upon which to exercise his talents. It is extremely simple, but we like it no less on that account; for the graceful flow of the passages will render it good practice for young players, to whom we strongly recommend it. The leading subject is melodious, if not very original, and its varied treatment should make it highly attractive to lovers of the modern ornamental school of pianoforte music. The "Russian Boat Song" is a transcription of a popular melody, or at least what in these days is called a "Transcription," which, of course, means that the subject is adorned in the latest fashionable style. Everybody will be pleased with the theme, and we may say that the arranger has dressed it up in a most attractive form. Why "Sound the loud Timbrel" should be presumed by Mr. Trezell to differ so materially from the last piece as to be called a "Capriccio" we cannot comprehend. Certainly there is an "Intermezzo," and many passages occur having no connection with the original subject; but when a "Transcription" is transformed into a "Capriccio" is a problem which we do not attempt to solve.

LAMBORN COCK.

Six Characteristic Melodies, for the Pianoforte.

No. 1, Pegasus. No. 2, Zephyrus. No. 3, Hesperus.
No. 4, Ægeria. No. 5, Iris. No. 6, Atalanta.

Composed by Charles Salaman.

THE title-page of the first of these pieces has the name of J. B. Cramer only as the publisher; but as the others mention this firm in connection with that of Lamborn Cock, we have placed the whole of the six compositions at the head of our notice, especially as a leading idea seems to link them together. Mr. Salaman is already so well known as a composer of refined and intellectual music, both vocal and instrumental, that we were quite prepared to find in these compositions more than an average amount of poetical thought and scholarly writing, and we may at once say that although unequal in merit, they are all fully deserving the earnest attention of both players and teachers. No. 1, a flowing, light piece moving throughout in triplets, divided between the two hands, and No. 2, a melodious sketch, remarkable for the unceasing accompaniment of broken groups of semi-quavers, must yield in beauty to No. 3, a lovely "song without words," given in turn to each hand, and accompanied throughout with a simple elegance which cannot be over praised. No. 4, commencing with an attractive legato theme, which afterwards appears more fully harmonised, and No. 5, in 9-8 rhythm, the melody played, and accompanied with quavers by the right hand, may also be commended as excellent and instructive teaching pieces. No. 6, however, the subject of which alone should make the composition a general favourite, enlists our sympathy more thoroughly and deserves all the popularity it is pretty certain to attain.

Romance for Pianoforte. By Herbert S. Oakeley.

THIS Romance is a highly favourable specimen of Professor Oakeley's cultivated style, the writing throughout evidencing the result of a refined musical feeling, directed by earnest study. The piece, although not striking us by its originality, attracts us by the musicianlike treatment displayed throughout; and as a study for legato playing, as well as for acquiring the important power of singing with the finger, it will be found invaluable. A good effect is gained by the enharmonic change of key at the double bar; and the Agitato subject, accompanied with triplets, forms an excellent contrast with the placid opening theme. The key—F sharp major—may frighten some amateurs; but the passages are all so carefully written as to require but attentive practice to place them well under the hand.

Just as of old. Song. Words by F. E. Weatherly, B.A. Music by William H. Cummings.

THIS song has been so often sung by its composer in public that we have been forestalled in our estimate of its merits by the applause with which it has always been received. We can only add that a careful examination of the composition leads us at once to endorse the verdict thus pronounced. The melody is truly sympathetic with the words; and the harmonies and accompaniments prove that as a composer, as well as a vocalist, Mr. Cummings is an artist of whom we have a right to be proud.

Three Songs. Poetry by Gordon Campbell. Music by Walter Macfarren.

No. 1, Life's Seasons. No. 2, Songs and Smiles.
No. 3, The Voice of the Sea.

WE should imagine these songs to be written by a singer, so thoroughly vocal are they throughout, and so earnestly and truthfully are the words expressed. This may perhaps hardly be received as a compliment, for it is popularly supposed that a creative artist can write instrumental and vocal music with equal ease; but singers know better than this; and, although we might not always accept their verdict upon the worth of a composition, there can be no question that they are good judges of what lies well for the voice, and will neglect even good music in which this important qualification is ignored. No. 1 will, we think, become the favourite, on account of its extreme melodiousness, although we are by no means inclined to admit that it is the best of the set. The theme, however, flows so gracefully with the accompaniment that it cannot fail to make its way at once to the sympathies of an audience. No. 2 has a most attractive subject, with a triplet accompaniment throughout, the harmonies, although extremely simple, materially enhancing the effect of the melody. No. 3, in E minor, has a restless accompaniment of semiquavers until the change into the tonic major, when both the voice and pianoforte parts become more placid to express the alteration of feeling in the poetry. The phrases marked "Quasi Recitativo" give much effect to the return of the Agitato theme.

WILKIE, WOOD AND CO.

The Mother's Book of Song. Two-part Songs for Little Singers, on the Kindergarten School System. The music composed by Lady Baker. Edited by G. A. Macfarren.

LADY BAKER has done good service to the rising generation by the publication of this book; and Mr. Macfarren, by lending the weight of his name as musical editor, deserves the thanks of all who think with us that singing should be made one of the pleasures of early childhood.

"Kindergarten" games have long ago been introduced into England; but, as stated in the Preface to the book before us, they have been hitherto wanting in the musical element which makes them so attractive in the country which originated them. Froebel's book on the subject, published in Germany, contains descriptions of these games, pictures showing them in full play, and a number of little songs to be sung by the children during the progress of each game. The verses of these songs are in the work under notice translated into English; but as the music in the original does not fit the new version, tunes have been composed by Lady Baker expressly for them, all of which are excellently suited for their intended purpose. The verses are models of purity of thought, and the words are just such as a child would use in prattling to its playmates upon the subjects selected. Amongst the number we may instance "Grass mowing," "Baskets of flowers," and "The Dove Cot," for especial commendation.

J. B. CRAMER AND CO.

Showers of Sunshine, for the Pianoforte. By C. H. R. Marriott.

SINCE the publication of "La Pluie de Perles" we have had showers of many kinds, but amongst the number we do not remember one of Sunshine; and indeed, although in this varied climate we have fitful gleams of the sun's rays, and occasional bursts of intense heat from this luminary, we can scarcely call to mind being caught in a "Shower of Sunshine." All this, however, has nothing to do with the worth of the piece, which, although wonderfully resembling the composition already mentioned as having given rise to the "showery" school of writing, is evidently the work of an experienced hand, and may be recommended as good practice. The composer will, we doubt not, thank us for calling attention to the fact of the flat being entirely omitted in the return to the key of F, on the 5th page.

The Village Green. A Rustic Dance, for the Pianoforte. By Francesco Berger.

MR. BERGER has written a telling subject for the leading theme of this little sketch, and has introduced a series of brilliant passages so easy as to enable a player to produce much effect by a small amount of labour. There is sufficient variety in the piece to keep the attention alive; and, to show the intention of the composer he tells us, in a footnote, that it "must be performed with unflagging energy, and must be worked up Prestissimo toward the end."

The Wanderer's Return. Ballad: Words by Mrs. M. A. Baines.

Name me not. Song. Words by Robert Wyatt Wadman, Sweet eyes. Ballad. Words by James Douglas Harington.

Night and Morn. Canzonet.

Composed by Charlotte C. Gilbert.

BEING written by a vocalist (Mrs. Alfred Gilbert) this group of songs is likely at least to be a welcome addition to the store of graceful compositions which form the usual contents of an amateur's portfolio; but an examination of their merits has proved to us that their composer has succeeded in doing something more than merely throw off a few common-place effusions which will serve for distribution amongst her pupils. Without assigning them any very high rank in the world of art, we may say that they are all melodious and accompanied with the skill of a musician. "The Wanderer's Return" is extremely simple, but the melody is attractive, and the little that is attempted in the accompaniment is unexceptionable. "Name me not" is somewhat too monotonous in character to bear four verses, but the legato bass against the semi-quaver accompaniment flows well with the voice. "Sweet eyes" is a good specimen of the pure ballad style, the pianoforte part merely aiding the voice, without presuming to set up on its own account: so unpretending is it, indeed, that we care not for the somewhat laboured bit of symphony which occurs between the verses. "Night and Morn," to some verses by the composer, has much variety in character, and is written in the more ambitious form of a "Canzonet." There are many commendable points in this composition, but we prefer Mrs. Gilbert in her ballads.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY. =

A Selection of Compositions for the Organ. By Edouard Batiste. Edited by William Spark, Mus. D.

In the school of organ playing of which Lefebure-Wely was the chief, if not the first exponent, Edouard Batiste undoubtedly holds the second place. In like manner as a composer for the organ does the organist of St. Eustache—although probably distancing all other competitors—take rank after the late organist of St. Sulpice. To those, therefore, who know and enjoy the organ music of Lefebure-Wely will the compositions of Edouard Batiste be welcome. The English equivalent for the combinations of stops originally intended for French organs have been carefully and judiciously supplied by Dr. Spark, of Leeds; there is, consequently, little or nothing wanting to render this edition of value to the English amateur.

Church Music. A collection of Hymn Tunes, Chants, &c. Composed by Stephen S. Stratton. Novello and Co.

Ten Original Tunes. Composed by Arthur Cottman. Novello and Co.

Six Hymn Tunes. Composed by Signor E. Pieraccini. A. Dimoline, Bristol.

Hymn for Holy Week. Composed by William W. Ringrose, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Novello and Co.

THE activity of hymn tune writers at the present time is, to say the least, remarkable. If the intrinsic value of these compositions in any appreciable degree corresponded with their number—which is legion—there might be some grounds for hope that England would take the first place in the production of this class of music. Unfortunately few of these tunes—which are brought out in a fugitive form and usually at the composer's own cost—ever seem by any chance to strike editors of Hymnals as being eligible for insertion in their collections. Consequently they are soon laid aside and forgotten. How far this is just to these musicians and their works we might now proceed to ascertain, using the above-mentioned list of works, selected at haphazard, as specimens.

Mr. Stratton contributes twenty-one tunes, in all of which we find evidence of considerable musical feeling. And, accepting them as a fair criterion of the composer's powers, we should say that had he received the solid and complete technical education which appears to be so easily obtained abroad and so difficult to get in England, he might in all probability have become a successful composer of larger works than hymn tunes. As it is, we find in the midst of much that is promising, certain weaknesses—indications of imperfect education—that would go far to injure the finest inspirations.

Mr. Cottman has narrowly missed complete success in his tunes. There is more musical talent and fewer indications of weakness observable in them than in those noticed above. Upon the whole they are most favourable specimens.

Signor Pieraccini's tunes are distinguished by all the melodious flow generally regarded as a characteristic of his countrymen. The harmonies, however, are both sweet and impure, and greater severity of harmonisation would much tend to modify the suspicion of secularity that hangs about them.

The one solitary tune by Mr. Ringrose is neither better nor worse than those just noticed—full of indications of nice feeling, yet just wanting in those qualities which constitute a thoroughly successful hymn tune. It may be said that in the number written and published by the recognised writers of this class of work there are very few which turn out standard tunes. This is no doubt true, and points to the fact that the difficulty of writing a good hymn tune is greater than is generally supposed. But, on the other hand, seeing so many tunes are written which in themselves contain plain proofs of the natural ability of their writers, may we not deduce from this that there is considerable latent talent for musical composition in many of our countrymen, which only requires the assistance of a good technical education to bring forth good fruit.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CHURCH SINGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I must apologise for intruding on your time and space, and beg that you will insert the following on Church Singing. I shall speak of it under its two classes—part singing and unison singing. First, as to part singing; your correspondent, in the Number for March, alludes to tune No. 106, "Hymns Ancient and Modern," as an instance of the bad effect of the double air. I quite admit that it has a bad effect if the choir be unsupported by the organ. It also produces consecutive fifths, but he seems to forget that the pedals playing two distinct octaves below the notes sung by the bass, so far covers the effect of the double air, as to render it rather good than otherwise. But where there are amateurs in a congregation who will insist in trying to sing a part, having neither a copy to sing from, nor an ear keen enough to follow their part strictly from the organ, such ought to be put down with a strong hand, for they only cause the thoughts of others to wander away to their foolish acts. The remedy for this is easy, if the clergyman and churchwardens of a church have a notice so placed, that all who enter the church may see it. And let it be to this effect: All those who cannot read music, or who have no copy from which to read, are desired strictly to adhere to the air. This would effectually remove one of the evils. But the other, viz., the double air, must be endured, as it cannot be cured. Now as to unison singing—it is not good I think to exclude unison singing, nor is it good to do away with part singing, but the two may be used according to the discretion of the organist and clergyman, but this should always be with the view to the comfort and convenience of the congregation. The same remedy may be applied here as in the other case, but it should be more strongly enforced, for where unison singing is established, the organist is free to play a part, varying, it may be, every verse. I mean these remarks to apply to chants and hymn tunes, and not to our elaborate anthems and settings of the Canticles. One word more,—I should like to understand whether those persons who so strongly object to consecutive octaves, do also entirely abstain from the use of the Double Diapason or the Double Reed Stop, if their organs possess these stops; for if they cannot endure the air being doubled, it is most unreasonable to think that they can endure the doubling of all the four parts. Neither would they be true to their theory if they held with unison singing.

THE WAGNER CONTROVERSY—POETIC BASIS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—To whatever the recent phase of the Wagner discussion may not have led, it has certainly been productive of one patent result. It has enabled musical people to listen to some really exuberant unfoldings of views and ideas, upon subjects hitherto esoteric, with gratitude not altogether unmixed with expectation. That some good must come from all this stirring of the waters, no one can doubt. Points long held in abeyance now crop to the surface. The musical community is being awakened. Those who have hitherto held in quiet security apparently invincible heights, find their position untenable. They can no longer say to the waves of public opinion: "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." The addition of a seventh string to the lyre aroused opposition. Similar obstructiveness attends every progressive effort. The very strife yields fruits of peace. This is expressed in your recent review of a "letter" from Wagner, as well as tacitly acknowledged by the spirit of Mr. Joseph Bennett's carefully worded contribution on the same subject, in the Number of your ably edited Journal for March. The leading article temperately approaches the very pith of the whole matter, and candidly sets forth the new views. Yet permit me to add I do not think he has made a single hit at the great musician. All that he says—and says so eloquently and so well—only rivets in my mind the continuously growing and deepening conviction that Wagner is right, and that his opponents do not understand him. It is not my province to re-introduce invective. But let me be allowed simply to state that in my view all your conclusions are foregone. It is to me as clear as sunlight that music must grow. To utter over again the oft repeated words of adverse parties would be irksome; still, I cannot help saying, in briefly stating the case as it occurs to my mind, where I deem Wagner's opponents in error.

All he says of Beethoven is truly said. The composers dismissed as having "nothing to tell," are justly dismissed. To the project of separating the "man" from his "theory," I say, "No." That music without poetry is but half an arch, "Yes." Our programme makers know this fact so well, that they will, if they cannot find a legend attached to an instrumental piece, invent one and tack it on. It may be the "Lion in love," to a concerto of Beethoven; or the "Shake of the evil spirit," to a violin solo. Some line of poetry, legend, story, they must and will have. Illustrations flow ad infinitum. Do composers work in a comatose state? "Yes." Beethoven knew what he did? "No." Beethoven left no record of his struggles? I say, "Yes, he did." Why not write more choral symphonies? "Straight jacket would have resulted." Instrumental music incomplete? "Certainly."

Other allusions I am compelled to pass by, though I could, with perhaps more pleasure to myself than to others, expatiate on each head of the question at considerable length. I should not now have written did I not believe the subject of paramount importance in the pursuit of art to every one, as well as to

Yours very truly,

ON THE POETIC BASIS OF MUSIC AND THE THEORY OF HERR WAGNER GENERALLY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Having read with much interest in your paper of the 1st of March, a dissertation headed "The Poetic Basis of Music," treated by one with whom my own opinions in a great measure correspond, and after carefully reading Herr Wagner's works in the original German, also those of some of his disciples and commentators, I should wish to go a little further into the subject, and endeavour—while refuting his principal doctrine—to do Wagner a little more justice and let him speak for himself. Before proceeding any further or speaking of any music, I think it stands to reason that we have a clear idea what we understand by music and by musical excellence.

Dismissing as frivolous, if not erroneous, the popular definition of music as "a concourse of sweet sounds," I think that of the French philosopher, Jean Jacques Rousseau, is the most complete and exact—viz., "That music is the art of painting that which can be perceived by the ear."

Musical excellence is so manifold, that a definition is almost impossible. A quadrille may (in its way) be as good as an opera, just as an honest, though illiterate, person may be in his way as estimable as a Duke. Still the highest excellence is, and must be, that which combines the most excellences in component parts. I shall take up the subject where Mr. Bennett reduces Dr. Hüffer's theory to two Theses—viz.:

I.—“Music must arise from a poetic impulse, the conditions of which are superior to the demands of music in its independent state.”

II.—“Instrumental music even in its climax of perfection is incapable of the highest expression of impulse, and needs the aid of words.”

I will for the present pass over the first thesis, but the second I am prepared to support in a slightly qualified form, and it will be seen to flow logically from my definition of the highest excellence. Instrumental music has its excellence, which is perhaps equal to vocal music (though who does not at the close of an instrumental piece welcome the rest to the ear a voice or voices introduced bring, and does not find that they have the singular property of abstracting his attention from the accompaniment, except so far as they sustain it—this I only insert as suggestive of some things I fear the length of my subject proper will not allow me to enter into). Still it only contains one excellence, and one excellence cannot be the highest.

This is a logical definition from my definitions. But the public, who in such matters must not be put altogether aside, afford a practical proof of it. The same public who would sit four hours, and enjoy every note of one of Meyerbeer's Operas, at the end of one hour of instrumental music would be tired—at the end of four hours would wish they might never hear a note of music again as long as they lived.

It may be retorted that we are not to pander to the people—true. Still a musical audience that can appreciate Mozart, Meyerbeer, and Beethoven's Operas, may be taken as a fair criterion of a healthy state of ear, which is not the case with all musicians.

Instrumental performers, professional and amateur, particularly players on stringed instruments, become passionately fond of their instruments from the difficulties they have surmounted in acquiring them (often, indeed, let us charitably suppose, mostly unconsciously), and become an intolerable bore to others not so circumstanced. Indeed (while omitting the works of the great masters, who excelled in everything they took in hand) I think we may refer the very origin and continuance of most of the string quartets and quintets to this peculiarity. In some cases this enjoyment is shared by the hearers; thus, in hearing that execrable combination of runs, strums, and trills, Thalberg's “Home, Sweet Home,” a hearer is struck by the labour required to learn it, and is startled and interested at the “sleight of hand” required by it. In other cases the difficulty produces pleasure in both hearer and player; in another way, take for example the fugue in D minor (No. 4) by J. S. Bach, for violin alone; everybody knows how much better it would be on four instruments, indeed a person would say, à priori, that a fugue for one instrument was an impossibility. But the masterly way he gives the principal parts out in his ingenious devices for stretto, pedal, &c., constitute an excellence which will commend itself to the cultured musician to the end of time. The Opera is, and must be, the highest excellence, as I shall further show farther on when I treat of the first thesis temporarily omitted. Therefore I admit that “Instrumental music is incomplete, and needs the aid of words.”

Let us now see how Wagner is the first to contradict himself. In his Opera, “Le Vaisseau Fantôme,” he says his Overture (instrumental of course) is in itself the complete development of the libretto. Thus (sec. 1) is a description of a ship cast among rocks, (sec. 2) the rocks don't suffer it to strike, (sec. 3) the crew sign a compact with the evil one in presence of captain, &c.

What melody, chord, or rhythm can give the idea of the substantives printed in italics? I leave to the reader to discover; I cannot help him in any degree. Here, then, we have him wilfully rushing into “Beethoven's error,” without Beethoven's excuse of ignorance, and “yearning” after truth.

Let us farther see how Wagner embodies this error in his doctrines. He says music (instrumental, presumably from the context I take this from) should produce in one the same effect as a quiet walk at sunset in a wood far from the busy town and at liberty to muse, and (as he farther on says) when the mind can perceive the eloquent silence around (a little farther on he calls it the resounding silence!!) When sufficiently impressed (says he) by the grandeur of all around, and when the mind is divested of all its other preoccupations, it will begin to hear with a distinctness never before possessed by it, the harmonious sounds of the birds and insects that tenant the forest. It will hear what it never before heard, but through all will hear one grand tone which prevades them all—in other words, the infinite melody of nature.

Now suppose one were to take one of these songsters home and teach it to sing in a cage, the result would presumably be—some Italian melody.

What this infinite melody really is in music I will not attempt to explain. I can get no definite idea of it from Wagner, and the passage I have just quoted from is the most luminous he gives on that point.

I may, however, modestly suggest that Wagner's overlearned and excited mind has come to perceive a nonentity, exactly as when we, in the dusk and anxiously waiting, are afraid we imagine we see all sorts of things in the shade, and our hearing acquires a painful degree of sensibility which makes the least noise, real or imaginary, a subject of alarm. Such aberrations of sense are not without precedent. Poor Jullien before he died (insane as we know) constantly affirmed that below any orchestra he could hear the notes C C C C C (being two octaves below the 16 ft. organ pipe) forming a “Sempiternal pedal” note, and which he concluded to be the note produced by the revolutions of our globe on its own axis. I may add that it can be mathematically shown that such a note could have no existence for us, unless our hearing organs were otherwise constructed. Having disposed of the second thesis, I return to the first. Now that music must spring from a poetic impulse which is superior to the demands of music, I cannot exactly admit. I contend that poetry, or to speak more accurately, the poetic idea, has two interpreters—poetry proper and music; but that they are two different order of things which, when combined, produce the highest excellence, but no combination will so blend them as to efface their respective characteristics.

Let us, in a few words, sum up the origin of this schism originated by Wagner, and propagated by Bülow, Schumann, Joachim, and the “dilettanti,” Scoplis and Brenell.

The origin is the reaction from the frivolous Italian school of music, and as such the movement is good, and it may be hoped has given the death-blow to that school (the modern Italian, not that of Cherubini, Sarti, Corelli, Mercadante, &c.) which has proved so ruinous to true art; consequently, as such, we may expect from it a lasting good. What serious musician can tolerate Bellini, Verdi, Donizetti, and Rossini? (“Guillaume Tell” and “Il Barbiere” excepted). Will he not finally conclude that this music is a courtesan which pleases for a time, but which he can never love, or really respect? Let him examine their orchestration, and he will be painfully reminded of the accompaniment to the first tunes in Hamilton's Instruction Book.

We have seen how the reaction has overshot the mark in producing that abnormality called “infinite melody,” which is really the negation of all melody. It remains to see the practical effect of this doctrine.

With Wagner it is easy to cope; he is a fair adversary above board in all his actions, but we have others introducing the thin end of the wedge, and exercising a fatal influence on music.

I shall take Schumann first, being the only really great man of the school. Having started as a composer of rare merit, we see much in his later compositions evincing his intercourse with Wagner; but even here he has not the moral courage to follow this principle to the end, but proceeds cautiously, by semitones, by rests, by all sorts of musical subterfuges, through a long reverie-like symphony. Then when you least expect, a singer declaims some short “hypochondriacal” ditty; and when you still less expected, stops, and the enigmatical symphony dawdles on to its close.

Of the others, suffice it to say that they all lack the regular phrased style (the very soul of true music) of Mozart, Gluck, Meyerbeer, &c., and even of the Italian school, the fervent energy of Beethoven, and the bold harmonies of Handel.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
JOHN W. HINTON, A.B., Mus.B.

THE "MOVEABLE DOH"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—The fixed and moveable Dohs are occupying musical attention at present, and judging from recent notices of the subject in the Musical Times, I thought that reference to the first book printed with prefixed sol-fa letters might not be uninteresting. The following is a copy of the title-page of the volume now before me: "Les CL Pseumes De David, Mis rime Française, par Clement Marot & Theodore de Beze, Auce la prose en marge, comme elle est la Bible & vne Oraison à la fin d'un chacun Pseume, par M. Augustin Marlarot, Auce priuilege du Roy. A Paris, par Pierre Haultin, 1567." The sol-fa syllables prefixed are those commencing each line in the following verse of the Hymn of St. John:—

Ut—queant laxis.
Re—sonare fibris.
Mi—ra gestorum.
Fa—muli thorum.
Sol—ve polluti.
La—bii reatum.
Sancte Johannes.

The major key note, or Do, is marked V, being the old way of making U. The music is in the C clef, the signature of which is sometimes on the first, but generally on the third or fourth lines. A number of the melodies are in the first ecclesiastical tone, or Dorian mode, having the prefix R as the key. There are several instances where the key changes in course of the melody, and the same notes in sequence have different initial letters, showing clearly that the V or key note syllable was moveable 307 years ago. The following is a copy of the music of the 134th Psalm, better known as the "Old Hundredth." It will be noticed that the key note (as in several other instances in the volume) is in the first three phrases initialed F, but the change in the concluding phrase to V confirms the modern ideas of the moveable Doh.

As there is much difference of opinion as to the original form of this celebrated melody, perhaps it may not be out of place to say that the foregoing is an exact copy of the older Psalters; the only early exception I have found being in Dayes' Psalter of 1602, where all the notes are minims, excepting the last notes of the first and second phrases, the first note of the third phrase, and the first and last three notes of the fourth phrase, all being semibreves. There are earlier and later editions of the Psalter of Marot and Beze; but I am not aware of any other edition but that of 1567 having the sol-fa initials.

Yours truly,

D. KIPFEN.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

CHELTEMHAM.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was performed at Mr. Matthews's third Subscription Concert, on the 24th ult., the principal artists being Mrs. Sutton, Miss Jones, Miss Taylor, Mr. Kearton, and Mr. Brandon. The band and chorus numbered about 100. The performance gave much satisfaction to the audience; and great credit is due to Mr. Matthews (who conducted) for the energy he has displayed in training the choir.

DUNDEE.—On the 27th and 28th February, Balfe's Opera, The Bohemian Girl, was performed by the Dundee Amateur Company, in aid of the Celerity Fund. The four leading and all the minor male characters were personated, the choruses sustained, and the entire stage management of the piece directed by the members of this company of local amateurs. For the parts of Arline, the Gipsy Queen, and Buda, the nurse, Madlle. Mariani, Miss Palmer, and Miss Ellen Dalton were respectively engaged. The performance was given in the Kinnaird Hall, fitted up for the purpose with a stage and its accessories. The orchestra consisted of about twenty players, led by Mr. W. H. Cole, and conducted by Mr. S. C. Hirst. Madlle. Mariani appeared to great advantage as Arline, and Miss Palmer's Gipsy Queen was a most powerful rendering of a very trying part. One of the main excellences of the performances lay in the chorus singing. It was always good, and at times most artistic. Altogether, the opera in all its departments—grouping of the supernumeraries, gipsies, soldiers, and courtiers—was the most completely satisfactory this company has ever given.

EDINBURGH.—In connection with the visit of Mr. Mapleson's Italian Opera Troupe, two excellent concerts were given by the Edinburgh Choral Union to crowded houses. The first, on February 21st, comprised in the first part a selection of solos and choruses from Handel's works, and in the second part, operatic and other solos. The principal artists were Mdle. Titiens, Mdme. Sinico, Mdme. Trebelli-Bettini, Mdle. Macvitz, Signori Bettini, Borella, Perkin, and Agnesi. Mr. F. H. Cowen presided at the pianoforte. At the second concert, on the 14th ult., Handel's Messiah was given, with complete orchestra, and Mdle. Titiens, Mdme. Trebelli-Bettini, Signor Fabrini and Signor Agnesi as principals. The chorus, which numbered about 250 voices, sang throughout with great care and intelligence; and Mr. Adam Hamilton, who conducted at both concerts, deserves great credit for the high state of efficiency to which he has brought them. The organist was Mr. T. Hewlett, Mus.Bac., Oxon, whose playing contributed greatly to the success of the concerts.—PROFESSOR OAKELEY gave an Organ Recital in the Music Class Room, on the 12th ult., when an excellent programme was performed to a large audience. Bach's prelude and fugue in E minor were remarkably well played by a student. Professor Oakeley's song, "Tis not alone that thou art fair," was encored, when he played his little canzonet, "Sempre più t'amo."—The seventh annual concert of the University Musical Society was given on Wednesday evening, the 18th ult., in the Music Hall, before a large audience. The number of choristers, amounting to 200, have attained a standard of singing far beyond that of former years, and an equal improvement is observable in the orchestra. Professor Oakeley, on coming forward to assume the conductor's place, was greeted with demonstrative applause from the audience and the choristers. The concert, which was miscellaneous, opened with the students' song, "Condiscipuli Canamus," composed by Professor Oakeley for the concert of 1869 to Latin words by Professor MacLagan. Mr. Galletly, a student, played, with Mr. Carl Hamilton, Beethoven's sonata in F, Op. 17, for pianoforte and violoncello, originally written for piano and horn. Beethoven's first Symphony commenced the second part of the programme; and another promising young student-pianist, Mr. Coates, played Schumann's "Schlummerlied," and Schubert's Impromptu in A flat with great neatness, light touch, and clear articulation. The concert, which was highly successful, ended with the "National Anthem."

EVERTON.—The annual concert of the Choral Society was given on Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., in the Schoolroom, which was well filled by a large and fashionable audience. Under the conductorship of Mr. Hamilton White, the organist of the Parish Church, East Retford, the Society has made great progress, and the choral pieces were given with general excellence. Songs and duets were contributed by Miss Annie Williamson, Miss Naylor, the Misses Postlethwaite, and Miss Roe, assisted by Mr. Dimock of Retford; and Mr. White delighted his audience by playing a pianoforte solo.

GUERNSEY.—Mr. R. Forsey Brion gave his first concert on Thursday evening, the 12th ult., at the Clifton Hall, before a large audience.

The first part of the programme was miscellaneous, comprising Overtures, excellently performed by the military band, under the direction of Mr. J. J. Murdoch; songs and duets, by Miss Joubert, the Rev. C. Darroch, and Mr. Julius Carey; and pianoforte solos by Mr. and Mrs. Brion. The second part was devoted to Mr. Brion's Cantata, Marathon, the solo parts in which were admirably sustained by Miss M. G. Sheppard and Messrs. G. Sheppard and C. Körner. The choruses were exceedingly well rendered by the choir; and the entire performance was most successful. The Cantata, which is scored for a military band (there being no strings on the island), was very well accompanied.

LEAMINGTON.—Mr. Julian Adams gave a very successful Chamber Concert on Saturday, February the 28th. Mendelssohn's pianoforte trio, in D minor, in which Mr. Adams had the co-operation of Herr Otto Bernhard (violin) and Mr. Turner (violinello), was rendered with great vigour and marked emphasis. Another important work of the same class, Mayseider's trio in B flat, was also admirably played by the above-named executants. The vocal portion of the concert was sustained by Miss Katharine Poyntz and Mr. Henry Pyatt, the latter being encored in Rockstro's song, "The Reefer." The great attraction, however, was the solo performance of Mr. Julian Adams; his bravura style of playing and mechanism being fully displayed in a Fantasia on Russian Airs, which was vociferously encored, when he responded by playing a musical sketch, of his own composition, "Les Patineurs." The Sonata in G, for pianoforte and violin (Beethoven), was also performed with finished execution.

LEE.—An amateur concert, in aid of a local benevolent case, was given on the 27th February in the Belmont Park Rooms, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles J. Frost. The programme consisted of part-songs, trios, and songs. Mr. Frost's new part-song, "The Winds," was rendered by Miss Maberley, Miss Austin, Mr. Law, and Rev. John Kemphorne; and Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's charming little trio, "In the sight of the unwise," by the Misses Bumpus and Miss Austin. Mr. Frost's playing (from memory) of Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 10, No. 1, in C minor, and Schubert's F minor Impromptu, gave unqualified satisfaction. The concert was very successful.

LEICESTER.—The Leicester Musical Society gave the last concert for the season 1873-4, in the Temperance Hall on Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., before a large audience, when Mendelssohn's Oratorio Elijah was performed. The principal vocalists were Madame Thaddeus Wells, Miss D'Alton, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Santley. Madame Wells was very efficient in the part of the Widow. Miss D'Alton was also very successful, her rendering of "Oh, rest in the Lord," eliciting the warmest plaudits. Mr. Santley was in magnificent voice, and he sang the part of Elijah with all his well-known power and vigour, his declamation in the recitatives, and his exquisite interpretation of the airs being characterised by all those varied excellences which have made his name so famous. Mr. Guy executed his share of the solos in a highly satisfactory manner. In one or two of the trios, as well as in the double quartets, the principal vocalists were ably assisted by the Misses Deacon and Clowes, and Messrs. Adcock and F. M. Ward. The various choruses were exceedingly well executed by the Society. The performance of the band, which was especially strengthened for the occasion, was equally satisfactory, the accompaniments being on the whole as finished as they were judicious. Mr. Nicholson officiated as conductor.

LIVERPOOL.—On Wednesday, the 25th February, a Complimentary Concert was given by the Philharmonic Society to their excellent secretary, Mr. Henry Sudlow, aided by the organist, Mr. Best, and Sir Julius Benedict conducting. The solo artists were Miss Blanche Cole, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Santley, who all volunteered their valuable services; the result being a fine performance of the Messiah to a crowded and enthusiastic audience.—The fourth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 3rd ult., when Spohr's Oratorio, Calvary, and Haydn's 16th Mass were given. Principal artists—Miss Edith Wynne, Madlle. Enriquez, Mr. George Perren and Mr. J. R. Alsop. Spohr's fine work was performed here for the first time, and deeply impressed the musical part of the audience. The choruses were well sung; and among the soli portions of the Oratorio, the trio for female voices, "Jesus, heavenly Master," deserves special mention, also the expressive rendering by Miss Edith Wynne of the recitative, "Hast thou for me a look," and the air following, "When this scene of trouble closes." The performance of Haydn's Mass was throughout bright and effective; the solo parts being finely given, and the chorus and band excellent.—The 77th annual dinner of the Apollo Glee Club took place on the 5th ult., David Jones, Esq., president, in the chair; Wm. Laidlaw, Esq., and Thomas Armstrong, Esq., vice-chairmen. The Club was stated to be in a very satisfactory position; and the glees were rendered in a very efficient manner by the performing members, Mr. Skeaf presiding at the piano.—The fourth (and last) of the present series, on the plan of the London Monday Popular Concerts, was given at the Philharmonic Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 11th ult. Executants—Herr Joachim, 1st violin; Herr L. Ries, 2nd violin; Mr. Zerbinì, viola; Signor Piatti, violinello; solo pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé; vocalist, Mr. Santley; accompanist, Mr. Zerbinì. The programme contained Schubert's quartett in D minor, for strings; song, "O Swallow" (Piatti), with violinello obbligato accompaniment, encored; solo violin, "Sarabande" and "Tambourin," from Sonata in D major, No. 3, with pianoforte accompaniment (Leclair), encored, and replaced by a "Hungarian Dance" (Brahms), Sonata in A minor, Op. 42, for pianoforte alone (Schubert); Mozart's quartett in A major, No. 5, for strings; songs, "The Shepherd's Lay" (Mendelssohn), and "To Anthea" (Hahn), which was encored. The last work in this admirable selection was Haydn's trio, in G major, for pianoforte, violin, and violinello, performed to perfection. The whole concert afforded, indeed, great enjoyment to an appreciative audience.—The fifth Subscription Concert for the year of the Philharmonic Society, on the 24th ult., was an exceedingly fine performance of Elijah. Principal artists—Madme. Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and

Mr. Santley; assisted in the trio and quartets by some of the practical members of the Society: Mrs. Keef, Miss Bennett, Mr. Armstrong, &c.; the whole being a thoroughly admirable and artistic rendering of one of the noblest musical creations that the world has ever seen.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—A successful concert was given by the Vocal Society, on the 23rd ult., at the Town Hall. The programme comprised Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, and a miscellaneous selection; the soprano solos in the former being taken by Madame Thaddeus Wells, and the tenor by Mr. William White. The Hall was well filled, and the performance was much appreciated by the audience.

MANCHESTER.—At Mr. Charles Hallé's concert, on the 26th February, one of the largest audiences of the season assembled to listen to Mr. Arthur Sullivan's new Oratorio, The Light of the World, conducted by the composer. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mrs. Warren, Messrs. E. Lloyd, Santley, and C. Lovatt were the principal vocalists. Mr. Sullivan received considerable applause both at the commencement and end of his work. The favourite choruses were, "Glory to God," "In Rama was there a voice heard," and the final chorus. The unaccompanied quartet, "Yea, though I walk," was unanimously encored. Madame Patey had two solos of high excellence, "Weep not," and "The Lord is risen." After the performance, Mr. Sullivan was invited to supper by some of his admirers, and, through Mr. Fox Turner, presented with an antique silver goblet, and a purse containing two hundred sovereigns.—On the 5th ult., Mr. Hallé gave his last miscellaneous concert for this season. The programme included several novelties, and also a repetition of Liszt's effective arrangement for pianoforte and orchestra, of Schubert's Fantasia in C.—On the 12th ult., Mr. Hallé's twentieth and last concert of the series took place, when Bach's Passion Music was performed, with Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Patey, and Mr. Santley, Miss Thorley and Mr. N. Dumville as principal vocalists. Mr. Walker was, as usual, at the organ, Mr. E. Hecht, the excellent chorus-master, presided at the pianoforte, and accompanied some of the recitatives, and Mr. Hallé conducted.—The Vocal Society gave the last concert, of the seventh season, on Wednesday, the 11th ult., in the Gentlemen's Concert Hall. The programme, which was miscellaneous, contained Haydn's sacred Oratorio The Passion, which was very creditably performed, although suffering from having only a pianoforte accompaniment, the prelude, and interludes, being wisely omitted. Mozart's Motett, "Beatus Vir," and a number of well-known songs, duets, trios, and part-songs, were also well rendered, and great praise is due to Mr. H. Wilson, the musical director, for the success of the Society. Mr. and Miss Dumville were the vocalists.

NORWICH.—The Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union gave the first concert of the season on Thursday evening, the 5th ult. The work selected for performance was Haydn's Imperial Mass (No. 3, in D). Miss Rayner sang the soprano music very carefully, and was well received. The contralto and tenor soli in the Mass were sung by Miss Julia Richardson and Mr. Minns, and Mr. Armes was very effective in the bass solos. The band, with Mr. Wilkin as leader, was most obedient to Dr. Bunnnett's baton. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous. The Andante from Schubert's "Tragic" Symphony was very well played by the band, and some two-part songs, a chorus of Beethoven's and the part-song from Purcell's King Arthur, exceedingly well rendered by the choir.

SHEFFIELD.—Mons. Widor gave the third of his Organ Recitals, on Thursday evening, the 12th ult. in the Albert Hall. In addition to Mr. Widor, the services of Mr. Nicholson (flute), Mr. J. T. Hill (violin), Mr. John Whitehead (violinello), and Mr. G. H. Smith (pianoforte) had been secured. The programme was well selected. Mr. Widor's playing throughout the evening was most successful, and his power as a composer was shown in a "Serenade" for the organ, piano, violin, violinello, and flute, which was capitally executed, the organ being used most effectively in sustaining the accompaniment.—On the 16th ult., Mr. Charles Harvey gave a sacred and miscellaneous concert in the Albert Hall. The vocalists were Mrs. Warren, of Manchester, and Mr. Thornton Wood, with a chorus of twenty-four voices, and Mr. J. W. Phillips as accompanist. Mr. F. Archer, organist of the Alexandra Palace, played the grand organ. The first part of the programme consisted of airs and choruses from Judas Maccabeus, Gounod's "Nazareth," and the Russian National Anthem. The second part was entirely secular, and included three organ solos, the Overture to Semiramide, a "Fantasia on Scotch Airs," and the concluding march, "La Reine de Saba" (Gounod). Mr. Harvey conducted.—On the 26th ult., Messrs. Hattersley and Co., the harmonium manufacturers of this town, gave a miscellaneous Concert and Organ Recital in the Albert Hall. Mons. Guilmant, of Paris, Mrs. Blagrove (pianoforte) and Mr. Blagrove (concertina) were much applauded in their several solos. Madme. Lemmens-Sherrington was the vocalist, and her singing of "Spinning," and the "Shadow Song," from Dinorah, was much appreciated. The choir, consisting of sixteen voices, gave the choral glee, "In a cell or cavern deep," and the part-song, "The evening star," in a highly creditable manner. Mr. J. W. Phillips was the accompanist.

SKELMORLIE.—An interesting lecture was given on Wednesday, the 11th ult., by Mr. J. E. Senior, organist of the Parish Church, on the two great composers, "Handel and Mozart." The illustrations were rendered by the choir, assisted by some friends. "The Harmonious Blacksmith," and a Rondo by Mozart, were played by Mr. Senior.

STAFFORD.—On Monday, the 16th ult., a concert was given in the Lyceum by the members of the Amateur Choral Society, numbering above fifty performers, and conducted by Mr. Henry Deakin. The first part was devoted to selections from Mozart's 12th Mass, the Pastoral Symphony, and Hallelujah Chorus from the Messiah. The second part was entirely secular, and opened with the overture to Zampa, which was exceedingly well played by the band, and encored. The glees, "Here in cool grot," and "Who shall be fairest," were well sung, and Mr. Bagnall was encored in his song, "The Rose, Thistle, and Shamrock," with band accompaniment. The proceeds amounting to £7 15s. were devoted to the funds of this new Society.

Great praise is due to Mr. William Wildes, the Honorary Secretary, for his unwearied exertions on behalf of the Society.

WEXFORD.—On Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., a testimonial, consisting of a costly piece of plate, was presented to Mdme. Rivelli, bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Madame Rivelli, by her Choir, and a few friends, as a sincere token of their cordial appreciation of her services as Organist and Choir Teacher of St. Seiskar Church, Wexford, March 3rd, 1874."

YARMOUTH.—A concert was given at the Masonic Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 4th ult., by the members of Mr. Deane's choral class. The first part consisted of Haite's Cantata, Abraham's Sacrifice, a work never before produced in this vicinity, and which deserves to be better known. The music allotted to Abraham was effectively rendered by Mr. C. Panchen (Bass). Miss Botwright, Miss E. Cole, and Messrs. Bly and Smith, also acquitted themselves most creditably. We must not omit to mention the instrumental piece, "The ascent of the mountain," which was beautifully given by the band. The second part was miscellaneous. The instrumental quartet from Robert le Diable was warmly encored. Miss Hulley played first violin, Mr. Jones second violin, Mr. Deane violoncello, Mr. A. Howard bass; Mrs. Panchen accompanied; and Mr. Deane conducted.

YORK.—The last of the series of winter concerts was given on Tuesday night, the 10th ult., when an instrumental programme was performed in a manner that gave the utmost pleasure to all present. Mozart's charming quartet in D minor was a special feature of the evening. Mr. Hallé played Beethoven's E flat Sonata, Op. 31, in his usual facile style and finished manner; and Madame Norman-Neruda contributed a solo on the violin. The quintet of Schumann's, in E flat, ended the programme. Miss Ferrari was the vocalist.

A SERVICE for the TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in the key of A, composed by FREDERICK ILIFFE Mus. Bac., Oxon., Fellow of the College of Organists, London, and Organist of St.
Wilfrid's Church, Kibworth. Price 4½d.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS, No. 1, set to Original
Chants, price 2d., composed by FREDERICK ILIFFE, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Fellow of the College of Organists, London.

"In writing these Chants for the Te Deum I have divided it into its doctrinal parts. The 'first' thirteen verses are a Creed setting forth the doctrine of the Trinity. The 'second' part beginning with the words 'Thou art the King of glory,' and the four following verses, set forth the Divinity and Incarnation of the Son. The solemn verse 'We believe that Thou shalt come,' expresses our belief in our Lord's second coming. A separate Chant is provided for this verse. The 'third' part, beginning with the words 'We therefore pray Thee' is a Litany.

"The Rev. Thomas Keble was the first, I believe, who suggested this ancient mode of dividing the Te Deum into these several parts, and I have adhered to this arrangement as far as possible; there is, however, one exception, and that is in the first part of the verse, 'Holy, Holy, Holy,' which seems to me to demand a different kind of expression to any of the other verses. I may also say that I had written another Chant of a more pensive character for the 'Litany part,' but it was thought advisable to go back to the melody of the first Chant, in order to avoid many changes."—Prefatory Remarks by the Composer.

A NEW WORK FOR AMATEUR ORGANISTS.

In publishing the above, Chappell and Co. feel they are supplying a want long felt by Amateur Organists, as this work removes the difficulty amateurs experience in performing Handel's songs from the scores. Being published in three lines, the solo parts and accompaniments are easily and effectively distributed. 28800

The words of each song being printed upon the top line will be found of great service to the performer in giving proper expression to the songs.

CHAPPELL & CO.

Have now on View the largest Stock in London of PIANOFORTES by all the great Makers, of ALEXANDRE HARMONIUMS, greatly improved, and of ORGAN HARMONIUMS. Any of these Instruments can be Hired for Three Years, and, provided each Quarterly Instalment shall have been regularly paid in advance, the instrument becomes the property of the hirer at the expiration of the third year.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM.

SOLID OAK CASE, FIVE OCTAVES, AND TWO FOOT-BOARDS.

The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.

The instruments now offered to the public will be found divested of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing which renders the quality rich and organlike.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

HARGREAVES'S PROFESSIONAL AND CONNOISSEURS' HARMONIUM.
(REGISTERED.)

The following Testimonial from Boyton Smith, Esq., in reference to
No. 3 of this model, is addressed to all who desire the most satisfactory instrument of the Harmonium class ever yet offered to the public:—

"Dear Sir,

"The Harmonium I had of you some time since is

"The most satisfactory instrument of the class I ever had.

"The mechanical arrangement

"Is excellent, and has never been out of order.

"While from the

"Agreeable quality and variety of its tone, it is ever a pleasure to play upon it.

"I have never tired of it, as I have of other kinds; and it is

"Its capability of producing continued new effects that renders
it truly as you style it

"THE PROFESSOR'S HARMONIUM."

"My Violoncello stop is the wonder of every one,

"So close is the resemblance.

"Yours faithfully,

"Weymouth, 1872."

"BOYTON SMITH.

Another Model, constructed with 2 manuals, surpasses all Harmoniums hitherto constructed, in offering some distinct qualities in voicing from the most delicate upwards, and some novelties.

HARGREAVES'S AMERICAN IRON FRAME PIANO
Has a double iron frame cast in one piece; cross strings, suspended soundboard: it is the ne plus ultra of Piano construction, excelling all others made with wooden bracings, or mixed iron and wood bracings, falsely called Iron Frame Pianos. It is especially addressed to all those wishing to possess the finest toned Instrument that money can purchase.

BOUDOIR GRAND, on the latest American system, cast iron frame and bars, three strings, oblique and cross strings, improved overstrung scale, called Hargreaves's American Iron-Frame Cross-strings Pianoforte; surpassing all Pianos made on the usual system, in quality, quantity, and duration of tone. These three qualities command instant recognition as soon as it is touched. Price, in the above-named length, 110 guineas.

W. HARGREAVES, Importer of Foreign Pianos, supplies the choicest productions of the greatest houses of the capitals of Europe.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS. Sole Importer.—CHARLES RUSSELL.

Concluded.

Nor having our modern signatures to their modes, the ancient Greeks cut out seven species of octave from the seven modes, as though by two lines drawn across the modes, so as to enclose the seven species of octave; thus—

Tone of 7 Chords.

To accompany a mode apply the signature to the tone of seven chords, and tune to the notes of Position of the species of octave of the same name as the mode to be accompanied. The signature will agree with the species in showing the tunings of the tone of seven chords.

The seven Powers of the seven species of octave are next set down without their seven Positions to indicate the actual sounds. Those will easily be understood as they appeared in the last example, although they are now omitted and not expressed.

In each of the seven Powers, the interval a-h appears. This interval travels obliquely across the seven species. It is the sun of the system of modes, and their octave species (tones). This sun is at one solstice in the Hypo-Dorian, at the Equator in the Dorian, at the other solstice in the Mixo-Lydian. The two Tropics are on either side of the Equator. The seven species of octave, as forming part of their modes, are as the signs of the Musical Zodiac.

The Greek word Trepo, to turn, supplies in music Tropos, a mode; and in Astronomy, the well understood word Tropic. The association is not remarkable, as all arts and sciences, were, in ancient times, included in the word music.

The correctness of the application of the word Tropos, will be noticed after the following explanation. Every mode was rigidly confined to its own notes of Power and Position; therefore, if any other note for the melody was wanted, he who wanted it turned about into another mode, where it had existence. The melody forthwith entered that mode; and so on from one mode to another, as occasion required.

In appropriating certain parts of the ancient Greek musical system, "the Church" made the compound called "Church Tones;" these, as time progressed, were patched with other fragments from the same source.

This compound consisted of the notes of Power of each of the seven species of octave, being taken as notes of Position, instead of notes of Power, as used by the ancient Greeks; and rejecting all of the modes except the Hypo-Dorian, out of which the seven were then carved.

Place the notes of Power of the seven species of octave of the ancient Greeks, in contrast with the seven Church tones, thus:—

THE SEVEN POWERS OF THE SEVEN SPECIES OF OCTAVE OF THE ANCIENT GREEKS. (POSITIONS ADDED.)

Concert Pitch.

The above shows how the ancient Greek names and concert pitch were confounded and misplaced in the Church Tones.

In this state, these Church tones made some approach to the arrangement of the ancient Greeks, as to modes, as well as to species of octave; but of a spurious character. So we find some writers call them modes; others call them tones; and some call them one or the other, or both.

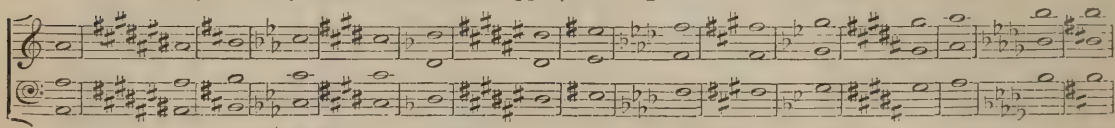

The confusion into which the "ancient Church modes" has fallen, has been the cause for much lamenting. They were a confusion, from the time they were hatched, and should now be thrown aside as an abortion, hitherto respected through a groveling veneration and superstitious ignorance.

Guido favoured a return to the ancient Greek system, when he wrote placing the Ut (since changed to Do) upon three positions, F C and g, the only three key notes and scales in use in his time, and which gave us our three cleffs

The Tonic Sol-fa system favours still more a return to that ancient system.

Modern writers affect indifference to the ancient Greek system of music as obsolete—probably through not having studied it—yet its influence has steadily spread, and is still progressing without their being aware of the fact.

All the ancient Greek modes are minor; their Powers being all identical in form.

The only major scale is that found in the Lydian species of octave; and which the notes of Position show is in the key of A major. The Lydian was a great favourite with the ancient Greeks, which is significant that they were as much affected in the direction of a major scale as the moderns; showing the force of natural impulse over orthodox ratios of the ancient Greek mathematicians; who settled that form of Power, which is applied to all their modes, and to the pianofortes, and organs of the present day as exhibited by their white keys in connection with our A B C, or simple alphabetical notation of music.

Tonos (Tone) is from Teino, to stretch or strain. That which the ancients stretched or strained was called a chord, from chorde, a string of gut. So that a tone in its primitive musical sense is a string of gut in a state of tension, and nothing more.

A string of gut being capable of giving out a musical sound, and also of receiving a variety of tensions—each giving out a different sound; these to appeal to the understanding through the eyesight were set out in diagram in which the sounds appeared as lines and the intervals as spaces. Tone then became a technical term of expansive signification applicable to many things other than a string of gut in a state of tension.

This expansiveness will be noticed on mentioning a few instances.

Tone is a sound—an interval—a quality of voice, and a compass of voice; the most striking, as a connecting link between ancient and modern, being the Baritone (Basstone), the light bass of the present day.

As connected with Teino, Tone is the blending of colours; being the stretching of one colour over the domain of another. Tone of health is the condition of physical tension.

In church music now the organ is the Tone, it being capable of guiding the performance in any mode, that is, in any key and scale in which the music may happen to be written.

A GREAT feature in the Handel Festival, which will take place in the ensuing month at the Crystal Palace, will be the division of the programme, on the "Selection" day, into a sacred and secular part, portions of the "Utrecht Jubilate" being contained in the first, and the most effective pieces from the "Ode to St. Cecilia" and an Organ Concerto in the second. The "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt" will both be given, as usual; and, as Sir Michael Costa is again to direct a band and chorus of 4,000, there can be little doubt that the Festival of 1874 will prove in every respect as successful as any of its four predecessors.

WE hear that a newspaper in the Far West, in mentioning the advent of a popular actor, says that he will show the people "how Shakespeare ought to be slung." We fear that this American phraseology is rapidly creeping into many of our own musical criticisms, for we have lately read expressions of this kind in journals professing to be artistic; and in a notice of the performance of an Oratorio, in a Scotch paper, the critic, in an evident ecstasy of delight at the music, says "We need not remind the members that an Oratorio does not usually end when the dress circle skedaddles."

THE National Music Meetings, announced to be given in June at the Crystal Palace, have been postponed until next summer. A letter, addressed to the Times, from the Secretary states that this decision has been arrived at "in the interests of the movement," firstly because "many of the competing choirs have failed to comply with Rule 12, according to which their approximate strength should be already declared," and secondly in consequence of the "practical difficulty of carrying out two such undertakings as the Handel Festival and the National Music Meetings during the same week." As the latter reason is alone sufficient to justify the step which has been taken, we regret that it was not foreseen; for already, as the letter says, several of the Choirs are "actively employed in preparation." Next year, however, it is asserted that the competitions will be resumed "in their integrity, including the solo and other classes originally opened;" and, as the public interest will not be then divided between two important events, we may reasonably hope for a more successful result than could possibly have been achieved had the Meetings taken place as originally intended.

THE hundred and thirty-sixth anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians took place at Willis's Rooms on the 27th ult., His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in the chair. In a speech remarkable for unostentatious display, the Royal Chairman advocated most warmly the interests of the Society, and expressed a hope that the benevolent efforts of the Association might be still more extended in the future. The health of "The President of the evening, Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family," was proposed by the Earl of Dartmouth, and the toast of "The Army, the Navy, and the Auxiliary Forces" was eloquently responded to by General Knollys for the Army, and by His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh for the Navy. Lord Hampton proposed the patrons, subscribers, and honorary officers of the Society, and Sir Thomas Gladstone returned thanks. The artists who assisted at the festival were Miss Antoinette Sterling, Signor Caravoglia, Mr. W. G. Cusins (pianoforte), and the London Vocal Union. The subscriptions announced by Mr. Stanley Lucas, the Secretary, amounted to £1000, including £100 from the Prince of Wales.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE concerts during the month at this establishment have been highly interesting. Reinecke's clever Overture in D produced a marked effect, and will no doubt be again heard. The Pianoforte Concerto of Edward Grieg, excellently played by Mr. Dannreuther, may also be mentioned as a work of much originality, the young Norwegian composer having evidently dared to think for himself, instead of imitating the style of those who have preceded him. The Concerto was received with the warmest applause. We must award, too, a word of commendation for the brilliant performance of Litolf's "Concerto Symphonie," by Mr. Oscar Beringer, who is gradually, but surely, making his way to the foremost rank of pianists. Madame Noriny has proved a welcome addition to the vocalists, and some effective pieces have been contributed by the "Swedish Ladies Quartette." The series of concerts concluded with Herr Manns's benefit on the 25th ult., when Beethoven's Choral Symphony was given, before a large audience.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

IN our last number we gave a notice of the successful début of Madlle. Lodi, and have now unfortunately to record that ill health has compelled her to abandon for a while her profession and return to Italy. Madlle. Risarelli, who made her first appearance as Gilda in "Rigoletto," was noticed by us some time ago on her performance with an Italian company at St. George's Hall. Her voice is somewhat faded, but, as we have already said, she sings well and her reception was highly favourable, especially in the trying scene in the Duke's Palace. Signor Ramini, one of the vocalists announced in Mr. Mapleson's prospectus, has achieved a decided success as Lionello in "Marta," his singing of the popular "M' appari," particularly, eliciting well deserved applause. "La Favorita" brought forth two new singers, Signor De Reschi, as Alfonso, and Signor Giulio Perkins, as Baldassare, the former creating an effect which we think likely to be increased during the season, and the latter (who is already known as a concert-singer) displaying a fine, though somewhat hard, bass voice; both vocalists will, we think, prove a decided acquisition to the company. Madlle. Alwina Valleria has been most cordially received, especially as Lady Enrichetta, in "Marta," and the lovers of classical music have been attracted on more than one occasion by the fine performance of Madlle. Titiens as Leonora, in Beethoven's "Fidelio," in which opera, Herr Conrad Behrens, an excellent bass, has made a profound impression in the part of the gaoler Rocco.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THIS establishment opened for the season on the 31st March, Madlle. Heilbron creating a good, but not great, effect in the part of Violetta, in "La Traviata." The reappearances of Madlle. Marimon, Madlle. D'Angeri, and especially of Madlle. Albani, have been highly successful; but the principal event of the month has unquestionably been the début of Signor Bolis, in the arduous part of Arnoldo, in "Guillaume Tell." In this vocalist we seem at length to have found an adequate representative of a character which tests the highest qualities both of an actor and singer; and that he gradually won the warmest demonstrations of applause from an audience not usually predisposed to the display of enthusiastic feeling is a proof that his success was thoroughly legitimate. In the duet with Tell, and especially in the great Trio, he proved the possession not only of a fine and well trained voice, but of much truthful and dramatic feeling, and in the well known declamatory "Corriam, voliam" he elicited an unanimous recall. We may also mention the first appearance of Madlle. Cottino, who in the small part of Inez, in "La Favorita," evinced decided promise. Signor Vianesi has proved so efficient a conductor that we should be glad to see him retain his post undisturbed throughout the season.

BRITISH ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

THE production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Symphony in E has been one of the most noteworthy events of the season, and indeed may be said to have atoned for many shortcomings in a series of concerts to which, by their national title English composers have a right to look for encouragement and support. The first movement of this work is a masterpiece of writing, but is too elaborate to produce its true effect upon a first hearing. The Serenade Andante, in C, has a most attractive principal subject, and is scored with consummate knowledge of effect for the wood and string band, in combination with the harp. An Old English Gavotte and Musette take the place of the usual Minuet and Trio, and these pleased so much as to be re-demanded. The final movement contains a constant recurrence to the opening theme, so that a connection is thus established, which has the merit of linking the Symphony together as a whole; but nothing more than a favourable verdict can be pronounced upon a work which claims, from its proportions, a patient and close study of each movement separately. The composer was called for unanimously at the conclusion of the Symphony, and bowed his acknowledgments from the orchestra. Mr. Howell's performance of a Concertino for violoncello and orchestra, by Kummer, was better than the composition deserved; but a Romance and Tarantella, by Berthold Tours, excellently played on the violin by Mr. Carrodus, fully merited all the applause it received—even the solid encore for the spirited Tarantella. A clever Overture, by J. F. Barnett, called "A Winter's Tale," and a well written "Scherzo," by Sir Julius Benedict, were given at the final concert on the 8th ult., when the Duke of Edinburgh, the Patron of the Society, was present.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE programme of the first concert on the 25th March, commenced with Handel's "Concerto Grosso," No. 11, in A, a work highly interesting to a musical audience, not only as a specimen of the time when "Concerto" meant a composition for a small stringed orchestra, but as a piece full of melodious beauty and masterly writing. The prominent passages for violins and violoncello, in the able hands of Herr Straus, M. Buziau, and Mr. W. Pettit lost none of their effect. The rest of the programme was composed of well worn works which are always welcome; and when we say that amongst these were Mendelssohn's "Scotch Symphony," and Beethoven's Violin Concerto, which we scarcely ever heard Herr Joachim play so well, we need hardly add that the selection afforded the utmost gratification to the listeners. The vocalist was Madame Otto-Alvsleben. At the second concert, on the 20th ult., Madlle. Marie Krebs produced a marked effect by her performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, her reading of this great work showing an intelligence which will doubtless place her in the foremost rank of pianists in this country. Spohr's Symphony "Die Weihe der Töne," and Schumann's fine overture, "Genoveva," were the orchestral works in the first part, and Mendelssohn's music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream," occupied the whole of the second part. The vocalists were Miss Sophie Ferrari and Miss Antoinette Sterling. The concert was by "special desire," the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and other members of the Royal Family being present. Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted both the concerts noticed with his accustomed ability.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The competition for the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship took place on Saturday, the 18th ult., at the Institution, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square, the examiners being the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. W. G. Cusins, Mr. F. B. Jewson, and Mr. H. C. Lunn. The results were as follows:—Charlton T. Speer, elected; F. W. W. Bampfylde, highly commended; T. Sylver and J. C. Andrews, commended. One candidate, not having passed the Literary Examination, conducted by the Rev. Robinson Duckworth, M.A., was precluded from the competition.—The competition for the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship took place at the Institution on Saturday the 25th ult., the examiners being the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. Walter Macfarren, and Signor Randegger. Miss Ann Elizabeth Bolingbroke was the successful candidate.

IN aid of the Mendelssohn Scholarship Fund, a Soirée Musicale was given on the 27th March, at the residence of Mr. Frederick Lehmann, Berkeley Square. The music consisted exclusively of the works of Mendelssohn, the instrumental artists being Herr Joachim, Madame Norman-Neruda, Herr Straus, Herr L. Ries, Mr. Zerbin, Signor Piatti, and Mr. Charles Hallé, and the vocalists, Madame Otto-Alvsleben and Miss Antoinette Sterling. Sir Julius Benedict conducted. The whole of the pieces were played to perfection, and thoroughly appreciated by a large audience, the two movements from an unfinished Quartet (posthumous) especially, creating a marked effect.

THE annual pupil concert of the North-East London Academy of Music was held at the Manor Rooms, Hackney, on Tuesday evening, the 7th ult., before a large audience. The students most worthy of notice were Misses King, Clements, Morgan, Hewett, Lawrence, Rogers, Matthews, Marshall, Messrs. Prickett, Smith, and the little daughter and son of the Principal (Miss and Master West), who were highly successful in a pianoforte duet.

ON Good Friday evening a performance of Handel's "Messiah," was given at the Town Hall, Hackney, under the direction of Mr. W. West. The principal vocalists were Miss Ellen Horne, Madame Clara West, Miss Ellen Standish, Mr. Albert James and Mr. Thomas Lawler. The choruses were supported by the North London Choral Association—conductor, Mr. M. R. Bassett. The band and choir were about 400 in number. The Hall was crowded in every part, and the performance was highly satisfactory.

ON Good Friday evening a performance of Handel's "Messiah," was given in Burdett Hall, Limehouse, under the direction of Mr. F. A. Bridge. The principal vocalists were Miss de Seale Penson, Miss Fanny Emerton, Mr. Arthur Thomas, Mr. Grimsby Jopp R.A.M., and Mr. F. A. Bridge: Solo trumpet, Mr. Gay; grand pianoforte, Mrs. Elizabeth Stirling; harmonium, Mr. John G. Boardman. The chorus consisted of nearly 150 voices. The room was crowded, and the performance throughout most successful.

AN evening concert was given in St. Thomas's Hall, South Hackney, on Thursday the 26th March, by Messrs. Prenton and Hamilton, assisted by Miss Denham, Miss Claremont, Mr. John Byron, Mr. Alfred Mori, Mr. H. Gordon, Mr. H. P. Matthews, Mr. Arthur Stuart, L.A.M., and Mr. Walter Hastings. Miss Denham sang "Sweet Nightingale," very effectively, Miss Claremont's contralto voice was heard to great advantage in "The skipper and his boy," Mr. Percy Hamilton rendered the songs allotted him with taste, Mr. Prenton's singing of "A freshening breeze," and "Over the rolling sea," was much appreciated, and Mr. Arthur Stuart, an alto of much promise, gave with good effect "The minstrel boy." Several part-songs were sung during the evening by the London Quartet Union. Mr. Walter Hastings was an efficient accompanist.

WE understand that a new Sacred Cantata, "Supplication and Praise," by Dr. Sloman, will most probably be performed at the Albert Hall, during this season.

A SUCCESSFUL concert was given at the School-rooms adjoining the Church of St. Simon Zelotes, Chelsea, on the 17th ult., by the Choir of the Church, under the direction of Mrs. R. L. Batty, organist, assisted by Miss Michie, Miss Harker, Madame Waudby, and Miss Matthews, pianist. The programme consisted of glees, part-songs, and solos, all of which were well performed; but we may especially commend the rendering of Barnby's "Sweet and low," Spofforth's "Hail, smiling morn," and Pinsuti's "Good night, beloved," by the choir. Miss Michie and Miss Harker received encores for their songs; and a portion of Haydn's Symphony, No. 4, arranged as a pianoforte duet, was played by Miss Matthews and Mrs. Batty. Miss Hogg and Miss Nash (two young pupils of Mrs. Batty) were also highly successful in their pianoforte solos. The concert which was in aid of the Church funds, was well attended.

WE have received a letter from Dr. Bonn, with reference to our recent notice on his "Scalometer," from which we extract the only portion which bears upon our review. He says "In keys where blue and red letters appear simultaneously, the former must be used in scales with flats, the latter in scales with sharps." And he further explains that as a greater number than seven sharps or flats at the signature would never be written, he has thought it superfluous to show any more on the disc of the Scalometer.

THE monthly concert of the St. George's Glee Union was held on Friday evening, the 10th ult. Miss Julia Augarde's rendering of Benedict's Pianoforte Fantasia, "Where the bee sucks," and Miss Ada L. Mathews's performance of Döhler's "Anna Bolena," were highly successful. Three new singers in the St. George's Glee Union were favourably received, Miss Minnie Curtis being encoired in both her songs; and Messrs. Gadsby (baritone), and Beaumont (tenor) being much applauded. The Choir, which was rather thinner in numbers than usual, sang several part-songs very creditably. Messrs. Garside and Stock were the conductors.

THE many attractions of the present season prevent the possibility of doing more than record the deserved success of the chamber concerts of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gilbert, which have been given during the past month at St. George's Hall. The programmes have been well selected, and the classical playing of Mr. Gilbert has been thoroughly appreciated. The effect of the vocal music, in which Mrs. Gilbert took a prominent part, was much enhanced by the sympathetic pianoforte accompaniment of Mr. C. E. Stephens.

AN evening concert, under distinguished patronage, was given at the Westbourne Hall, Bayswater, on Tuesday evening, the 14th ult., by Mr. Joseph Kingham, the blind pianist, assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, Miss Julia Derby, Mr. A. James, and Signor Rocca, Madame Dryden being solo harpist. The concert was a great success.

MR. AND MRS. GERMAN REED's entertainment commenced for the season on the 20th ult., at St. George's Hall, before a very large audience. Mr. Gilbert's legend, "Ages Ago," the music by Mr. F. Clay, was reproduced by special desire; and a musical sketch, by Mr. Corney Grain, entitled, "A Day in Town," was most successful. Mrs. German Reed was very warmly received, her acting and singing, as usual, delighting her audience.

AN entertainment, consisting of music and readings, was given by Mr. Charles Sleigh, on the 25th ult., at the Store Street Rooms, before a large audience. As his programmes were headed, "British Musical and Dramatic Institute," we presume that this was considered a public exhibition of the most promising of the pupils of that Association, although many artists already well known lent their assistance. Once more, then, we must say that in an educational point of view, the system pursued in this Institute is radically wrong, for not only are mere students put forward to sing works which would tax the powers of the greatest vocalist, but the ringing applause of those injudicious friends who attend to "encourage" them, prevents the possibility of their ever knowing their true position. We may also mention that pianists cannot be formed upon such pieces as a fantasia upon "When the swallows," nor vocalists upon such songs as Virginia Gabriel's "Ruby." The names of competent teachers appear upon the prospectus of this Institution, but where is the controlling power over each department to systematise the method of instruction?

THE following is a list of those who obtained degrees at the recent musical examination at the University of Oxford:—Doctor in Music—John Abram, New College (and St. Leonard's-on-Sea); J. Fred. Bridge, Queen's College (and Manchester Cathedral). Bachelor in Music—Charles Bradbury, New College (and Hull); Hugh Brooksbank, New College (and Peterborough); Geo. Herbert Gregory, New College (and Melrose, N.B.); Charles Hancock, Magdalen Hall (and Windsor); James Higgs, New College (and Torrington Square, London); Arthur H. Mann, New College (and Tettenhall, Wolverhampton); Fredk. R. Müller, Exeter College (and Hull); William Pinney, Exeter College (and Ramsgate); Arthur Simms, New College (and Alderley Edge, Manchester); George F. Tendall, St. Mary's Hall (and Wickham, Newbury); William H. Wale, Magdalen Hall (and Leicester); Daniel J. Wood, New College (and Boston, Lincolnshire). The examiners were—Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Professor of Music; C. W. Corfe, Mus. Doc., Choragus; and E. G. Monk, Mus. Doc.

VERY great credit is due to the enterprising director of the Brixton Choral Society, Mr. William Lemare, for his indefatigable exertions in preparing works for public performance with which his choir can hardly be familiar; and although we cannot say that the execution of Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter," on the 20th ult., was thoroughly satisfactory, the presentation of so elaborate a composition was highly meritorious. Without disparaging Mr. Lemare's powers as a conductor, we think, that as the composer was present, it would have been better had he directed his work, instead of accompanying at the piano-forte. The principal vocalists were Madame Florence Lancia, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Guy, and Mr. Wadmore, all of whom acquitted themselves most efficiently of their difficult task. Many of the choruses were given with admirable effect, and Sir Julius, who was warmly received, appeared much gratified at the performance of his work. Mr. Byrom presided at the organ with much ability.

THE first of a series of quarterly musical services in aid of the Choir Fund was held at St. Mary's, Haggerston, on the evening of the 22nd ult., when a selection from the "Messiah" was efficiently rendered by the choir. Mr. W. H. J. Coventry presided at the organ and played Mendelssohn's "Sonata No. 1" at the commencement, and Wély's "Offertoire No. 5" at the end of the selection. It is worthy of notice that the services on all the great festivals of the Church are invariably rendered by St. Mary's choir without any aid from other churches. This rule was adhered to on the present occasion.

ON Monday, the 13th ult., a very interesting lecture on Mendelssohn, was given by the Rev. Robinson Duckworth, M. A., Vicar of St. Mark's, Hamilton Terrace, St. John's Wood, for the benefit of the School Building Fund, at the New School-room attached to the Church. The lecturer sketched the great composer's life from early boyhood till his death in 1847, and was listened to with marked attention by a crowded and appreciative audience. The enjoyment of the evening was greatly enhanced by numerous illustrations from Mendelssohn's works, which were given in the order of composition, commencing with a March, from one of his early operettas, "Camacho's Wedding," and ending with a selection from his last great work, "Elijah." The choruses and part-songs were performed by an excellent choir of about 40 voices under the direction of Mr. Street, solos being contributed by Madame Schneegans, Mr. Greenhill, Mr. Stedman, &c. Mr. J. W. Elliott performed on the harmonium, the Andante in G, Op. 37, in his usual artistic style; and Miss Lucy Bristow, (a pupil of Mr. Bradbury Turner) played the Andante and Rondo Capriccioso, Op. 14, with very great success.

REVIEWS.

MESSRS. GRAY AND CO., SAN FRANCISCO.

Te Deum laudamus. Composed by George T. Evans.

It would be difficult, if not impossible, to fix two different standards by which to judge music of the same class; and were it even feasible it is extremely doubtful whether, for instance, our musical friends in America would feel satisfied with the dubious compliment conveyed in the terms, "It is very good, indeed, for America." Besides, church music is church music whether on this or that side of the Atlantic, and—allowance being made for diversities of temperament and climate—the same broad principle should hold good on both sides. As church music, therefore, we fear Mr. Evans's Te Deum cannot be regarded in the light of a high-class work. The comparatively small amount of dignity and solidity observable in this work would go far to imperil the success of a secular composition, whilst to a sacred one it is almost ruin. We would not for the world urge the adoption of that fictitious quality which so frequently stands for the true church style, viz., the reproduction of worn-out forms—that would be the other extreme. But, between these two extremes, may be found a via media on which an individual and characteristic style might be formed by a musician possessing the latent talent, of which Mr. Evans's music furnishes ample proof. Had Mr. Evans enjoyed the advantage of an early training in the school of the old contrapuntal writers—the want of which advantage even the genius of Beethoven was unable to conceal—he might in all probability have produced music which would have held its own anywhere; as it is we can hardly imagine the musicians of any other country than America looking upon it as other than wanting in almost all the essentials of sacred music. Take the opening phrase, for example:—

Allegro brillante.

Its somewhat pompous beginning, it will be seen, is suddenly checked at the second bar by a weak suspension, and altogether lost in the latter half of the third bar; whilst the coup de grâce is supplied by the three organ chords at the end of the phrase. Again, the true feeling of the words can hardly be said to receive adequate expression in the following strains:—

SOLO, TREBLE.

Andantino.

In justice to Mr. Evans it should be stated that these quotations exhibit the worst features of his work, and are rather taken as illustrations, in proof of our assertion, as to the secular tone pervading it, than as a fair criterion of the whole. We have been led to place this matter somewhat prominently before our readers from the fact that so many compositions of a like calibre have come under our notice—emanating from American sources—as to imbue us with the idea, rightly or wrongly, that the art of composing sacred music has not yet been attended with an amount of success in that country at all commensurate with the efforts that would appear to have been brought to bear upon it.

God be merciful unto us. Anthem for four voices.
Composed by Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

HERE we have a setting of the 67th Psalm according to the Prayer Book version, which is the appointed alternative for the Song of Simeon as the second Cantic in the Evening Service. Now, it is a puzzle for the curious, why the music should be styled an "Anthem," any more than what may be written for the Nunc dimittis, which is the text that may, at discretion, take the place of this. We can offer but one vague guess at a meaning for the definition, namely: that the words are set at greater length, allowing scope for their complete expression, and for the fuller development of the musical ideas they have suggested, than is generally the case in compositions professedly designed to form part of the Service. In case this may be the composer's meaning, let us take leave to discuss it. Our term "part of the Service" should not be a correct one, since the Service extends from the opening Sentence to the final Blessing, and includes everything that is said or sung according to the rubric within these limits, the Anthem as much as any of the Prayers, as the Creed, as the Confession, as the Canticles. Nay, as to the term Cantic, it is customary so to define the two musical pieces, and their alternative, which precede the Lessons in our Church Service, but cannot restrict its application to these pieces only, for whatever is sung must be a Cantic if not of too great length to admit of the diminutive form of the word for its denomination. What is there, on the other hand, in the word Anthem that can better fit it for the definition of a longer piece than the other? Grant it, a Cantic is a little song; an Anthem is expressly set forth in the injunction of Queen Elizabeth as a "little thing in metre." Composers have many a time broken the bounds implied in both cases by the term little, and so, for Canticles and Anthems, there are manifold works of large proportions, wherein the Church has good reason to rejoice, and there are some, large and small in extent, that are of no credit to that institution or its servants, and of no edification to auditors; and thus it is not the less or greater length at which the words may be set that warrants the music to be entitled "Anthem" or otherwise. A practical difference between Canticles and Anthems is that whereas the one is arbitrarily chosen from day to day, the others are fixed for perpetual performance in their respective appointed places. Now, this displays a signal reason for a longer setting of the words of the Cantic than of the Anthem; for the former being repeated daily, or at least weekly, becomes so familiar to the worshippers that we scarcely need refer to a book to bring them instantly to mind, and we can consequently follow easily any complication in the music set to them, any delicate nicety or broad novelty in its expression; whereas, the latter are heard but rarely, heard then as it were accidentally, found perhaps with difficulty if found at all, and are often not to be comprehended at a single reading, for which reasons they demand the simplest musical treatment to do them justice before uninitiated hearers. If then the music to either should be longer or shorter than to the other, let us submit that the Anthem should be the conciser, the Canticle the more amplified, and in this view, the present work seems to have a misnomer. Happily, it must be at the option of the selector of the music for the day's performance to place the composition at what period of the Service may seem to him the apter; so, they who think with us may place it after the second Lesson if they feel it fitting.

A more important and a far more pleasant consideration than this of how the work should be defined, is the merit of the music itself, which is of the highest order. In the vast amount of new Church music now being issued, among which, indeed, there is very much to praise, the instances of highly exalted beauty are most rare, and this piece takes rank with the rarest. There are longer and more pretentious works by the same composer; but there can be none that more completely fulfil their aim, and thus are more entirely successful. His beautiful feeling for harmony, which prompts him with some of the richest combinations and most novel progressions, here evinces itself with admirable effect; and his nice sense of vocal distribution leads him to display his happily chosen chords ever to the best advantage. As an instance of this, look to the harmony on the word "shall," with the climax to it, in the setting of the Gloria, and it is impossible not to admire its power. The opening of the piece is most tenderly devout; beginning with an air of vagueness, which is in some degree induced by a long continued dominant pedal, the music seems to express a doubt in the claim to mercy here deprecated, and the charmingly melodious phrase that is passed from one to other of the solo voices seems to diffuse strengthening hopes and growing confidence. The unusually long interlude for the organ which precedes the entry of the full choir, at the words, "That Thy way may be known," belongs as much to the musical interest as to the unfolding of the sentiment. The treatment is remarkably grand of the words, "Let the people," which is where we have the first continuous forte; and the broad character of this passage is nobly sustained. The bass solo, "Then shall the earth" stands out in prominent relief; and the chorus intermixed with this, as much throws up the principal voice as helps to enforce the words. In this place, an admirable point is where the key changes from minor to major on the words "shall give us His blessing," which seems to point out the altered state of one who feels himself endued with the beauty of holiness. The music to the Gloria is most impressive, and the point in it to which allusion has already been made imports with singular vehemence that the three-fold glory must be without end and for ever. Englishmen may boast, with well founded pride, of the rich stores of their elder Church music, but it is matter for still higher exultation that the torch, whose smouldering light was hidden for a large part of a century, finds new hands to bear it, displaying all its former brightness, refined by the purifying power of new knowledge and extended resources; foremost among living representatives of our glorious eld is the artist whose latest production we have now been noticing.

God is love. Sacred Song. Written and composed by Mrs. W. H. J. Carter. Arranged by W. Hollis, Esq.

THE words of this song, and also the title-page, tell us that it is "sacred," but it is a mistake to suppose that music united with religious verses is necessarily religious music. Mrs. Carter has written a pattern modern ballad, with the conventional "symphonies and accompaniments," and if her melody is not very original, it is at least tuneful and attractive. That it would more appropriately fit secular words can scarcely be doubted by any listener; and we really think the composer—whose poetry must doubtless have been written after her music—would do wisely to reconsider the matter from our point of view.

Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death. (Psalm xxiii. 4.) Song for Mezzo-Soprano or Tenor. By the Rev. W. H. Bliss, M.A., and Mus. Bac.

THE calm and devotional character of this song proves that its composer is well acquainted with the traditional style of sacred writing, although it does not show much inventive power. The melody well expresses the words, and the harmonies are smooth and appropriate throughout. We think it would have been better if the change in the character of the accompaniment had been reserved for the commencement of the "Animato" phrase, at the return to the original key, as it somewhat loses its effect from having been previously used in A minor. The repetition of the words "comfort me," at the conclusion of the song, has a good effect, and Mr. Bliss may be congratulated upon the manner in which he has studied the due expression of the verse.

Hymn Tunes and Chants. Composed by Frederick Augustus Packer.

WE are at a loss to divine why poems should be set and reset in the form of hymns. Many are the reasons why, when successful music has once been accepted for them, the attention of the congregation should not be irritated and the memory disturbed by the introduction of new tunes to the same words; and we regret therefore that musicians spend their talent to such a purpose. The present selection of six popular poems has a tune to each, all of which are of a kind that clings to the recollection, and so, though they are not of refined character, they will make their effect. The harmony is very free in style, but it is generally correct.

Here are also a dozen chants, and these, it must be owned, are less to the purpose than the hymn tunes. The chromatic harmony that abounds in them is inappropriate to chanting; the reciting note lies often inconveniently for voices, and the passing notes between the last chord of one strain and the first of another are practically troublesome, and they hinder the taking of breath, which the pointing indicates as necessary to the sense of the words, and the singer requires as necessary to the process of life.

The author of this little publication is organist of the Cathedral, and of the Town Hall in Hobart Town, and his evident fluency argues well for the musical experience he must have made, and for the opportunities the place affords.

Martha; or, the Fair at Richmond. A Comic Romantic Opera, in Four Acts. Composed by F. Von Flotow. Edited by Berthold Tours. Translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

THAT it is possible for a man to make and sustain a reputation upon one work Herr Von Flotow has fully proved; for, although he produced a highly successful Opera, when quite a youth, called "Alessandra Stradella," it is by "Martha," his next composition, that he is now known; and, indeed, so popular has much of the music he has set to this pleasing little English story become, that the Opera forms a portion of the répertoire almost every season at both our lyrical establishments. Flotow was a hard worker, and well deserves the fame he has won. The score of "Martha," he says, he re-wrote four times before he allowed it to be played; and we believe that he has laboured zealously at other Operas, which have never yet had a hearing. The excellent translation in the edition now before us would, we think, make it a most acceptable work to produce on the stage of an English Opera-house, should such a place ever exist in this country; for, to say nothing of the scene of the tale being close at home, certainly the well-known "Last Rose of Summer" would sound better from a native vocalist, in the language of Moore's poetry, than from a foreigner in an Italian translation. The careful editing of the work reflects the utmost credit upon Mr. Berthold Tours; and we need scarcely say that the type, printing, and paper are excellent. So admirable a handbook will be a real boon to Opera-goers.

A Sea Song. For a Soprano or Tenor Voice. Words by W. C. Bennett. Music by W. Howell Allchin.

WE do not particularly like the progression of harmony which forms the introductory symphony to this song, but when the voice and accompaniment fairly start in A minor, the phrases are exceedingly dramatic. The theme in the tonic major, too, is extremely melodious and sympathetic with the words. We think that, had the composer been less learned in his harmonies, his music would have been more effective, for his continual chromatic and enharmonic changes will distress both the vocalist and accompanist. Take, for example, the skip from the harmony of B minor to that of C major, in the last bar but one on the 5th page, and then the progression which is produced by the enharmonic alteration of the C natural to B sharp, and the effect is most unsatisfactory—in fact, when we are eventually landed in C sharp minor it becomes a relief, remote as the key is; for “any port in a storm” is better than drifting about at sea. Mr. Allchin shows much musical feeling both in this and some other compositions which have come before us; but his harmonies are laboured, and we wish it to be understood that we object to many of them, not because they are wrong—for who shall arrogate to himself the power of pronouncing so decisive a verdict—but because we do not think that their effect is good.

BURNS AND OATES.

Cherubini: Memorials illustrative of his Life. By Edward Bellasis, Barrister-at-law.

THE catalogue of Cherubini's works, placed at the end of this volume, is a grave comment upon the state of the average musical knowledge in the present day. True it is that the compositions of this great master and profound thinker serve as a model for many of our most earnest students; but the general public—even those who profess to be exceptionally devoted to the art—know but comparatively few of the many immortal creations named in the list so ably compiled by the author of the work before us. And yet it may be truly said that never did a composer work more steadfastly and truthfully than Cherubini. Unmoved by the temporary successes of his rivals, he pursued his own course, with a veneration for his art which amounted almost to a religion; and that during his long career his intellectual power was ever steadily increasing may be evidenced by the fact of his having composed the second Requiem in D minor at seventy-six years of age. The task of collecting the many facts contained in the book under notice has evidently been a labour of love to Mr. Bellasis, and we sincerely hope that his efforts may be rewarded as they deserve to be. The date of Cherubini's birth, our author tells us, was the 14th of September, 1760, and it may be interesting to those who wish to recall the state of music at that time to be also informed that this was “one year and a half after Handel's death, when Mozart was a child of four years, and ten years before the birth of Beethoven.” When very young he began to compose, but we have been told that Halévy, who perused some of his juvenile works after Cherubini's death, pronounced that although everything he found announced the intelligent child, brought up in a good school, and reared on good precepts, there was nothing to indicate the genius which was afterwards to reveal itself. Luckily the young artist, who had mastered the organ and harpsichord under Castrucci, and was already pointed out as a prodigy, was proof to flattery, and resolved to travel through Italy for the purpose of becoming personally known to musicians, as well as to perfect himself in his art. Being the son of poor parents, it is not at all probable that this intention could have been carried out, had not Peter Leopold II., Grand-Duke of Tuscany, and afterwards Emperor of Austria, offered at his own expense to send him to Bologna, where he immediately placed himself under Sarti, whose valuable instruction, although somewhat pedantic, was no doubt highly beneficial to the youthful composer. His first Opera, “Il Quinto Fabio,” produced at Alessandria, was shortly followed by many others; and after visiting England, where he brought out two Operas, he took up his residence in Paris, which was destined to be his future home, and where the brilliancy of his public career may be said to have commenced. The Revolution impeded his progress as a composer, for his connection had been with the aristocracy, and now they were flying in all directions, or mounting the scaffold. It is, indeed, related that the fact of his having studied the violin when a child was at this time the means of saving his life; for on one occasion having fallen into the hands of a band of sansculottes, who were seeking musicians to conduct their chants, Cherubini sternly refused to join them. The fatal cry, “The Royalist,” having been raised, a brother artist, who had also been kidnapped, seeing his friend's danger, thrust a violin into his unwilling hands and succeeded in persuading him to head the mob. “The whole day,” our author says, “these two musicians accompanied the hoarse and overpowering yells of that revolutionary assemblage, and when at last a halt was made in a public square, where a banquet took place, Cherubini and his friend had to mount some empty barrels and play till the feasting was over.” To recount only a few of the many triumphs achieved by Cherubini in the French capital would be here impossible; but we may say that Mr. Bellasis, who is evidently an enthusiastic admirer of this composer's music, not only gives us some able remarks of his own upon the works mentioned, but collects some highly interesting critiques by various writers contributed both to English and foreign journals. As we have already said, our knowledge either of the sacred or secular compositions of Cherubini is in this country extremely limited; and were they ever to be brought prominently into notice, as in the case of the resuscitation of Bach's works, we should be astonished to find that so rich a treasure had been so long allowed to remain uncared for. “Medea,” one of the grandest works ever composed for the lyric stage, has certainly been revived; but since 1870, when it was given at Covent Garden, it has ceased to be heard. “Les Deux Journées” was also presented to the aristocratic subscribers of the Drury Lane Opera in 1872—properly translated into Italian and with the dialogue set to recitative by Sir Michael Costa—but so little was it found to accord with the taste of the day that it was never repeated. Should the time ever arrive in this country when the frequenters of our Opera-houses shall be attracted by the music instead of the singers, or when those in authority at the musical festivals (now steadily increasing) shall select the finest, instead of the newest, specimens of sacred art, we may hope that Cherubini's works will be appreciated at their true value. Meanwhile it is good to be occasionally reminded that such noble compositions are waiting for a hearing; and we give a cordial welcome to the volume before us, not only on account of its intrinsic merit, but because we believe that it will have the effect of drawing public attention to the long neglected works of one who throughout his long life zealously upheld the highest interests of the art of which he was so bright an ornament. We have only to add that the book contains a portrait of the composer, with a fac-simile of his autograph; and that musical illustrations are freely used in the course of the many critical notices.

STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER AND CO.

No. 1, Queen Mab. No. 2, The Gnome's Wedding.
No. 3, Undine.

Composed by Oscar Beringer.

“CHARACTERISTIC PIECES” are dangerous compositions for any but experienced writers. Even Mendelssohn, as a rule, avoided giving titles to his smaller compositions, preferring that they should tell their own tale, or—failing to call up any definite idea—be accepted as abstract music. Mr. Beringer is more venturesome, and invites a two-fold criticism; for we have to consider not only whether he has written three good pianoforte pieces, but whether they fulfil the character suggested by their titles. No. 1 has a capital subject, the division of the opening passages between the two hands giving much lightness to the theme. The feeling, too, is well preserved where the change of key takes place, the combination of the legato and staccato touches being extremely effective. No. 2, alternating between E minor and major, is eccentric, but the theme is bald and dry, and misses that humour at which the composer evidently aimed. No. 3 contains some clever points, the second subject, especially, being well written and melodious. We quite admit that in A minor, G sharp may be in the harmony and G natural in the melody, but we cannot like the opening phrase: it is harsh and ungainly to our ears. As for the "characteristic" quality of these compositions we are inclined to admit only No. 1 as a success. What No. 2 has to do with a "Gnome's Wedding," we cannot comprehend; and the first bar of No. 3, of which we have already spoken, is scarcely a melody which we should associate with the gentle and refined nature of "Undine."

The Merry Beggar's Song.

Words from "The Afterglow," composed by Mrs. Mounsey-Bartholomew.

THESE two songs should command the attention of all vocalists who desire to produce their effects by legitimate means, for they are in no respect written down to the level of a commonplace audience. No. 1 especially, although having a highly characteristic melody, is so handled throughout with the skill of a practised musician that, unlike most songs of this class, it appeals rather to the cultivated than the uncultivated listener. The bold subject in A minor, contains some excellent modulations, one of which—into B flat major—is exceedingly telling, and the final phrases of each verse may be also mentioned as happily illustrative of the words. In No. 2 we have praise not only for the music, but for the careful manner in which the true accent of the words has been studied, a qualification in a composer which cannot be overpraised, seeing what an excellent example it sets to a singer. As an instance of this, we might cite the opening phrase, where the lengthening out of the word "sing" gives precisely the emphasis with which the whole line would be read, and this, as we have said, is observable throughout the song. Here again we have some most effective modulations, that into the tonic minor, on the words "It cheers the brightest day," being one of the most attractive. We sincerely trust that these clever songs may meet with the success they deserve.

WEEKES AND CO.

Te Deum. Composed by Nicholas Heins.

THIS is a setting for voices in unison with organ accompaniment, and, as such, it will be welcome to many a minister who wishes to promote singing among his congregation, and who righteously detests the form of the Chant, as totally inappropriate to the Canticles, and as becoming tedious through its monotonous repetition when applied to anything but the doxology and the daily psalms. As a composition, the present is a little weak in its frequent beginnings and endings in the same key of C; but it has points of interest—the charming transition from A minor into F, at the words, "O Lord, have mercy upon us," for instance, and the voice part is melodious and easy to sing. One high recommendation of this mode of treating the subject, is, that it may present a good declamation of the texts, and so help the people to feel the words while they sing them; but this, the composer seems to have over-looked, or he would not have come to a full close, which is equivalent to a full stop in punctuation, on the words, "The Holy Church doth acknowledge Thee," and so cut them from the conclusion of the sentence, without saying what the Church acknowledges. Let him and others who essay this class of writing, give careful consideration to such matters, and they may render signal service to congregational music.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

UNISON OR HARMONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Reviewing the recent writings on this interesting question, it appears that we have (as the statesman would say) "three courses" before us.

The musical conservative will exclaim, "None of your new-fangled notions. Sing as in the good old times. True, the double air is an evil, but let only the organist throw in plenty of double-diapason and pedal-pipes, then, out of the evil good must come."

"Not so," cries the advanced reformer. "Don't you see the disturbing elements? Part-singing must perforce be put out of church. We'll nought but unison."

Now, advocating a middle course between these extreme views, I readily admit the trite truth that the pedal (like charity) "covereth a multitude of sins;" but it must be borne in mind that not every church-organ is provided with pedals—not every organist everlastingly persists in pedalling—and not in all "places where they sing" are organs or other musical instruments to be met with. Moreover, few musicians will be persuaded that any reasonable reinforcement of the bass will convert into sweet concord the horrible dissonance their ears experience, when lusty-lunged male worshippers in the congregation "heartily" vociferate the 6th of a key, against vigorous tenors giving vent in the choir to the 7th (see first tune, "Hymns Ancient and Modern," 3rd line).

An occasional unison has, undoubtedly, a charm; but its constant use, week after week, year after year, unrelieved by a particle of vocal harmony would, I fear, prove extremely distasteful to many.

Driven to the conclusion then that part-singing in church is (to say the least) desirable, I cannot shut my eyes to the pressing demand for the revision of many tunes and chants commonly used in congregational worship, inasmuch as all these ought to be so harmonised as to "go" satisfactorily by themselves, with or without the aid of an instrument and in spite of the frequently inevitable double air. It may not be possible to map out accurately the boundaries of this happy vid media; nor may the exact positions be pointed of all the contrapuntal rocks and quicksands whereon many a good tune has been wrecked. Suffice it to be known, that (in this, more than any other branch of the divine art) there are harmonic "breakers a-head;" and the skilful pilot, with his eyes open, will not fail to distinguish and steer clear of the danger.

J. CONWAY BROWN.

TALLIS MEMORIAL FUND.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—A few weeks ago I sent out nearly 200 circulars to members of the musical profession and others, soliciting subscriptions to a Fund formed (under an influential Committee) for the purpose of placing a brass to the memory of Thomas Tallis in Greenwich Parish Church, where he lies buried. In reply to those circulars I have been promised subscriptions to the amount of about £6. It is obvious that nothing worth doing can be done with so small a sum.

I do not believe that it is through any unwillingness to honour the memory of one to whom English music owes so much that more subscriptions have not been received; it is probably owing to a slight misapprehension of the wish and intention of the promoters of the Fund. Our desire is that no sum may be considered as too small as a contribution: there are probably many who, feeling unable to send a guinea or two guineas, have therefore sent nothing at all. Will you, with your usual courtesy, allow me to say that sums, however small, whether in stamps or by P.O.O., will be thankfully received by

Your obedient servant,

MEDIEVAL CHOIR RULES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—So little is known of the internal life of the choirs in the middle ages, that the following rules will be regarded with considerable interest:—

In the MS. Statutes of St. David's (which I consulted in that far distant cathedral), in 1368 the complaint is made that "certain Vicars," who do not hold the office of Cantors according to custom, in the Hours sing before their fellows, begin by themselves, and at the ends of the verses draw them out after the rest, and at the pointing do not agree together, but deform the choir and throw it out of all order; every man doing his own pleasure, takes his own disorderly way, anticipating words in an incongruous manner, utterly regardless of punctuation, right pronunciation, and correct reading, and moreover whisper in low murmurs.

At St. Paul's the 14th century Statutes speak with even greater precision: "The heart should be in unison with the voice, when we sing in the House of the Lord" (1. Cor. xiv. 15; Ps. ii. 11, xlvii. 8, cxxxvii. 2).

We should consider that in psalmody we are in the sight of God and angels; we believe that He is everywhere present, for the eyes of the Lord are in every place (Prov. xv. 3); but especially is He near when His praises are sung, and ministering angels and citizens of heaven are joined with men when we lift up pure hands before God (Ps. cxxxvii. 2, Heb. i. 14).

How earnest then should we be in Church, both in singing the office of the Hours and of Holy Communion, to do such a work with fear and reverence, lest (which God forbid) we should do it negligently or lazily, or in an uncomely and lukewarm manner; and so we should fall into that condemnation, "Cursed is he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully" (Jer. xlviii. 10). To guard against such a wretched fall, how careful should we be to provide that in the Church of God there should be nothing frivolous, indecent, or perverse in thought, word, and deed; so that the Lord when He cometh may find not that which He will punish, but that He will reward. Let the singers humbly offer praise to God without any pride; let them please those who understand the art of song by the sweetness of their melody, profit the unlearned, and, whilst chanting, seek rather to edify the people than to covet popularity and empty adulation.

In singing Psalms, at the pause between the verses and at the pointing all should end and begin anew together. None from affectation or desire of prominence should lengthen out words that ought not to be dwelt upon, nor with unseemly haste take the lead of their fellows. The Service should be solemnly sung with due deliberation, and those who frequently offend against this rule ought to be sharply reprov'd.

At Lincoln, another century later (1439), the Statutes say, In psalmody distinctness and devotion should be observed in keeping the measure and pointing; without dragging or clipping the voice; the end of each verse should be sung crisply and shortly by all as one. The notes should be taken without delay, quickly; there should be frequent pauses, and the nature of the season should influence the time. None should lag after another, none begin before others; all should end as if there were but a single voice; then, taking breath, all should begin together, each side following its leader, as the Apostle says, "All with one mind and one mouth honouring God," and imitating our fellow citizens the angels, of whom it is written, "They all sing with one voice." Every chant, and psalmody as well, should be kept up to the true pitch with earnestness of mind and voice, for sinking to flatness is a proof of indolence, and rising to over-sharpness, which is the cause of discord, is an evident mark of a light mind and love of ostentation. Let each mark this line, "Mind what is to be heard; begin together; end plainly!"

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,
MACKENZIE E. C. WALCOTT, B.D.,
Præcentor of Chichester.

CHURCH SINGING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Having read a correspondence headed "Church Singing" in your paper of last month, I beg to differ in opinion from your correspondent, and further to prove, according to principles, that the ground he takes is untenable.

That a "double air" is bad your correspondent admits. That it can be remedied by the organ—unless when overpowered and rendered inaudible—I cannot admit.

Those who have studied orchestration know well that each class of instrument (strings, reed, or brass) must have a complete, or at least consonant, harmony in each several group. That if two or more parts are detached from the mass of the harmony and given to another class of instrument from that executing the complete harmony, these two parts must in themselves contain a harmony that could be performed alone without offending the ear. Now suppose we have a string quartett in four real parts, and only have three brass instruments, we must give them a harmony complete in itself, not depending on any of the strings for its completion; for even if we were to put fifty strings to play the part omitted in the brass, could we make a complete harmony on account of the difference in tone (timbre)? as the three brass instruments in imperfect harmony would still stand out from the rest, and nothing but another brass instrument could complete the part wanting. Now suppose even these three chords descending, which contain no dissonances or any device of preparation or retardation,

6 D	6 C \sharp	6 B
3 A	3 G	3 F \sharp
1 F \sharp	1 E	1 D

If these chords are played on the organ, sung, or rendered by one class of instruments, the effect is good, but if the lower part is played on the organ and the two upper parts are sung, the fourth becomes at once offensive. The same will result if the organ plays the two upper parts and a voice sings the lower. Thus we see the organ, or indeed any instrument, cannot render harmonious a bad vocal harmony by adding parts necessary for its correction, since the tone has no affinity, and stands away from the voice. Still, waiving this important consideration, and temporarily supposing that, as your correspondent says, the pedal 16-ft. did complete the harmony, how about the 8-ft. stop, which in reality forms the organ proper? Are we to play with the right hand on a Principal, or 15th, and with the left on a 16th Bourdon, to allow such an illogical combination as a double air to gravitate to something like harmony? By any other combination we must have frequent atrocious discords with the organ proper, viz., the 8-ft. and 4-ft. stops.

As to the information volunteered about the 16-ft. reed and flue-stops, I do not conceive any organ-builder or musician could derive any information except relatively to the writer of it; still less could he draw from it any argument.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
ORGANIST.

THE POETIC BASIS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Having read with great interest the paper on Herr Wagner's theory of musical art by Mr. Joseph Bennett, and having attentively followed the discussion which it has raised, I feel constrained to endeavour to set forth the question as it appears when regarded from a feminine point of view—as it strikes the mind of a "soulless" woman!

In considering the question of a poetic basis of music, a fact, I think, of some importance should be borne in mind, namely the two-fold character of both music and poetry. There is music which acts only or chiefly on the senses, and music which appeals to a higher part of human organisation, the heart or soul; just as there is poetry of two orders, which for want of better terms may be classed as sensual and sentimental. These differences cannot be accurately defined whilst human nature continues to be what it is, and the question, which is that of Wagner's theory, becomes one of degree rather than of kind. It is music of this lower class which should be spiritualised by the addition of poetry—it is music of this sort to which the adjective "popular" appropriately belongs, and whilst those senses which it delights remain to the human race, it is to be feared that the "possibility of music for the sole sake of sonorous beauty ceasing to exist" must be regarded as a very remote contingency. In one who is so true a musician as Wagner, this tenacious clinging to a principle which raises poetry by debasing music must excite wonder, though the attempt to elevate art in general by the subordination of art in particular, as shown in his ideal state of the opera, may challenge admiration for its catholicity of spirit. The tendency of his theory is doubtless to reduce music to the position of an attribute of poetry, and to deprive it of any independent existence.

Probably most musicians will admit that a poetic impulse or basis lies at the root of the existence of music, though perhaps few will be prepared to concede that the "conditions" of that impulse are necessarily superior to "the demands of music in its independent state"—whatever those demands or that independent state may be. One of your correspondents, Mr. John Hinton, whom I will quote, partially defines this principle when he says: "I contend that poetry, or to speak accurately, the poetical idea, has two interpreters—poetry proper and music, but that they are two different order of things, which, when combined, produce the highest excellence." Right, perhaps, so far, but not far enough. Nor is any advance made by adding that "no combination will so blend them as to efface their respective characteristics." Music and Poetry are rather, as Carlyle might say, "the forms, the vestures, under which men have embodied and represented for themselves the 'Poetical' principle"—two totally distinct and different clothings of the same idea. Therefore the highest excellence is not to be found in either of those expressions whilst human and finite, nor in any combination of them, but in the common source from which they spring—in the mother-spirit which gives, and is, the life and soul to both sister arts. And just as, to continue the figure, religious forms and creeds embody the religious idea and Christianity, so sound in music and language in poetry are the audible, tangible forms by which it is possible to realise the infinite, underlying principle—without which the arts might be as "sounding brass, or as tinkling cymbals." I claim a duality of physical and spiritual beauty for both music and poetry.

It may be said that I am fighting the Wagnerian battle in contending for a poetical principle, above and beyond its outward symbol in music, another phase of the "poetic impulse, the conditions of which are superior to the demands of music in its independent state;" but whatever it may be called, impulse—principle—inspiration—there is something unknown to human comprehension working in the infinite depths of human nature which finds expression in the highest forms of music and poetry. This is the raison d'être of instrumental music, which claims to have the fullest inspiration, the true apostolical succession, if I may be allowed the illustration. And the fact that instrumental music lives and flourishes is a strong argument in favour of its possessing that vitality which a universal law, whereby all useless or superfluous existence is doomed, demands.

Wagner maintains that infinite melody exists in Nature, but not in art, or in one form of art alone; whilst Mr. John Hinton, who opposes him in this instance, denies it in Nature too, and regards Wagner as little short of a madman for harbouring such a belief. "Infinite melody is the negation of all melody," because, as I apprehend it, the finite would be merged in the infinite, as the rivers in the sea; yet clouds draw their moisture from the boundless ocean to return again in ten thousand streams.

The verdict of a musical public in a "healthy state of ear" on the question of poetic basis in music is not to be disregarded; but do not let us ask it to weigh the respective merits of symphonies and operas, when there is so large a balance of extraneous interest, as in acting and all the accessories of a dramatic performance, on one side. Let us also discriminate between intellectual enjoyment, and the gratification of still higher feelings, such as are called into play by listening to instrumental and oratorio music. We do not expect that an uneducated ear should be able to perceive the scientific beauties of Bach's fugues, nor an unspiritual mind the deep pathos in the "Lieder ohne Worte" of the poet-musician Mendelssohn. But because certain qualities are lacking in certain persons—because some human organisations are defective, it is surely not necessary to invent and proclaim a theory of soulless music and soulless woman, who, like inanimate statues, perfect in form and feature, but with the sightless, expressionless eyes which indicate the empty spirit-house, must wait till inspiration from poetry and man, their proper correlatives, shall cause them to become living souls. This method of the "higher development" of woman would, I fear, meet with as much opposition from the advocates of women's rights, as the same apotheosis when applied to music calls forth from the more truly devoted and chivalrous lovers of the "inarticulate unfathomable speech," which is the world's most universal language.

I am, Sir, yours very truly,

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ALLOA.—On Tuesday the 14th ult., at the annual concert of the Alloa Musical Association, Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, was performed, almost in its entirety, and considering the numerical strength of the Association, and the fact that, except in the orchestral part, there was nothing but amateur talent engaged, the execution of the work was very satisfactory. The soprano and contralto music was divided among four ladies: the solos deserving of most attention being, "Rejoice greatly," which was well sung, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and "He was despised." "Why do the nations," "The trumpet shall sound" (the trumpet obligato excellently played by Mr. Henderson), and the tenor air "Thou shalt break them," were sung with much feeling and expression. The choruses were well rendered, the leads being taken up with great firmness. The orchestra was highly efficient. Mr. Alexander conducted with great ability.

ANSTRUTHER.—The members of the East of Fife Musical Association concluded their sixth session on the 10th ult., by giving a public performance of Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, and Spohr's Cantata, God, Thou art great, with the addition of a few selections from Mozart. The rendering of the whole was characterised by an absence of ostentatious display, and a marked appreciation of the music on the part of conductor, soloists, chorus, and orchestra. The choir consisted of about 75 voices, and the orchestra numbered 13, the whole being amateur members of the Association.

ARBROATH.—On Tuesday evening, the 7th ult., the Arbroath Choral Union performed Handel's Messiah, in the New Public Hall.

The choir numbered 130, and the solos were sustained by Miss C. Armstrong (soprano), Miss Dones (contralto), Mr. Whitehead, tenor, and Mr. Ferry, bass. Mr. D. T. Christie, and Mr. W. H. Richmond, of Dundee, accompanied on the pianoforte and harmonium, and Mr. Nagel, of Dundee, officiated as conductor. Miss Armstrong was successful in her solos, Miss Dones proved highly effective in all her music, Mr. Whitehead was a good exponent of the tenor part, and the bass solos were admirably delivered by Mr. Ferry. The choruses were well sung, especially the "Hallelujah" and the "Amen." Great praise is due to Messrs. Richmond and Christie for their efficient accompaniments, and Mr. Hagel is entitled to high credit for the ability he displayed in conducting.

ASHFORD.—The members of the Oxford church choir gave two performances of Handel's Oratorio Samson, in the National School-room on the evenings of the 27th and 30th of March. The choruses were creditably given, the trebles (all boys) being especially good. The soprano solos were sung by Master Philpot, Master Lander and Master Rigden, the latter being very effective in "Let the bright Seraphim." Master Thorne sang "Return, O God of Hosts," Dr. Wilks, the hon. Frencor, was very successful in "Total eclipse," and Mr. Walter Hill gave a good rendering of "Thy glorious deeds." Guy and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The Messiah was given in the morning, and a miscellaneous selection in the evening. The two concerts gave great satisfaction to a numerous audience. Mr. P. H. Diemer conducted both performances with much ability.

Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Lewis Thomas rendered the solos, duets, &c. excellently, Mr. F. C. Smythe ably presiding at the organ. The choir of 180 voices sang with great precision, and were well supported by an orchestra of 50 performers.—On the 30th March, Mr. W. T. Best played at the Ulster Hall Monday Popular Concerts. The organ is well known as Hill's finest instrument, the largest yet erected in Ireland. A large and appreciative audience assembled on the occasion. Miss Lumsden, of Dublin, was the solo vocalist.

BIDEFORD.—On Friday evening the 10th ult., Mr. Backhouse gave the third and last of his Subscription Concerts for 1873-74, in the Music Hall before a large audience. Madame Porter was highly successful in all her songs. Haydn's Toy Symphony was given with care and precision and encores. BIRKENHEAD.—Handel's Oratorio Jephtha was given by the Cambrian Choral Society on the 25th March, in the Queen's Hall, the principals being Madame Billinie-Porter, Miss Jessie Bond, Mr. Bywater, Mr. Thomas Brandon, and Mrs. Bradnock. Madame Porter was in excellent voice, and in the airs, "The smiling dawn of happy days," and "Farewell, ye limpid streams," fully sustained her reputation. Miss Jessie Bond, Mr. Bywater, and Mr. Brandon were also highly successful in the music allotted to them. The band was led by Mr. Seymour very efficiently. Although the choir wants strength, all the members sing with a crispness that is difficult to surpass. The chorus "When His loud voice in thunder spoke," well deserved the encore. Mr. Argent presided with much ability at the harmonium, and Mr. W. Parry was an efficient conductor.

BOSTON, U. S.—Madame Camilla Urso's third concert at the Horticultural Hall, was numerously attended. In addition to the excellent violin playing of the concert-giver, Mr. Richard Hoffman, from New York, was heard to much advantage in the pianoforte part of one of Beethoven's violin and pianoforte Sonatas, and also in Schubert's Trio, in B flat (Op. 99), in which he was associated with Madame Urso (violin) and Mr. Hennig (violinello). The local papers speak in the highest terms of Mr. Hoffman's playing, and express regret that he is not oftener heard in Boston.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Amateur Musical Society gave the 57th quarterly performance, in the Town Hall, on the 25th March, the programme consisting of Alexander's Feast, and a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Madame Wells, Mr. T. Robson and Mr. O. Christian. Madame Wells was unfortunately suffering from indisposition. Mr. F. Dewberry played the violinello obbligato, in the air "Softly sweet in Lydian measures," in a very efficient manner. There was a large audience.

CATSFIELD, SUSSEX.—On Thursday the 9th ult., an excellent concert was given in aid of fund for Bishop Callaway's church in Central Africa. The performance was held in the School-room, which was well filled. Amongst the pieces most favourably received were Sullivan's "Little maid of Arcade," and "Stars the night adorning," by Wexlerin, both sung by Miss Barlow, and encores. "The Message," sung by Mr. Ward was also highly appreciated. The arrangements, which were perfect, were under the management of Mr. Andrew Hayley, the son of the Rector of Catsfield. The money obtained amounted to over £8.

Mr. Lockett, the conductor, who played with much effect two of Chopin's pianoforte pieces, was presented during the evening (by the male members of the Society) with an elegant, silver mounted bâton.

CHISLET (near CANTERBURY).—The organ lately erected in the church of this village by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, London, was opened on Tuesday evening, the 7th ult., by Mr. J. F. Daniel, the enterprising conductor of the Clifton Winter Entertainments, gave two ballad concerts at the Victoria Rooms, in which Madame Patey, Miss Banks, Mr. Patey, and Mr. W. H. Cummings were announced to take part. There was a good attendance on both occasions. Madame Patey, whose singing is always listened to with delight, was unfortunately indisposed and only able to take part in the first concert, which was a severe disappointment to the audience. Miss Banks, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Patey were highly successful in songs by Claribel, Molloy, Barnett, E. Berger, A. S. Sullivan, &c.

COLCHESTER.—A very large audience assembled at the Colchester Theatre, on Wednesday evening, the 15th ult., to hear a performance of Handel's Oratorio The Messiah, by local amateurs, assisted by several professional vocalists and instrumentalists. The tenor solos were allotted to Mr. Robson, of Cambridge, his best performance being the aria "But Thou didst not leave." Miss Franklin's contralto voice was heard to great advantage in the recitative "Behold, a Virgin," and the arias "O, Thou that tellest," "He shall feed," and "He was despised." The soprano parts were well rendered by Miss Emily Spiller, and she fully deserved the repeated manifestations of appreciation which she received. The bass solos could not have been entrusted to a better artist than Mr. Hilton. All the portions allotted to him were very faithfully rendered; and his interpretation of the aria "Why do the nations," was most admirable. The choruses were given in a most creditable manner; and Mr. Winterbon, who conducted, may well be congratulated upon the result.

DERBY.—At the concert given by the members of the Choral Union, on Wednesday evening, the 25th March, in the Drill Hall, Handel's Acis and Galatea, and Mendelssohn's Cantata The First Walpurgis Night, were performed. The solos were rendered by Miss Arthur, Mrs. Crowther, Mr. C. H. Coulson, Mr. R. J. Smith and Mr. Field Baldwin. J. Sutton and Miss Edith Clelland being the professional artists engaged. A small but well balanced band, led by Mr. W. H. Cole, strengthened by the organ, at which Mr. W. H. Richmond presided, played the accompaniments. Mrs. Sutton in "Let the bright Seraphim" (excellently accompanied by Mr. Wood on the trumpet), and Miss Clelland in "Return, O God of Hosts," were highly successful.

DUNGANNON.—A new organ, built by Messrs. Forster and Andrews for the church, was opened on Wednesday, the 8th ult., by Mr. T. Osborne Marks, Mus. Bac., Oxon, organist of Armagh Cathedral. The voluntaries were "The March of the Israelites" (Costa), an Andante of Wesley's, and Motett (No. 3), Mozart.

The programme was well selected, the most important works being Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Judge me, O God," Gounod's Psalm, "By Babylon's wave," and a selection from Beethoven's Mount of Olives. The band and chorus numbered over 80 performers. Mr. Drake conducted.

Hilton and Pearson, assisted by an efficient chorus and full band; Mr. Berger presiding at the pianoforte and harmonium. The second part embraced selections from Mendelssohn's Elijah, Handel's Judas Maccabeus, and Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria. The most successful efforts of the evening were Madame Lablache's singing of "He was despised;" and Mr. Pearson's "If with all your hearts." Mr. Hilton gained a well merited encore for "In Mamre's fertile plain." There was a large and appreciative audience.

GOOLE.—The Choral Society gave the last concert for the present season, on Tuesday evening, the 31st March, when Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise (Lobgesang) was performed for the first time in this neighbourhood. There was a good attendance; and the number of singers was larger than on any previous occasion, the whole of the stage in the Public Rooms being filled. The choruses were rendered very effectively, the piano and forte portions being appropriately marked. The choral "Let all men praise the Lord" was finely given. Miss Hiles (of the Liverpool and Manchester concerts) sang the soprano solos, and with Miss M. Clegg, the duet "I waited for the Lord." Mr. Hopley rendered the portion of the Cantata which fell to him exceedingly well. Mr. James Milnes conducted.

GRANGE-OVER-SANDS.—On Wednesday the 8th ult., the Musical Society gave the last of this season's concerts, when Handel's Judas Macabæus was performed. It being the first time that an Oratorio has been given in the neighbourhood, much interest was manifested. The room was filled with a very select audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Wakefield, Miss Hubbersty, Mrs. Strongitharm, Mrs. Briggs, Mr. Harrison, Mr. G. Bush and Mr. Preston. The chorus comprised 16 sopranos, 9 altos, 5 tenors and 7 basses. Mr. Dean, organist of the Parish Church, Lancaster, presided at the pianoforte most efficiently, and Mr. Elliott, of Preston, ably assisted by his accompaniments on a harmonium. Mr. Bather conducted. Miss Wakefield sang with care and expression the air "Father of Heaven," Miss Hubbersty was very effective in "Wise men flattering," Mrs. Strongitharm and Mrs. Briggs sang several duets admirably, "O never bow we down," met with a very flattering reception, and "O lovely peace," was re-demanded. Mr. Harrison took the part of Judas very satisfactorily. His greatest success was in "Sound an alarm." Too high a compliment cannot be paid to Mr. Bush for the able manner in which he sang the part of the Israelitish man, and Mr. Preston was very successful in his interpretation of Simon. A word of praise is due to Mr. Bather, the esteemed conductor.

HADLEIGH.—On the 10th ult., the Town Hall was filled almost to overflowing by a most respectable audience, assembled to hear an amateur concert given by the members of the Hadleigh Choral Society, consisting of nearly 40 performing members, the greater number of whom were present. The following ladies assisted in the instrumental portion of the concert, viz., Miss Norman, Miss Grimwade, Miss Wilson, and Miss Hardacre. The overtures were brilliantly played, and the several part-songs were sung most effectively, some being encored. The gem of the evening was Beethoven's Trio in G major, which was exceedingly well rendered. Miss Hardacre accompanied, and Mr. Hardacre conducted. At the termination of the concert, the Rev. Rev. R. T. Wheeler, addressed those present on behalf of the choir, and in elegant and forcible language, introduced the names of Mr. and Miss Hardacre, who have given their united services from the formation of the Society in bringing it to its present efficient state, and then presented Mr. Hardacre with an elegant timepiece, enclosed in a morocco case, with the following inscription engraved under the dial face:—"Presented by the Members of the Amateur Choral Society, to Mr. and Miss Hardacre, in acknowledgment of their kind and valuable services. Hadleigh, April 10th, 1874."

HALIFAX.—A concert was given by the Philharmonic Society, on the 25th March before a large audience, in the Mechanics' Hall. The performance throughout was excellent. Mr. Whittaker in Beethoven's Concerto, in C, was much applauded, and the playing of the Symphony, in D (Beethoven), met with an equal response from the audience. Mr. Rickard, of Halifax, was most enthusiastically received in his songs; he has a fine voice, and was repeatedly encored.—At the concert at the Drill Hall, on the 9th ult., which had been postponed from the 14th February, in consequence of the indisposition of Mr. Sims Reeves, the public was again doomed to disappointment, for an announcement stating that he was still too ill to appear was received in the morning. Mr. Vernon Rigby, however, sang all the songs allotted to Mr. Reeves, and received quite an ovation from the large audience assembled. The other vocalists were Miss Helen D'Alton and Mr. Henry Pyatt, both of whom were highly successful. A choir also sang several part-songs with admirable effect, and received the warmest applause. Mr. Sidney Naylor was the accompanist.

KIDDERMINSTER.—Bach's Passion (St. Matthew) was given in St. Mary's Church, on Thursday evening, the 26th March. The performance was a decided success, although another rehearsal would have been advisable. Two choirs were formed, occupying seats in the chancel; the bass and alto recitatives and arias were well performed, but the tenors were weak, especially in the recitatives. The boys executed their portions admirably. The work is divided into two parts, and on the conclusion of the first portion, the Rev. G. D. Boyle, M.A. delivered a short but impressive sermon.

KILMARNOCK.—The Philharmonic Society brought its meetings to a close for the season by a successful performance of Handel's Oratorio Judas Macabæus, in the Corn Exchange, on Thursday evening the 2nd ult., before a large audience. The solo singers engaged for the occasion were Miss Emily Spiller (soprano), Miss Dones (contralto), Mr. Edward Lloyd (tenor), and Mr. J. R. Alsop (bass), all of whom were highly efficient. Mr. A. L. LEITH.—The services at St. James's Church during Holy Week have been frequent, and throughout well attended. A new feature was introduced into the evening service, by the addition to the shortened evensong with sermon, of "Christ's words on the Cross," set to music by Mr. William Harrison, organist of the church. The words of our Saviour are introduced in seven recitatives, each one of which is prefaced by a chorus or trio, consisting of a text or texts of Scripture of a reflective character, bearing on the words of our Saviour immediately preceding; the whole ending with the beautiful choral introduced by Mendelssohn into his Oratorio St. Paul, "To Thee, O Lord, I yield my spirit," &c. The Rev. G. Jackson, M.A., incumbent, sang the recitatives with good taste and excellent feeling, and the members of the choir took up their parts with commendable precision. The Easter services were of the usual festal character. The morning was ushered in by a merry "peal" from the St. James's ringers, after which, at 8.15 A.M., an early celebration of the Holy Eucharist was attended by upwards of 70 communicants. The other services were as follows:—Morning Prayer at 11 A.M., General Confession (Barnby); Preces (Tallis); Easter Anthems (Turner); Proper Psalms (Sporfirth and Higgins); Te Deum (Smart) in F; Benedictus (Elvey) in F; Creed of St. Athanasius, Traditional Chant. Evening Prayer at 6.30 P.M., Processional, Confession and Preces, same as morning; Proper Psalms (Woodward and Rogers); Magnificat (Boyce); Nunc dimittis (Farrant); Anthem, "If ye then be risen with Christ" (Naylor); with appropriate hymns. The singing was remarkably well in tune, and the "pointing" of the psalms was carefully observed by the very efficient choir. The rendering of the Nunc dimittis was worthy of special praise.

LINCOLN.—The Philharmonic Society gave the first concert in the Masonic Hall, on the 15th ult., under the direction of Dr. Mason. Mr. Macon joined Signor Garcia in a duet, "Two nightingales," and also sang Hatton's song, "The lark." Signor Garcia was encored in "Le lac," for which he substituted "The village blacksmith." Mr. Horton C. Allison played Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 29, No. 2; Chopin's valse, and his own Impromptu, from the "Oxford Concert Pieces," in which he was encored. The accompaniments were divided between Mr. Allison and Sir Julius Benedict.—The sixth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society, on the 14th ult., included in its programme Signor Randegger's Cantata, Fridolin, conducted by the composer; principal artists: Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Mr. Santley. The overture to the short second part of the concert was Meyerbeer's to Dinorah, and the concluding piece Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March.

MANCHESTER.—An excellent concert was given in the Free Trade Hall, on Thursday evening, March the 26th, by Herr Joachim and Mr. Charles Hallé, in aid of the fund for the erection of the Bach monument at Eisenach. In addition to the two artists mentioned, Madame Norman-Neruda, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Santley, and the members of Mr. Hallé's orchestra gave their services. The room was crowded, and the performance was a great success. The chief points of attraction in the programme were two duet compositions for violins, played by Madame Norman-Neruda and Herr Joachim; the first, Bach's Concerto in D minor; the second, the Adagio in B flat and Finale Presto in D minor, Spohr. Miss Antoinette Sterling, in her singing of Bach's "Cradle Song," and three short "musical poems" by Schubert, Schumann, and Mendelssohn, showed a rich voice and cultivated taste. Mr. Santley was in capital voice. The excellent manner in which every thing was performed gave the utmost satisfaction to an audience which comprised most of the leading organ connoisseurs of the neighbourhood.

MOXLEY.—The new organ built for the Wesleyan Chapel, by Mr. W. Johnson, of Moxley, was opened on Sunday, the 12th ult., by Mr. G. Bond, of Wednesbury. The programme, which included selections from Handel, Mendelssohn, Batiste, &c., was well adapted to display the qualities of the instrument, which consist of two complete CC to G manuals and pedal bourdon and open; 13 stops in all. The front pipes (speaking) are richly decorated.

C. Gittins, Esq. The choir numbered 370 voices, the parts being very well balanced. The choruses were rendered with great spirit and precision, the "Hallelujah" and "Worthy is the Lamb," being especially deserving of notice. Considering that the Society has only been in existence about three months, and consists of several choirs in the neighbourhood of Newtown, great praise is due to the conductor for the very efficient manner in which he has trained such a body of singers in so short a time. The accompaniments were played by an orchestral band of 15 performers: leader, Mr. C. Stephenson; pianoforte, Mr. C. Davison; and harmonium, Mr. W. P.

Phillips. The artists engaged were Miss Banks, Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Patey, all of whom were in excellent voice.

The first part of the programme comprised a selection from Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, the solos in which were exceedingly well sung by Miss Arnold, Miss M. J. Brown, Miss Harbourne, R. Biggs, Esq., and Mrs. Flynn. The choruses "O Thou that tellest," "Glory to God," and "Hallelujah," deserve especial mention. At the conclusion of the service, Hymn 117 and the Hallelujah Chorus were sung. On the Sunday following (being the Octave) the services were of a similar character, the morning Anthem being "Since by man came death" (Messiah); and in the evening, Wesley's "Blessed be the God and Father." The local papers speak in very high terms of the successful manner in which the services at this church are performed by Mr. J. Finch Thorne and his choir. Two new solo stops—the hautboy and cremona—have lately been added to the fine organ in St. Mary's Church, by Mr. Holdich, of London, the builder of the organ; and their beautiful qualities were heard to great advantage in the Easter services.

Hendy and Mr. W. H. Birch. The overture to Guillaume Tell was excellently played on the organ by Mr. H. J. Stark, and Mr. Cole was a very efficient conductor and accompanist.

RUNCORN, CHESHIRE.—On the 25th March, a ballad concert was given at the Public Hall, at which Miss Banks, Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Patey undertook the solos, duets, &c., affording the townspeople (many of whom heard these artists for the first time) a great treat. Pyatt, of Nottingham, gave a ballad concert in the Albert Hall, which was well filled. Madame Thaddeus Wells, Miss D'Alton, Mr. Vernon Rigby (in the absence of Mr. Sims Reeves), and Mr. W. Pyatt were the vocalists. Mr. Rigby was in excellent voice, and the reception that was accorded him was a well deserved tribute to the taste and skill with which his several songs were given. Miss D'Alton, Madame Wells, and Mr. Pyatt also materially contributed to the success of the concert. Mr. Nicholson's solos and obbligato on the flute were faultlessly played. The choir, consisting of 16 picked voices, was most efficient.—On the 20th ult., Miss Clara Linley, of Low Ash Hall, gave her annual concert assisted by Miss Spiller (vocalist), Mr. John Peck (violinist), and Mr. John Whitehead (violinist). Miss Linley's playing was artistic in style and brilliant in execution, and was most deservedly applauded. Mr. Peck and Mr. Whitehead were also highly effective on their respective instruments. Mr. J. W. Phillips was the accompanist.

SOUTH HACKNEY.—A very excellent concert was given by the Christ Church Choral Society, at St. Thomas's Hall, on the 9th ult. The first part consisted of Bennett's May Queen, the whole of which was rendered with much precision and expression. The second part was miscellaneous and comprised several popular part-songs, glees, and solos. Miss Hazel was the accompanist and Mr. Alexander Cooper conducted with his usual ability.

STAMFORD.—A successful amateur concert was given in the Assembly Rooms, on the 22nd ult., by members of the Choral Class, under the direction of Mr. H. Nicholson, organist of St. Michael's Church, assisted by Master Noble, and another chorister from Peterborough Cathedral. In the first part, Master Noble gave with much effect "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and "Lift thine eyes" (Elijah), by the two Cathedral boys and Miss E. Smith, was so well sung as to elicit an encore. The second part contained a duet for two pianofortes, brilliantly played by Miss E. Gretton and Mr. H. Nicholson, and a well-chosen selection of vocal music.

STAVELEY.—The Creation was performed on Monday evening, the 7th ult., by the Parish Church choir, assisted by a number of ladies and gentlemen of the town. The soloists were Miss Scynor, of Sheffield, Mr. T. Cooper, of Chesterfield, and Mr. Craven, choir-master of the Parish Church choir. Mr. Vaughan presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Waller led the band. There was a large audience.

STRATFIELD TURGISS, HANTS.—Mr. Hendy gave his annual concert on the 21st ult., in the Assembly Room at the Wellington Arms Hotel, to a numerous audience. The vocalists were Mrs. Smith, Miss Parker, Miss Abbott, and the Messrs. Dance, all of whom obtained encores for their songs. The instrumentalists were the Messrs. Hendy, assisted by friends from Reading and elsewhere, who performed a judicious selection of classical and modern music with much taste. Mr. H. J. Hendy, of Reading, was the solo pianist, and Mr. Hendy, senr. the conductor.

TAUNTON.—A most successful amateur concert was given, on Thursday, the 9th ult., at the London Hotel Assembly Room, in behalf of the Taunton and Somerset Hospital. Mr. John Pridham directed the instrumental portion of the programme, and Mr. J. Comer officiated as vocal conductor. The concert commenced with Rossini's Overture to Semiramide, which was well rendered by the orchestra. Reissiger's Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was exceedingly well played by Miss Mary Gibson, Mr. Pridham, and Mr. Waite; Corelli's Sonata for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, with Mr. J. R. Toms at the pianoforte, was also a feature of the concert. Several part-songs were well sung by the Madrigal Society; and there was a good selection of songs and vocal duets.

WELLINGBOROUGH.—The Philharmonic Society gave its fifth concert in the Corn Exchange on the 8th ult., under the conductorship of W. R. Harrington, Esq. Handel's Oratorio Samson was given in excellent style, both band and chorus taking great pains to ensure a success. The principals were: soprano, Mrs. M. A. Warren; contralto, Miss Thorley; tenor, Mr. W. Dumville (all of Manchester) and Mr. E. Swift, (of Peterborough Cathedral) bass. The audience we regret to say was limited.

WORTHING.—There was a large audience in the Assembly Room on Thursday evening, the 26th March, to hear the performance of the Messiah, by the Worthing Sacred Harmonic Society. Herr Stern was the leader of the orchestra, which was strengthened by a two-manual organ-harmonium, at which Mr. H. S. Cooke, the organist of the Society, presided; and A. H. Collet, Esq., officiated as trumpet soloist. The following professional singers were engaged:—Miss Jessie Jones, soprano; Miss Jenny Pratt, contralto; Mr. G. T. Carter (of Westminster Abbey), tenor; and Signor Federici, bass, all of whom were highly effective in their solos. The choruses were well rendered by the members of the Society; and the playing of the orchestra gave the greatest satisfaction. Mr. L. S. Palmer conducted.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Thomas Lee, to St. Ann's, Aigburth, Liverpool.—Mr. Arthur J. Barth, to St. James's Church, Garlick-hythe, E.C.—Mr. F. J. Dugard, to St. Luke's, Lower Norwood.—Mr. W. H. Orme, to St. James's, Derby.—Mr. Henry Barry, organist and choirmaster, to All Saints' Parish Church, and St. Mark's Church, Binfield, Berks.—Mr. Augustus Tozer, to the Congregational Church, Blackheath.—Mr. Edward Nield, to St. Matthew's, Edgeley, Stockport.—Mr. R. Novello's Editions of the Standard Sacred Works of the great masters have been so long before the public as to render any description of their merits as hand-books superfluous; but the fact of their having been selected by the Directors at each of the great Handel Festivals, may well be referred to as a proof of their extreme accuracy; and it will be seen that the publishers have spared neither expense nor trouble to identify these works with the Handel Festival, by printing, on each occasion, the miscellaneous selection of the second day precisely as it is performed.

It is particularly requested that visitors be careful to order Novello's Editions; as, although others may be offered for sale outside the Palace, none that do not bear their name as publishers, are authorised by the Directors.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious. Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that His Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction. The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26, North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—ERNST KAPS, Sole Importer.—CHARLES RUSSELL.

THE MUSICAL TIMES,

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JUNE 1, 1874.

BACH AND HANDEL.

By F. WEBER.

ONLY a few years ago the number of admirers in this country of the music of Johann Sebastian Bach was but small. He was still looked upon by the majority of amateurs as the learned master of the austere Fugue—too specifically and one-sidedly German to become generally appreciated in a country whose musical taste has been nursed by a Handel. As a matter of fact, however, the composer of the Passion music had not till lately received a fair trial, in the sense in which music of such extraordinary character ought to be tried. For the advice administered to the student of the works of Shakespeare applies also and with still greater force to those of Bach—"Read him again and again: and if then you do not like him, surely the fault must lie in yourself." Only through persistent repetition can this wondrous music take a firm hold, both upon performers and their audience. With due appreciation of this fact, Mr. Barnby undertook the performance of the Matthew Passion some three years ago; and, thanks to his zeal and energy, it is now not only annually heard in our concert-halls during Passion week, but has found its way into the cathedral service, for which it was originally intended by the composer. Thus the works of this unique genius are at last, slowly but surely, penetrating the masses, and their purifying and elevating influence cannot fail to produce marked results upon the musical life of the nation.

It is remarkable how Bach's music grows upon us—how that in it which, at first, appeared to us strange and incomprehensible, will gradually take hold both of our feeling and understanding with convincing power; until at last, by the rule of extremes, we, for a while at least, fancy him to be the only true explorer of the most mysterious depths in his art. Unlike Handel, Bach does not take his audience, as it were, by storm. When Handel advances his mighty columns in the "Messiah" he carries the position at once, and without any resistance on our part. It is the reverse with Bach. We must approach him in a spirit of trust; we must accept his productions as the manifestations of a truly inspired genius, however much they may at first clash with customary notions and our own musical convictions; and more and more shall we perceive the greatness of the man, until we cling to him with enthusiasm. Here is a distinction which is deeply rooted in the character of the two contemporary giants in music. Handel (for instance, in the "Messiah") conquers us at once. Bach (for instance, in the Passion) we must slowly conquer ourselves. Thus, no extraordinary musical capacity is needed for a man to break forth into raptures, when hearing, for the first time, the Hallelujah Chorus. But let him listen, also for the first time, to the opening chorus in the Matthew Passion, and he will most likely be in doubt about his own feelings, it will render him thoughtful and silent. Nor is it difficult to trace the reasons for this, even apart from the natural diversity of genius, merely in the outward career of the two composers. Handel was essentially a warlike genius. To do battle was a necessary condition for his development, and after every victory his strength grew. The strife commenced, when in his earliest childhood the father strictly forbade him to meddle with any musical instrument; it was not yet ended when, already advanced in years, the master produced his "Messiah," the rapidly-growing popularity of which, however, soon spread confusion in the camp of his numerous enemies. Himself a mighty "Harmonious Blacksmith," he has, throughout life, forged his own weapons for strife in his operas, and for final and lasting victory in his grand oratorios. We see him, the youth of eighteen, at Hamburg, the dangerous rival of the famous Keiser, whose countless operas stood just then in the zenith of their popularity. Handel had only to go on "making" operas in the popular and approved style, and, as the phrase goes, his fortune would have been made, and he would undoubtedly have secured for himself an honourable place, by the side of Keiser, in the history of music. His "Almira," composed in 1703, at Hamburg, after the pattern of Keiser's operas, yet full of original vigour, is a proof of this, if indeed any such were needed. But Handel was not the man to be attracted by a certain prospect of ease and comfort thus temptingly thrown in his way. He had that within him which makes men great, and wanting which, genius, even of the highest order, has ever been unable to soar into the loftiest regions of Art, viz., the will and the capacity for hard work. In contemplating the career of this wonderful man, we are constantly reminded of the stirring words which Dante has put into the mouth of his beloved master and guide:

"Now must thou shake off sloth! . . .
For not on beds of down can Fame be won:—
And he who sinks unhonoured to the grave,
Leaves of himself on earth such vestige slight,
As smoke in air, or foam upon the wave."

With the applause still ringing in his ears of a town, whose Opera-house then ranked first in all Germany, the young musician took his staff in his hand, and resolutely turned his back upon the scene of his first glories. He left the ancient Hansatown, having some time previous to his departure given one more unmistakable proof of his warlike faculties in a scuffle with Mattheson, the capellmeister, whose arrogance, during a performance at the Opera, had greatly provoked him. With an ardent longing to breathe the air of the native country of Music, with an ideal as lofty as artist ever had as yet dimly floating before him in the distance, he went to Italy. Here the "caro Sassone" soon became the favourite of a public accustomed to the music of a Scarlatti. But having made the suavity of melody, the grace and elegance, and, withal, the dramatic fire of this and other contemporary Italian masters his own, he again grew restless. He looked about him for a country where his robust Teutonic nature might have the full scope it required. A passing visit to England, soon followed by a second and lasting one, at length convinced him, that here, among the so-called unmusical nation, his powers might be to the fullest developed. With the formation in London of an Institution, called the Royal Academy of Music, for the permanent establishment of Italian Opera, and for which he was especially engaged to compose, the most trying period in Handel's life commenced. For twenty years he upheld the dignity both of his art and of his profession, struggling manfully against all manner of petty intrigues, inseparable, it would seem, from an institution of this class, and especially so, when influenced by court favour, and supported chiefly by the idle and the fashionable. The struggle, for a time, seriously impaired his health, and even his reason. But once restored to his former vigour, he gave to the world his grand oratorios, which now followed one another in rapid succession; the full ripe fruits of a life's untiring study. The Italians, who had been his rivals in the opera (Buononcini and others), he had beaten with their own weapons, strengthened in his hands by the solidity of his genius. During those twenty years of his connection with the Opera, it was with him a question of existence, to some extent to favour the popular taste, nay, to study it, in order to discover the means by which great effects may be obtained. And to reconcile this with the purity of his art, and the dictates of his own artistic conscience, was then almost exclusively his endeavour. But he had now laid Opera aside for ever, as so much preparatory work, concentrating his powers henceforth solely in the Oratorio. Can we then be surprised that, with an arm thus tried and steeled, he knows how to conquer our feelings at once, and to carry us away with him?

And now, in turning from Handel to Bach, whose outward life and experience, in comparison with that of his great contemporary, was so uneventful, so limited, we feel as if leaving the noisy mainroads of the world's intercourse for the calm, silent majesty of the forest. What a contrast! What would—we have heard it said more than once—what would this man not have been, had he likewise commanded all that which Handel's experience placed at his disposal? His equal now, he would, under more favourable circumstances, have completely out-Handel'd Handel. Shortsighted judgment! Let us imagine, for a moment, the cantor of St. Thomas's school at the æsthetic soirées of a Cardinal Ottobuoni at Rome, or among the frivolous folks of the Italian Opera in London, grappling with the caprices of this or that spoilt favourite of the public, and we shall lose all relish for any further investigation of this strange conjecture. Bach's genius needed the quiet, the comparative seclusion, of an organist's life for its steady and harmonious development. His life was a progressive deepening of his own powerful individuality into his art. That he should live and think in music was with him a family tradition, and his thoughts happened to be those of a great genius. It never entered his mind to appeal with his compositions to the outer world, or to study effects to that end. The descendant of a family of organists, he likewise, and as a matter of course, embraced this profession; his ambition never soared above it. To his capacity as organist and cantor also we owe, in the first place, the existence of his great oratorios. He performed them once or twice with his choir at St. Thomas's Church, in Leipsic, after which he laid them aside; perfectly satisfied with having deposited in them his musical confession of faith. They proved to be prophecies, which are gradually coming true in our time. It was his profound learning, his unrivalled mastership over the organ, which had placed him high in the estimation of his contemporaries. But these are qualities which, after the owner of them has passed away, will soon hand over his memory to the comparative oblivion of a mere historical name. The works which, above all others, bear the stamp of immortality, were barely known to any one, except to the choristers, who had performed them under the master's direction. Dr. Burney, who visited Leipsic some twenty years after Bach's death, speaks of him chiefly as "the father of C. Phil. Emanuel Bach," whom he considers "learned even beyond his father, whenever he pleases, and far before him in variety of modulation." The composer of the "Passion Music," surpassed by others in learning and contrivance, was about to be shelved in the worthy Doctor's "History of Music!" While quoting from a musical writer, for whose merits, as a collector of historical material, at a period when the subject met with but little general interest, we entertain the greatest respect, we cannot refrain from adding yet another passage, referring to the above-mentioned gifted son of Bach's. The "Ham-burgh Bach," as he is called, having played some of his compositions to Burney, the latter says of them, "They seem made for another region, or at least another century, when what is now thought difficult and far-fetched will, perhaps, be familiar and natural." The prediction with regard to the son has since been fulfilled in the works of the father.

We have endeavoured to trace, in the character and development of the two great masters of Oratorio, the reasons why their music should affect us in such an entirely different manner. From the above comparison we may also gather, that the Oratorios of Bach must, of necessity, be confined in narrower limits than those of Handel; a fact which only blind admirers of the great man will deny. While in the former we have the composer's deep religious feelings, his wonderful individuality, his strong reflective powers, all combined in the frame of the divine Passion, the latter show a more universal, cosmopolitan character; both may, nevertheless, be equally great. When Handel wrote his immortal works, they were to his time a revelation; the music of Bach, on the other hand, was a prophecy. To us, who are privileged to compare the works of both, it will appear that they supply one another's deficiencies, and that the intimate acquaintance with the works of one, will at the same time assist us in understanding and appreciating the other. We have lately become familiar with the Matthew Passion; may we soon see the St. John Passion music take its place by the side of it. The former is indeed the maturer work, grown, as it were, out of the latter, which it surpasses in grandeur of design and in the concentration of effects. Nevertheless, the St. John Passion is fully as attractive in its details, in the elaboration of which the composer seems to have lingered with especial love and veneration; fully entering into the spirit of the "Apostle of Love," whose words he had before him. We would not, therefore, make a distinction as to the relative merits of these two great oratorios of Bach, but place them side by side, as we do the two gospels, upon the narrative of which they are based.

Bach is said to have written the music to the Passion three (and, according to some, five) times. Only two settings, however, have as yet escaped from the fetters of an old manuscript, covered with the dust of a hundred years, to grow again into living sound, and to proclaim to thousands upon thousands of admiring listeners how mighty a genius dwelt in the modest cantor of St. Thomas's Church, Leipsic. "The men of our time," says Macaulay, referring to a manuscript essay of Milton's just discovered, "the men of our time are not to be converted or perverted by quartos." It is different in Art. These "musical quartos," brought to light again by the fiery zeal of the youthful Mendelssohn, have since not only assumed flesh and blood, but have exercised the most decisive influence upon the development of Music in modern days.

As the taste for music advances in this country, it may be possible that persons who have been in the habit of indulging in a little cheerful conversation during a young lady's performance at a private party, will see the necessity of remaining quiet—if not for their own pleasure, at least out of respect for those who desire to listen. It may also happen that those who arrive after the commencement of a public concert will be content to stay outside until a movement is finished, instead of majestically sailing up the room and entering into an altercation with the attendant respecting their seats. To help on so desirable a reform, however, does it not behove every real lover of art to put a gentle pressure upon those who still uphold the right of the individual at the expense of the many? Might not a "Hush!" for instance, from the host at an evening party exercise a magical effect upon the talkers; and could not the custom adopted by the Germans, of closing the doors of a concert-room at the beginning of a movement be at once rigidly enforced? Timidly, indeed, some of our resident professors have partially carried out this system—and all honour be to Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who has got so far as to exclude the late comers "during the movements of the first and last piece"—but why should there be any timidity in the matter? Surely every person who wishes well to art and artists would give his hearty support to such a cause; and no concert-giver who unflinchingly perseveres in the course we advocate need be afraid of offending any one whose good will and patronage is worth respecting.

In the decease of Mr. William Euing, which took place during the past month, Glasgow has lost a most zealous promoter of good music, and a warm friend of true artists. His house was the rallying point for vocal and instrumental talent: and, till within the last few years, he constantly had select musical meetings and performances in his drawing-room. He was the founder of a Lectureship of Musical Science, History and Biography in the Andersonian University, for the endowment of which he devoted £3000; and his fine musical library, which he has bequeathed to the same Institution, will be of inestimable value to the students. At the time of his death Mr. Euing was 86 years of age.

THE LOWER RHINE FESTIVAL AT COLOGNE. FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

THE musical Festival which has just taken place at Cologne appears to me to be worthy of some notice, not only from its own intrinsic merits, but also as a test of the proficiency we have attained in England in musical matters, as exemplified at our country festivals. I say country festivals, because it would be manifestly unfair to compare Cologne—a country town—with London. Germany, in the minds of all thoughtful musicians, has always taken the lead, both in the production and performance of music, and is, consequently, well adapted to form a scale by which we may measure our own progress.

In the first place, as to the programme, Germany has long since ceased to be conservative, and, in some instances, has shown signs of a tendency to overlook, and even reject, the ancient landmarks of the art with something like recklessness.

On the other hand, England moves slowly in the relinquishment of old favourites. Nearly thirty years ago the production of Mendelssohn's "Elijah" struck the first blow at the extreme popularity of Haydn's "Creation." But since that time the "Messiah" and "Elijah" have seldom, if ever, been absent from festival programmes in England, just as in previous years the "Messiah" and "Creation" had been considered absolutely essential to the success of a festival.

The introduction of Bach's "Passion" within the last three years has indicated the beginning of another move, the result of which is not difficult to foretell. Nor must it be forgotten that often—indeed frequently—a new work is produced at these gatherings. Upon the whole, therefore, it would seem that beyond the incessant repetition of the two favourite Oratorios, there is little or nothing to find fault with in the selection of music on our side of the water.

The following programme of the Cologne Festival will tend to show, that so long as selections are made upon the principles which have evidently inspired this, there will be no cause to fear. It must be premised that "Samson" is to all intents and purposes a novelty to the Germans—the works of Handel being in no degree in such request in Germany as they are in England.

PROGRAMME OF FESTIVAL.

FIRST DAY, SUNDAY, MAY 24.

"Samson" G. F. Handel.
Triumphlied Johannes Brahms.

SECOND DAY, MONDAY, MAY 25.

Symphony (Pastorale) L. van Beethoven.
"The Destruction of Jerusalem" Dr. Ferdinand Hiller.

THIRD DAY, TUESDAY, MAY 26.

A miscellaneous selection, including Overture (Genoveva) R. Schumann.
Symphony (A major) Mendelssohn.
Violin Concerto Viotti.
Ungarische Tänze Johannes Brahms.
Arias by Gluck, Mozart, Weber, Schumann, and Brahms.

A glance at this will show how little the Germans rely upon the drawing-power of old favourites. But it is perhaps in the preparation for these performances—in other words the rehearsals—that the difference is most marked. In an English Festival there are as a rule two full-rehearsals for a number of performances, averaging from six to eight, and one of them not unfrequently takes place so long before the festival (sometimes as long as two or three months), as to be practically valueless for any other purpose than for correcting errors in the parts. In the Festival at present under notice there were (I copy from a printed paper circulated in the town) two rehearsals averaging four hours each, on Friday, May 22; two on Saturday, one on Monday, and one on Tuesday. They have therefore six full rehearsals for three performances to place beside the two rehearsals for eight performances, considered sufficient in England. It must, however, be admitted that in the latter instance two out of the eight performances are devoted to works already well-known, though this by no means redresses the balance, nor would a foreign musician admit that even a well-known work should be passed over without a rehearsal. It should also be mentioned that the principal soloists and chorus attend, at least the majority of these practices. In this matter then we have something to learn. Increase the number of rehearsals and shorten the programmes. The audience will gain in every way by better performances and less chance of fatigue.

One more comparison and I have done with this portion of my subject. A practice has become prevalent at English Oratorio performances for the solo singers to make their appearance upon the orchestra just before their song comes on, and leave the orchestra immediately after it is over, not unfrequently going and coming two or three times in the course of an evening. It is pleasant to be able to record that this objectionable practice has not penetrated to Germany yet, and I venture to express a hope that it never will. Anything more disrespectful to an audience or damaging to the music than to see the principal vocalists popping up and down on either side, like rabbits in a warren, can hardly be conceived. It was quite refreshing to notice the German artists—not only at the performance, but at the rehearsals as well—take their places before the music had commenced, and remain until the last note had been played. I commend this fact to the notice of English conductors and the good sense of the artists.

As a locale for a great musical festival, Cologne is fortunate. It possesses a large and singularly beautiful hall—the Gürzenich-Salle—somewhat resembling Westminster Hall, and almost as large. "It enjoys the advantage of the services as capellmeister of Dr. Hiller, who is the first living composer and performer of the true classical school; and, further, it stands in the centre of a considerable number of towns possessing choral and instrumental Societies of far more than the average efficiency.

With all these advantages, therefore, it is not difficult to suppose that the circumstances under which the Lower Rhine Festival takes place when Cologne is selected are somewhat exceptional. In spite of this, however, the ensemble is certainly not superior to that we are accustomed to in England, nor, indeed, is it always as good. The choir sings correctly and conscientiously, but there is not the same brightness of tone, still less the attack and finish which we get in England; and, whilst I am upon this subject, I may say that, were the English Musical Festivals regarded more from a purely musical point of view than a commercial one—although the profits may be given to excellent objects—it would be possible to produce an ensemble that would win the admiration of the whole musical world.

To return, however, to Cologne. The performance of "Samson" was interesting, and in almost all respects admirable. The cuts necessarily made in this, the longest of all Oratorios, were, as a rule, judiciously done; and the same meed of praise may be awarded to the extra accompaniments by Herr Carl Müller. The tempi at which some of the well-known movements were taken would have startled those who hold fast by tradition. "Fixed in His everlasting seat," and the Dead March from "Saul," may be mentioned, amongst others, as having been taken almost as fast again as we are accustomed to hear them taken in England. On the other hand, there were others which were taken just as much too slowly, as though to redress the balance.

I should not like, however, to omit to mention one thing as being most creditable to all concerned, and well worthy of imitation, viz., the reverence with which the text of Handel was scrupulously adhered to. It was quite interesting to notice in how many instances the alteration of a single note would have placed the passage more easily within the compass of the singer's voice; yet in not one instance was advantage taken of this, neither was a turn, nor any other embellishment inserted for the purpose of showing off the singer at the expense of the composer.

For a comparatively young composer to direct a new work immediately after Handel's "Samson" is certainly a trying ordeal. With the echoes of "Let the bright Seraphim" and "Let their celestial concerts" still ringing in one's ears, it would be difficult to find in the compositions of any other man a movement that would not have the effect of an anti-climax. It is high praise—very high praise indeed—to say that there was no sense of falling off when Herr Brahms stepped forward, bâton in hand, and led off the broad and dignified instrumental introduction to the Triumphlied. Rather as the piece went on there was indicated a gathering increase of power, which led irresistibly to the conclusion that a work of high genius had been created by the man in whom Schumann had said many years before that the hope of Germany rested. It would be impossible to do justice to so important a composition within these limits, but no doubt it will obtain an early hearing in England. This much, however, may be said, that so long as we have a composer living who can rise to the height of the Triumphlied, we need be under no apprehensions of the race of giants becoming extinct.

For the reason just mentioned, it is quite impossible to speak in detail of Dr. Hiller's Oratorio, which formed the chief item of the second day's programme. It must suffice to say that it was justly received with great enthusiasm, and I cannot but feel that the repertory of Oratorio music in England would be enriched by the addition of so noble a work.

The performance of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony was well nigh faultless. From the opening bars it was plain that the executants were animated by the same spirit, and the result was a reading which will not be soon forgotten.

The third day's performance was more interesting to the general public than to a musician, consisting as it mainly did of well-known Arias from the Operas in which Madame Peschka-Leutner, Madame Joachim, Herr Diener, and Herr Schelper greatly distinguished themselves. A singularly fine performance of Schumann's overture to "Genoveva" scored another honour to the orchestra.

In closing this account I wish to record an interesting incident which took place at the house of Dr. Hiller, who had issued invitations for a reception at which all the principal musicians then in Cologne attended. After some little time silence was called, and Gaevaert, the Principal of the Conservatoire at Brussels, advancing to Dr. Hiller, took him by the hand, and stated that the King of the Belgians had deputed him to convey his congratulations to the maestro—to express the high regard he had for his virtues as a man and his genius as a musician—and to beg his acceptance of the Order of the Leopold.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE idea of illustrating the music of England, Germany, France, Russia, Denmark, Norway and Sweden during the series of Summer concerts is an exceedingly happy one, and certainly a welcome change from the Italian Opera Concerts which have so long come in with the warm weather at this establishment. Besides these, two Saturdays are to be included in the series, on the first of which Signor Randegger's Cantata "Fridolin" is to be performed, and the second is to be devoted to examples of the quaint and humorous in music. At the first concert, on the 2nd ult., the German school was represented, including "Music for the Church"—in which Dr. Stainer's excellent performance on the organ of Bach's pedal Fugue in G minor was a conspicuous feature—"Music for the Concert-room and Theatre"—comprising Beethoven's Symphony in A, Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor (finely rendered by Mdle. Marie Krebs) and several vocal pieces, and "Music for the Ball-room"—illustrated by one of Lanner's waltzes. The performance, under the direction of Mr. Manns, was highly successful. The concert on the 16th ult. scarcely calls for a serious musical notice. The Palace on that day was given over to the Emperor of Russia and those who came to look at him; and Madlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley were merely there to receive him with musical honours. The orchestral force numbered about 500 performers, consisting of eleven military bands, besides that of the Crystal Palace, and the chorus was composed of the London Contingent for the Handel Festival Choir. As a musical demonstration the concert was highly successful, the applause at the conclusion being most enthusiastic.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

AUBER'S "Diamans de la Couronne" introduced Madlle. Singelli for the first time in England as Catarina, on the 12th ult., and with a success which we have little doubt will become more decided as the débutante gains confidence before her audience. Slightly nervous at first, Madlle. Singelli's charming soprano voice and facile execution were scarcely displayed until the varied air, "Ah, io vo' spezzar," which was thrown off with such fluency, as to elicit the most enthusiastic applause and a solid encore. She has since repeated the character with increased effect, and will no doubt shortly essay some new part, by which we may be more enabled to judge of her varied powers. The Opera was well put upon the stage, and the recitatives, by Signor Gelli—although but ill supplying the place of the original dialogue—were tolerably effective. We may likewise mention that Mr. Bentham has created a good impression in the character of Faust, especially in the impassioned music of the Garden Scene, and that Madlle. Marie Roze, as Margherita, and Signor de Reschi, as Valentino, were also exceedingly well received. Balfe's Opera, "Il Talismano," in which Madame Christine Nilsson is to sustain the part of the heroine, continues to be promised, but no date is fixed for its production.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE return of Madame Adelina Patti, with a voice improved in quality and power, has been the great event during the past month. Her appearance for the first time this season was in Rossini's ever welcome "Barbière di Siviglia;" and her entry was greeted by such an enthusiastic burst of applause that—although accustomed as she is to such an ovation—for a few minutes she seemed unnerved. M. Faure has also re-joined the company, and by his fine acting and singing, given a vitality to M. Ambroise Thomas's feeble Opera, "Hamlet," which may justify the management in occasionally giving it a hearing during the season, especially as the Ophelia of Madlle. Albani is one of her most successful impersonations. Signor Bolis, the new tenor, has materially strengthened the impression he created on his first appearance, his singing of the part of the Duke, in "Rigoletto," especially, eliciting enthusiastic and well deserved applause. We regret to say that once more we have had Gomez' Opera, "Il Guarany"—at whose desire we are of course unable to say—but we must add that "Il Flauto Magico" and "Don Giovanni" have also been given, the latter with an exceptionally strong cast.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE third concert, on the 4th ult., commenced with Spohr's Overture in F minor, written expressly for the Society, and still in manuscript. This work has not been performed since 1821, and save as a graceful act of courtesy to the memory of the composer, it is a question whether it was really worth reviving. There is scarcely anything seriously to engage the attention throughout the composition, but it is obviously the creation of an experienced artist, and is written with that skill and knowledge of instrumentation which must at least command respect from all educated listeners. Max Bruch's Concerto for the violin received a better rendering than the work deserves from Herr Straus, the applause which it elicited being evidently intended more for the performer than the composer. Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, Sir Sterndale Bennett's beautifully descriptive "Paradise and the Peri," and Mendelssohn's "Ruy Blas" Overture were excellently given by the orchestra, and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington was encored in a Romance from Hèrold's "Pré aux clercs." At the fourth concert, on the 18th ult., a Concerto for the violin by Lalo, was played by Senor Sarasate, neither the composition nor the performer, however, exciting any special sensation. Senor Sarasate has an agreeable, but somewhat thin tone, and executes with neatness. He was much applauded, and recalled after leaving the platform. The orchestral pieces were Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Beethoven's in F, No. 8, and the Overtures "Calm sea and prosperous voyage" (Mendelssohn) and "Lodoiska" (Cherubini), the vocalists being Herr Gustav Walter and Mr. Santley. Mr. W. G. Cusins, as usual, conducted.

LONDON GREGORIAN CHORAL ASSOCIATION.

A FESTIVAL Service of an interesting nature was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday evening, the 7th ult. The choir numbered upwards of one thousand voices, and was accompanied by the organ and a small orchestra of brass instruments, which told with admirable effect. The congregation, which was enormous, and had filled almost every available space some time before the Service commenced, was largely composed of sympathisers with the Gregorian movement—not a few being cassocked priests of the Church of England. The interval before the commencement of the Service was admirably utilized by a series of voluntaries played on the organ by Dr. Stainer, which had the double effect of preventing conversation and preparing the mind for the Service. Soon after eight, a few instrumental chords announced the commencement of the first processional Hymn, "Vexilla Regis prodeunt." This was followed by a second "processional," "O filii et filiae," with the quaint and touching music from La Feillée and Clément, after which the Service proper began. In passing, it may be mentioned that the Psalms were too long, and caused a feeling of weariness to set in, which soon culminated in many of the congregation leaving the church at this early point in the Service. Indeed the slow pace at which it may be presumed it was found necessary to take the music with so vast an assemblage of performers, caused the Magnificat to be commenced at a quarter past nine. At this time the people were leaving in crowds. It is to be hoped that this hint will not be lost upon those who arrange the future Festivals, for one of the charges most constantly brought against Gregorian music is its dulness and tediousness.

The anthem for double choir, by Jacobus Händl, was decidedly interesting to musical antiquarians, but what effect it might have produced upon a congregation under ordinary circumstances it is difficult to say. The length of the Psalms and Canticles had produced the effect of exhaustion, and the attention of the worshippers could no longer be taxed. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. the Dean of Manchester, whose sympathies, as is well known, have always been in favour of the Gregorian style of music. The services of Mr. Warwick Jordan should not be passed over without warm commendation; his training of the choirs and musicianly accompaniments to the music being alike admirable.

THE first of Mr. Henry Leslie's two summer concerts was given on the 21st ult., at St. James's Hall. The programme consisted of madrigals and part-songs, well selected to display the capabilities of his finely trained choir, the vocal music being relieved by the performance of Mr. Charles Hallé and Madame Norman-Neruda, who united their talents in Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata," with an effect which is too well known to need recording. The madrigals were given to perfection, the only one encored, however, being "In the merry Spring time," by the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe. Pinsuti's melodious Serenade, "In this hour of soften'd splendour," received a similar compliment, and the second verse was repeated. The only novelty was a part-song, by Mr. Henry Leslie, called "The Angel's visit," a smoothly written and effective composition, which was warmly received. Mention must be made of the excellent singing of Signor Federici, who gave, amongst other solos, the declamatory air, "Honour and arms," from "Samson," with much success. In every respect this was an excellent concert.

ON Monday evening, the 18th ult., a very interesting Lecture was given in the National Schools, Brixton, by the Rev. Gordon Calthrop, M.A., (Chaplain to the Lord Mayor), on the Life and Times of Judas Maccabæus. The musical illustrations from Handel's Oratorio, were given by the St. Matthew's Choral Society, assisted by Miss Mary Davies, Madlle. Reimar, Mr. Dudley Thomas and Mr. Crome. Mr. Shinn, organist of Brixton Church, conducted, and also accompanied on the pianoforte. Mr. J. B. Gaunt presided at the American Organ.

A CONCERT of sacred and secular music was given by the Phoenix Amateur Musical Society, on Monday evening, the 11th ult., at the Drill-Room, Crouch End, under the presidency of J. H. Warner, Esq., of the Priory, Hornsey. Miss Miéville commenced the concert with the solo, "Hear my prayer," which she sang with much effect, her soprano voice telling wonderfully with the audience. The chorus was finely sung, and met with loud applause. "O salutaris Hostia" was excellently rendered, and "I waited for the Lord," was successfully given by Miss Miller and Miss Moss. The "Hallelujah Chorus," was a most appropriate finish to the first part, and at its close the "Phoenix" received an ovation which was but a meet reward for their exertions. This was also a signal for an appropriate mark of approbation to Captain Phillips, who conducted, and whose training of his choir was evidenced from the beginning to the end, and to Miss Smith, for her truly excellent accompaniments. The second part of the programme consisted of secular music, one of the most conspicuous features in which was Captain Phillips's solo, which was rapturously and deservedly applauded. Miss Moss and Miss Miéville received encores for their songs; and the part-music was sung with a finish which reflected the utmost credit upon the Society. It is to be hoped that many more concerts will be given by the Phoenix, which, must prosper, and become more and more efficient under the able hands of Captain Phillips.

A VERY successful concert was given on the 19th ult., by the Choral Society and Choir of St. Mary, Boltons, West Brompton, at the Onslow Hall, Brompton, under the direction of Mr. Horace Buttery, director of the choir and organist of St. Mary's. Mendelssohn's psalm "O come let us sing," occupied the first part of the programme. Mr. Stedman sang the tenor solos with his accustomed ability. The duet for two sopranos was given with the utmost truth of expression by Miss Jessie Royd and Miss Edith Holman Andrews. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous. The duet "O that we two were Maying" (Alice Mary Smith) was excellently sung by Miss Royd and Mr. Stedman. A very fine rendering of "Tom Bowling" was given by Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Arthur Wickham and Mr. Horace Gray also contributed solos. The choir performed with great care and expression a selection of glees and part-songs, preceded by a performance of the Russian National Anthem (Barnby's arrangement), and "God save the Queen." Mr. J. M. Jones officiated at the piano, and Mr. H. J. White at the harmonium. A feature of the concert was the brilliant performance by Mr. W. S. Hoyte of a piano solo (Liszt's "Rigoletto"), which was unanimously redemanded.

HERR AND MADAME SAUERBREY's evening concert took place at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 7th ult. The programme included Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 29), excellently played by Herr Sauerbrey, Mendelssohn's "Allegro brillante," in which he was joined by his pupil, Miss Amy Stewart, and Gade's Sonata in D minor (Op. 21), for pianoforte and violin, with Herr Deichmann. Madame Sauerbrey was highly successful in several solos, and was assisted in the vocal music by Miss Banks and Signor Federici. Herr Deichmann contributed a solo on the violin, and Mr. Frederick Chatterton one on the harp.

MR. RIDLEY PRENTICE gave a Pianoforte Recital at St. George's Hall on the 13th ult. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in B minor, transcribed for the pianoforte by Liszt, some of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte," Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 31, No. 3), Sterndale Bennett's Three Musical Sketches, and some charming compositions of the concert-giver were excellently played. Miss Ellen Horne was the vocalist.

THE 220th Festival of the Sons of the Clergy was celebrated in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 20th ult. The service, which was full choral, was finely rendered, the choir having been increased by members from the Chapel Royal, Westminster Abbey, St. George's, Windsor, &c., numbering about 250 voices. The service was preceded by Mendelssohn's Overture to "Athalia," and the Magnificat in A, composed by Dr. Stainer for last year's Festival, Mendelssohn's "As the hart pants," and the Old Hundredth Psalm were included amongst the pieces selected for the occasion. After the sermon, which was eloquently preached by the Bishop of Peterborough, the "Hallelujah Chorus" was sung, and a collection made in aid of the funds of the Charity. The attendance was very large.

THE decease of Signor Mongini, which occurred during the past month at Milan, will be received with general regret; for, although his want of intellectual training sadly marred the effect of his natural gifts, there were times when his singing aroused even the most apathetic audience into positive enthusiasm. With all his defects, there were certain characters—Arnoldo, in "Guillaume Tell," more especially—in which he was always welcome; and, in the present dearth of tenors, his loss will be felt for some time.

THE re-erection of the Alexandra Palace is well understood proceeding rapidly, and it is now announced that the building will be opened during the present summer. There will be, as before, a Concert Room for musical performances on a smaller scale than those given in the Great Central Hall, under the direction of Mr. H. Weist Hill. The Alexandra Palace Choir has undergone careful and periodical training, and the frequent rehearsals give assurance that the performances will be a source of great enjoyment to the visitors. At Mr. Willis's Great Organ in the Central Hall, Mr. Frederic Archer will again preside.

WE are glad to be able to state that Mr. Sims Reeves, whose long and severe indisposition has entirely prevented his singing during the past winter, has announced a benefit concert, at the Royal Albert Hall, the date of which is not yet specified, when he will be assisted by Madame Christine Nilsson, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Miss Helen D'Alton, and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Norman-Neruda, and Mr. Santley. Choral music will also be contributed by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barnby.

MADAME ANNETTE ESSIOFF gave a Pianoforte Recital on the morning of the 27th ult., at St. James's Hall, before a numerous and highly critical audience. The exceptional powers of this excellent pianist were fully displayed in a varied selection of pieces, amongst the most successful of which were Beethoven's Sonata in C major (Op. 53), several pieces by Chopin, Bach, &c., and Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," all of which elicited the warmest applause. Her second Recital is announced to take place on the 13th inst.

THE West London and Kilburn Musical Society gave a concert on Monday evening, the 11th ult., in St. Thomas's Hall. The first part comprised Herr Gollmick's sparkling Operetta, "The Blind Beggar's Daughter of Bethnal Green." The solos were allotted to Miss Warwick, Messrs. Greenhill, Wake, Kilbey, Kedle, and Tucker, and were rendered very efficiently, some of the numbers being encored. The choruses were steadily sung and well supported by the band. The second part opened with Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," the solos being admirably sustained by Miss Putney. Several songs were contributed by Misses Warwick and Putney, Messrs. Thornborough and Greenhill; and Miss Muncey (a pupil of Mr. W. Beavan) gave a pianoforte solo. Mr. John Beavan was the accompanist, and Mr. W. Beavan conducted.

ON Thursday evening, the 7th ult., Mr. Brinley Richards delivered a lecture on the National Music of Wales, in the Lecture Room of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, Conduit Street, Regent Street. The chair was taken by Mr. J. H. Puleston, M.P. who in a few well-chosen words introduced the lecturer. Perhaps no man is better calculated than is Mr. Richards to be accepted as an authority on this special subject, since he is the presiding genius in his generation over the musical department of the Eisteddfodau of the Principality. Mr. Richards commenced his lecture by showing how the modern composers had very freely interwoven the music of ancient writers with their own compositions, and, with a considerable amount of skill, pointed out the peculiarities which distinguish the music of one nation from another. He repudiated the statements that England had no national music, and that the music of Wales was derived from Ireland. The lecture was illustrated by vocal and instrumental selections from the music of the nations referred to. The melodies, as originally sang, were compared with modernized versions; and it must be acknowledged that in the majority of cases the latter elicited the largest amount of approbation from a numerous and fashionable audience. The walls were covered with sketches, and the platform crowded with models of ancient musical instruments, including Mr. Frederick Chester's contributions of Egyptian, Assyrian, Scotch, Irish, and Welsh harps, and interesting specimens lent for the evening by Mr. Carl Engel and Dr. G. W. Lichner, Tom Moore's miniature harp, lent by Mrs. S. C. Hall, and an exquisite little Irish harp, adorned with golden shamrocks on a green ground, lent by Mr. George Browning, Hon. Sec. of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts. The lecture was full of interest and information. The vocal illustrations, in Scotch, Irish, and Welsh music, were given with much effect by Miss Mary Davies and Miss Lizzie Evans. At the close of the entertainment the lecturer was most warmly applauded; and after a vote of thanks had been passed to the chairman, the company separated.

THE closing concert of the Wagner Society for the present season was given at St. James's Hall on the 13th ult. The scena from "Tristan und Isolde" tested most forcibly the declamatory powers of Madame Otto-Alvsleben, but she triumphed gloriously over the difficulties, and achieved a success with all the Wagner worshippers in the room. The other vocalists were Madlle. Helène Arnim, Messrs. Lane, Elmenhorst and Wharton. The orchestra was as efficient as ever, and Herr Dannreuther conducted with his accustomed energy; but the constant repetition of the most effective of Wagner's pieces from his Operas in a concert-room can give an English audience but a faint idea of his dramatic genius. Let us hope that next season something may really be done by this Society towards the object which the disciples of this essentially operatic composer should keep steadily in view.

MISS AGNES ZIMMERMANN'S concert, which took place on the 30th April at the Hanover Square Rooms, drew together an audience thoroughly sympathetic with the classical nature of the programme selected for the occasion. The principal attraction was the bénéficiaire's Sonata in A minor, for violin and pianoforte, which was produced for the first time, and achieved a success which was not in the slightest degree traceable to the friendly feeling usually evinced towards an artist at her own concert: it is a work so full of invention, so scholarly in treatment and so perfect in construction that, as the production of an entire stranger, it could not fail to have created a marked impression upon the listeners. The first movement is written with consummate knowledge of effect, and with a freedom which shows an intimate acquaintance with the capabilities of the violin, as well as the instrument over which the composer has so amply proved her perfect command. The "Scherzo" is perhaps destined to be the most popular movement in the Sonata; but the "Andante" is a stream of captivating melody, and the conversational passages so rivetted the attention of the audience that during the whole of the vivacious "Finale" there seemed to be a lingering feeling of regret that this beautiful slow movement had not been re-demanded. With a characteristic modesty, Miss Zimmermann has given the most important passages in this Sonata to the violin; but the parts are most artistically interwoven; and the sympathetic manner in which the two instruments are treated throughout proves that the composer has thought out her design as an artist should think, and in no single instance has sacrificed her work for the mere sake of display. The violin playing of Madame Norman-Néruda, who was Miss Zimmermann's associate in this piece, was absolute perfection; and the delicate execution and eloquent phrasing of the composer made us feel that none but these two artists could thoroughly reveal the beauties of the work. The applause at the conclusion was loud and continuous. Miss Zimmermann's solo was Schumann's clever but somewhat eccentric series of pieces called the "Carnaval," which she played, from memory, with admirable precision and refinement. The concerted pieces were Beethoven's Sonata in G minor (Op. 5, No. 2) for pianoforte and violoncello, in which Herr Daubert lent his valuable assistance, and Brahms's Quartet in A major (Op. 26) for pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello, excellently rendered by the concert-giver, Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. W. H. Hann, and Herr Daubert. The singers were Miss Antoinette Sterling and Mr. Santley, both of whom received encores, one being elicited by the last named vocalist for an elegant song by Miss Zimmermann, called "Love, I may not tarry here." Mr. S. Naylor was the accompanist.

WE understand, from the local papers, that the Leeds Musical Festival will extend over four days, beginning October 5th, and will be held in the Town Hall. Sir Michael Costa is to be the conductor, Dr. Spark organist, and Mr. R. S. Burton chorus-master. As the hall will seat only 1,750 persons, it is proposed to erect a temporary gallery capable of accommodating 600 more. The Oratorios to be performed and the pieces for the evening concerts have not yet been selected. Three or four eminent composers have been communicated with as to new works for the occasion; but it is feared the time is too brief for the preparing of any great work. The committees are now meeting frequently; and as the guarantee fund amounts to nearly £6,000, the Festival bids fair to be a financial as well as a musical success.

MISS PURDY gave a morning concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 7th ult., which was well attended. The bénéficiaire was highly successful in her songs, especially in one from Vacca's "Romeo e Giulietta;" and Madame F. Lancia, Mr. Trelawny Cobham and Signor Gardoni also contributed several pieces with much effect. Pianoforte fantasias were given by Herr Ganz and Signor Tito Mattei, but the vocal solos were the chief attraction of the concert.

A COLLECTION of Chants is in course of preparation, to be used with the Cathedral Psalter. The Editors invite contributions. Address the Editors of the Cathedral Psalter, care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners-street, W.

THE annual performance of the "Messiah," in aid of the funds of the Royal Society of Musicians, took place on the 8th ult., at St. James's Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. W. G. Cusins, a member of the Society. The principal singers were Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Georgina Maudsley, Madame Patey, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Thurley Beale and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The orchestra was ably led by Mr. Willy, the trumpet obbligato was played by Mr. Harper, and Mr. Hopkins presided at the organ. The work was finely rendered throughout.

ON May-day the St. Georges' Glee Union appropriately produced Sir Sterndale Bennett's Cantata "The May Queen." The soloists were Miss Horder, Miss Buley, and Messrs. Carter and Theodore Distin, all of whom were very successful. The choruses were well sung, but did not elicit the approbation which was fairly their due. Mesdames Augarde, Pritchard and Matthews were at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. S. Hoyte at the harmonium. The latter gentleman also gave in the second part a spirited rendering of the overture to "Guillaume Tell."

THE second of a series of Services of Praise was held at Greville Place Church, Abbey Road, St. John's Wood, on Friday, the 8th ult., the first part being "Congregational," the second, "Meditative." In the former, a "Te Deum," by the organist, Mr. E. Sharp, was much admired. The second part consisted of selections from the works of Mendelssohn, and comprised "Hear my prayer" (the solo sung by Miss Callard), "Judge me, O God," and a selection from "Elijah." Mr. Sharp conducted in his usual efficient manner, and the Service generally was very successful.

ON Wednesday, the 20th ult., at the City Mart, Messrs. Chinnock, the auctioneers, put up for sale, before an excited, if not admiring, audience of dramatic managers, operatic Impresarios, lawyers, agents, &c., the ground-rent of Her Majesty's Theatre, now paid by the Earl of Dudley, who is holder of the lease granted to Mr. Lumley, which will expire at Michaelmas term, 1891, at rents amounting to £1,934 14s. per annum. This was Lot 1, in which was comprised the house No. 1, Pall Mall, held at a rental of £230 per year; so that the total rental of £2,164 14s. per annum will be receivable by the purchaser of Lot 1, all rates, taxes, and outgoings being paid by the tenant. There seem to have been three leading bidders for this lot: one, Mr. Mapleson, of Her Majesty's Opera; the second, an agent, to secure the property, if possible, for a National Opera-house; and the other, Mr. Last, a solicitor, who proved to be the highest bidder, as Lot 1 was knocked down to him for £31,000. The theatre will pass into his hands, therefore, in 1891, when Lord Dudley's lease falls in; but the buyer will still possess the property until the original lease under the Crown will expire in 1912. The sale was by direction of the trustees of Mr. H. E. Holloway, and comprised twenty lots altogether, including the whole of the Opera Arcade, with its fifteen shops, Nos. 1 to 5, Pall Mall, the Opera-house with the Haymarket frontage, and the United Hotel and Clergy Club. The present income arising from these is £5,406 14s., and they realized £92,000. The letting of the theatre remains, of course, in the hands of the Earl of Dudley.—Athenæum.

Two Societies for the practice of concerted vocal music have recently been formed, the first, called the "Orsett" Choral Society, having 60 members, meeting once in three weeks at the Orsett Institute, and the second, entitled the "Romford" Choral Society, numbering 30 members, assembling every week at the Girls' School-room. To both these Associations Mr. Henry Regaldi, R.A.M., is appointed conductor; and as they are under distinguished patronage, and most of the members exhibit much talent, there can be little doubt that they will speedily grow into importance.

On the 6th ult. Madame Stafford gave her first concert at the Beethoven Rooms, when she was assisted by Mesdames Romanelli, Cullen, Arthur, Hincks, Messrs. Stedman, Ratford, Hause, and Herr Schubert. The most successful numbers were the "Prière" (Herr Schubert) solo violoncello, played by the composer, and "The Angel at the Window," by B. Tours, sung by Mr. Stedman.

A MUSICAL performance by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind, took place at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, N.W., on the 22nd ult. The first part consisted of Arthur Sullivan's Oratorio "The Prodigal Son;" the second part was miscellaneous. The pupils acquitted themselves very creditably, and much praise is due to the conductor, Mr. Edwin Barnes, for his careful and patient training.

MR. E. H. THORNE gave a Pianoforte Recital at St. George's Hall on the morning of the 26th ult., before a highly appreciative audience. Sir Sterndale Bennett's Sonata, "The Maid of Orleans," and Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," were well selected to test Mr. Thorne's qualifications as a classical pianist; and J. S. Bach's Partita in G major, a Fantasia by Liszt, and a graceful Sketch of his own, gave an agreeable variety to the programme, and enabled the concert giver to display that versatility of style which is the surest sign of a true artist. He also played the primo of two pianoforte duets, the first—variations on a French theme, by Schubert—with Mr. Duncan Hume, and the second—"Andante con variazioni," Op. 83, by Mendelssohn—with Mr. H. A. Branscombe, in both of which he was most ably supported. The vocalist was Miss Enriquez, who, amongst other compositions, gave a truly poetical setting of Shelley's words, "On a faded violet," by Mr. Thorne, which was much and deservedly applauded. The conductors were Mr. H. C. Deacon, Mr. H. A. Branscombe, and Mr. Duncan Hume.

A Treatise on Harmony. By Samuel John Clay.

WE quite agree with the author of this Treatise, that "as there are so many works on Harmony already in existence, it is only right that reasons should be adduced sufficient to justify the production of another." If these "reasons" are merely that Mr. Clay differs from many other theorists as to the origin and treatment of chords, we scarcely think that he states his opinions with sufficient clearness to enforce his views; but if his main object has been to enable a student, as he says, "to put to a melody a correct bass and harmony (of course of the simplest kind), and in each succeeding chapter to give directions whereby the harmony may be varied and enriched," we are of opinion that an almost forgotten, but wonderfully acute thinker—Logier—has occupied the ground before him. But let us re-produce some of our author's definitions of chords, in his own words. A "Common Chord," he tells us, "consists of a note, its major 3rd and perfect 5th." He then places a 3rd and 5th over each degree in the scale of C, and says that, "although all these appear to the eye, at first sight, to be Common Chords, there will be found, upon examination, to be but three Major Common Chords, according to the foregoing definition, and these are marked with a x; all the others, having minor 3rds, are not the chords we speak of now." It may be quite necessary, as the three major chords are the only ones used by our author in harmonising simple melodies at first, to dwell more particularly upon these. In the early chapters of his book, but if the others are not "Common Chords," what are they? If we understand Mr. Clay rightly, the student is to believe that whenever he uses a minor common chord he is in a minor key; and, if so, we should like to know how he can analyse the many beautiful sequences exclusively composed of this simple harmony in the works of the best writers. Passing over the rules for putting a satisfactory bass to a melody, by using only the three major triads—which are extremely good, but, as we have already said, not new—we come to modulation by means of the Dominant 7th, and then to the important chord of the 9th. The chord of the major 9th we are told is "the result of an unresolved suspension in the chord of the Dominant 7th." Although we utterly disagree with this definition, we will not stop to discuss it; but when we are informed that the chord of the Diminished 7th has "been treated by most writers as a fundamental chord," we must pause to dispute this assertion. A "fundamental chord" should mean one in which the bass note is the root; and, although the Diminished 7th may be considered by some theorists to be a derivative of the Dominant 9th, and by others an inversion, we know of no musician of any reputation who believes it to be a "fundamental chord." In the next chapter the chord of the "Added 6th" (with the sub-dominant given as its root) creeps in without the slightest explanation; so that whether it is to be prepared, or how it is to be resolved, the student must discover for himself. We confess to not being able to comprehend Mr. Clay's classification of chords when he ceases to speak of those which are indisputably diatonic. After telling us, for instance, that the chord of the Augmented 6th is an "inversion of the Half Cadence—the chord of the major 3rd and major 6th"—a sharp having been placed before the 6th as a "liberty," we come to a chapter in which "Chromatic Chords" are mentioned for the first time, by which we are of course to infer that the Augmented 6th is not Chromatic; and yet Example 138 contains the same chord, with the same resolution, previously given as the Italian 6th, in Example 132. We willingly concede that the author of this work shows that he has bestowed much earnest thought upon his subject; but, like many others before him, in his attempt to be "simple," he has sacrificed logical arrangement. It is always necessary that a student should feel the ground secure before him as he advances; and it is better—even if it cost more time and labour—to remove an obstacle than, with a false feeling of security, to attempt to pass over it. In his desire to facilitate the acquisition of a difficult science, Mr. Clay has been too much guided by the principle of ignoring what he found it troublesome to explain; but he is a pioneer in a good cause, and, in this capacity at least, deserves his reward.

Magnificat (in D.) In Vocal Score, with an Accompaniment for the Organ or Pianoforte, by J. S. Bach.

It is, indeed, a glad time for the lovers of the highest class of music, now that the Choral works of Bach are rendered accessible to everybody's study, by a beautifully printed and admirably inexpensive edition. The Magnificat is, of course, unavailable for ferial use in our Church Service, because of its extraordinary length; but there are festal occasions to which a work of its extent, filled with its merit, would be fully appropriate; and if these occasions have not been found out by the authorities whose duty it is to discover fitting means for the celebration of the high days and holy days, it is right that at once they should be, and full advantage taken of the masterpiece now before us, to do honour to such festivals. The music is set to the Latin text, which shows that the work was written for the Roman Chapel attached to the Court in Dresden, in fulfilment of the composer's office of Capellmeister to the King of Saxony, which he held while he resided in Leipzig. It is adapted, by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, to the English version of our Liturgy, or, one might better say, the version is sometimes modified to adapt it to the music; and the words of both languages are printed under the notes. The work comprises six choral numbers with six for solo voices. Some of the latter are doubtless difficult; but there is ready praise for vanquishing difficulties in proportion to the value of the conquest. There can be offered here little more than a list of the pieces—a description, if possible in words, would far exceed present limits. No. 1 is a Chorus of much grandeur. The voices are often left alone in it, their phrases being interspersed with detached chords of the accompaniment, and the effect is noble. A point of harmony is notable, as forming, by its peculiarity and by its frequent repetition, a prominent feature; this is where the chord of D is continually represented in the passages for the upper parts, while the bass has D, B, F, a bar of each, in spite of the coming together of the A and B in the second of these bars; better than any discussion as to the propriety of the progression, is a reference to its sound, and all must feel that this gives due expression to the words "doth magnify." The opening subject of Mendelssohn's octet has the same leap downwards from the 6th to the 3rd of the key during the continuance of the tonic harmony, and is a proof that this rare treatment of a note foreign to the chord was as satisfactory to his refined ears as it was, to those of the great old master, while, to ours, its effect is grand in the extreme. The Chorus is for five voices, and, as if to bring the leader of each party into prominent notice, there is a solo piece for each. No. 2, accordingly, is an Air for the second soprano "And my spirit." It is rejoicing as befits the text, that is, with a solemn rather than a gay jubilation, such as a fervent spirit feels in the contemplation of the Saviour. The first soprano is brought forward in another Air, No. 3, "For He hath regarded." This piece forms a great contrast to the preceding, in its pious humility and almost penitential character. Curiously, in a writer of Bach's infinite inventive power, its first phrase is the same as that of the final Chorus of his Matthew Passion; the sequel, however, differs from that in matter as entirely as it to some extent resembles it in loveliness. Beginning in B minor, this Air ends in F sharp minor, preparatory to the Chorus, No. 4 in the latter key, which is set to the words, "Omnes generationes" only, repeated from the air, obviously to give particular force to the idea of mankind's everlasting Benediction of the Virgin. The Air for bass, "For He that is mighty," constitutes No. 5. It has great sweetness of character, and true melodious charm, and would be well worth extraction for separate performance; there are few pieces by the composer that are more attractive for a singer. A notable point in it is where the leading note descends by a 7th to the key-note, in the key of C sharp minor, which will always strike the attention; other instances of this curious cadence are to be found in the composer's writings, and it is impossible to object to them upon the ground of their effect, which is none the less admirable because of its rarity. No. 6 is a Duet for contralto and tenor, "And His mercy is on them." The voices move less imitatively than is often the case in the concerted pieces of the author; there is great charm in their combination, and a tender expression of the words. The final close of the voices is remarkable for its beauty and its individuality; it involves the pathetic relationship of the chord of which the minor 2nd of the key is the root (F natural in the key of E minor) with the chord of the key-note, and displays this with excellent effect. The Chorus, No. 7, "The Lord hath shewed strength," proves, by its beginning in one key and ending in another, the purpose of linking the previous to the succeeding piece; and this suggests that the whole work was meant to be performed without any break between the several numbers. The Chorus is most vigorous, and effectively relieves the quieter character of what has gone before it. No. 8, "He hath put down the mighty," is an Air for a so-called tenor, but its compass extends below the range in which modern voices of the class can be heard to advantage; it is the least interesting piece of the whole. The Air for contralto, No. 9, "He hath filled the hungry," goes far to atone for the less attractiveness of the tenor solo. The editor would have done wisely to have rearranged the grouping of the notes throughout this number, according to the modern custom of binding a repeated note rather than dotting the former, when the dot falls at the beginning of a division of a bar, for the printed form is confusing to readers of the present time. The unnamed functionary—whoever he may be—has taken greater liberties than this with his author, in prefixing definitions to the movements, such as it is most unlikely that Bach can have written. For example: "Con moto," "Andantino," "Sostenuto," and the like, which are kindly, and perhaps judiciously intended to guide at first sight to a comprehension of the music, but should be stated to be given on some authority. "He hath holpen His servant Israel," No. 10, is a charming chorus for female voices only. Another Chorus, No. 11, "Even as He promised," is for all the five parts, and is as bold as the preceding is gentle; it is the single piece in the fugal form, but its development is of but brief extent. The "Gloria" is the concluding number, and this reverts to the matter of the opening chorus; with excellent pertinence to the text, and with admirable musical effect, closing the work in the grand manner of its beginning, indicating, that to magnify and to glorify are the same act of reverence, and rounding the whole into completeness. There are some startling specimens of such consecutive 9ths, and 7ths, and 4ths, and even 5ths in the course of the work, as no musician but Bach has ever dared to write. It would be vain to speculate as to what effect he can have meant by them, or as to what principle they can illustrate; but there is no vanity in the assertion, that the music as a whole is above praise, and that in its general magnificence it is worthy of the subject. Whether in a church (its most fitting locality) or in a concert-room, Bach's Magnificat demands an early hearing; and we predict with reliance that its high esteem with musicians will date from its first becoming known among them.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis. Set to Music in the key of B flat, for four voices, by Berthold Tours.

THE accomplished author of this Service is as fertile as he is successful. Few writers come so frequently before the public as he, and still fewer come with so good effect. Of the setting of the two Canticles, we prefer the second, which is charmingly melodious, and opens in the true spirit of the words; but this, like the Magnificat, though to a less extent, is chromatic in style, both in the vocal progressions and in the choice of chords, and it abounds in dazzling changes of key; and, in our esteem, the style is not most appropriate in Church music. There is a strong tendency to high colouring in the writings of our young musicians, which may spring from a profound knowledge of harmonic principles, or from a want of facility in contrapuntal resources. Were this to become a fashion, its influence could scarcely be healthy; and we almost regret, therefore, that such a composer as Mr. Tours should give the authority of his example to the dangerous practice.

"Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Full Anthem for Advent. Composed by George M. Garrett, Mus. D.

THIS piece must be designed for performance in places where Handel's setting of a large portion of the same text is unavailable. A short Recitative is set to the foretelling of St. John the Baptist, which is followed by a long choral movement to the words "Comfort ye," &c., predicting the coming of the Messiah. There is breadth of character in this movement, but some confused changes of key on page 4 are not to be admired. The composer redeems himself in a final Larghetto, "All flesh is grass," &c., which is a truly charming strain, and has one passage in particular, dallying between different inversions of dominant harmonies in the key of A minor at page 7, which no one can hear without particular pleasure. The good effect of this piece of repose is enhanced by the contrast between the concluding movement and what precedes it, and the Anthem will leave a pleasant impression from its successful termination.

"The Lord is King." Festival Anthem for four voices. Composed by Henry Gadsby.

THE whole of the 93rd Psalm is here set, with much variety and considerable spirit. A characteristically majestic movement opens the Anthem, abounding in broad effects for voices and independent organ. The same style of writing continues, though the expression materially changes, in an Allegro Agitato, beginning "The floods are risen." The concise Largo, "But yet the Lord," wherein no word is repeated, has much solemnity, and forms a valuable point of rest before entering upon a new phase of the music. An entire contrast to all that has preceded, is presented in a melodious and richly harmonised Larghetto, "Thy testimonies, O Lord," with which the Anthem impressively closes. It is not the first time that the text before us has been appropriated to the requirements of an Anthem for Festival use; but Mr. Gadsby's setting will stand on its own merit, uncomparably with any other treatment of the subject.

"Like as the hart desireth the water brooks." Aria, from an unpublished Requiem. With an accompaniment arranged for the pianoforte. Composed by Wm. Crowther Alwyn.

It can scarcely be said that Mr. Alwyn has caught the fervently religious feeling which the words he has selected should inspire; but the composition is musician-like throughout, and he has at least treated his subject with earnestness. It is difficult to steer clear of reminiscences of Mendelssohn in composing these verses; and the attempt to avoid a suspicion of plagiarism may perhaps have prevented the author from doing himself full justice. Should his Requiem be published, we shall be in a better position to judge of his power to write sacred music.

A Song of Destiny. Composed by Johannes Brahms, Op. 54.

BRAHMS is a musician whose name is daily becoming more and more respected in England, proportionately as his works are becoming better and better known. It is refreshing to find—at a moment when, throughout Germany, Revolution spreads her banner in the realms of art, and strives to undertrample all that is most revered and worthiest of reverence—that there is one man who holds by true principles, and commands respect from his renegade countrymen. It is encouraging, also, to cotemporary artists, to observe that to strive for the highest carries the sympathy of those who can best understand excellence, and that a great genius, matured by loving study, can produce works that elicit respect from the best among us. Here is the first English issue of Brahms's musical setting of Friedrich Hölderlin's "Schicksalslied" (Song of Fate), a most poetical treatment of a highly ideal subject, a most beautiful conception most exquisitely embodied. The poem is not one, truly, that would mostly be attractive to a composer, neither is it one to stir the sympathy of every audience; yet it has inspired the musician with a work of extraordinary interest, which comprises as many points for admiration as could be pressed within its concise limits. Why, this itself is a point for highest admiration, that the artist knew how to weigh his matter, and to curb his imagination, so that it should not flee beyond the range of his subject. The verses, firstly, suggest that there may exist some class of beings in a supposed blissful region, whose tranquil existence is unruffled by the vicissitudes of life; secondly, bewail that man is at the mercy of Fate, and is liable to be dashed as by raging waters against the unseen rocks of the deep; and further the verses hint at, if not fully express, a hope that, in some time to come, we may be translated into that happier condition. The music paints with exquisite delicacy the serene loveliness of the imagined but unknown bliss; its harmonies are of most rare employment, and of beauty such as no expletive can describe; and there floats upon these a constant melody—nay, it is the current that carries them along—which is most delicious, most intense. A change of key from E flat to C minor, of measure, and of tempo, illustrates the reverse of the idea. All is now agitated, fiery, and tyrannic. Fate, the inexorable, is presented as trampling into nothingness all the wishes and endeavours of mortals. That passage, in particular, has tremendous force which shows the shattering of human purposes by the dashing of mountain waves against the crags of the hidden abyss, where the voices make their exclamations at such periods of the measure as to give to two bars of $\frac{3}{4}$ the effect of one bar of $\frac{3}{8}$, and the energetic accompaniment confirms their imperious false accent. Schumann was especially fond of this rhythmical riddle; Beethoven wrought by its means some stupendous passages; Mozart set both the example of its powerful employment; and Handel, before them all, used it to wonderful purpose; but nowhere has it been brought to bear on the subject in hand with stronger pertinence than in the present instance. This copiously developed Allegro subsides, at the conclusion of the voices, into a resumption of the opening Adagio, but with its character tempered by the transposition of its chief incidence from the key of E flat into that of C. Here then the tone-poet extends upon the conception of the author of the verses, showing the realisation, it may be, of the dreams, but representing man's possible happiness as modified from that of the spiritual host, perhaps by the fiery ordeal of earthly travail through which he has struggled; and this modification is technically set forth in the qualifying effect of the lower key upon the musical phrases. The ideas in this short work, their unfolding, and their colouring by the vocal distribution, and many novel arrangements of the orchestra, are masterly. Perusal of the score will corroborate this careful opinion, and listening to a complete performance will confirm it quite; but one glance, one casual hearing, cannot penetrate all its strength. We long, then, for early and many opportunities for music-lovers to mature their knowledge of the masterpiece.

Four-part Songs for Male Voices. Composed by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy.

1. Land of Beauty. Words translated from the German by the Rev. J. Troutbeck.

2. A Festal Greeting. English version by the Rev. J. Troutbeck.

3. Waken, Lords and Ladies gay. Words by Sir Walter Scott.

4. Gipsy Song. Words translated from the German of Goethe by the Rev. J. Troutbeck.

ALL these part-songs—with the exception of No. 4—were performed for the first time in this country at Mr. Henry Leslie's opening concert this season, and received with the warmest marks of approbation, No. 3—the Hunting Song—being enthusiastically encored. A closer examination of their merits than is possible on a single hearing of them—even with such absolutely perfect execution as they received—convinces us that they are certain to achieve a lasting popularity. No. 1 has a charmingly harmonised simple melody, so admirably suggesting the feeling of the poetry, that even when given by singers who consider the articulation of the words of minor importance, the audience will we believe comprehend their meaning. No. 2—in spite of the encore for the Hunting Song—is destined, we think, to be the favourite with musicians. The theme is exquisitely refined, and grows upon the listener with each verse. An excellent effect is gained by the short key-note pedal, and also by the ascent of the first voice to the high G, just before the final phrase. No. 3 tells its own tale with a vividness which must be understood by all. It is a genuine song of the Hunt, and its excessive tunefulness must make it a stock piece with Choral Societies. Amongst its many points of interest we may mention the unexpected B flat taken by the choir, after the modulation into G major by the solo voices, which has a wonderfully fresh effect; and the return to the key for the final phrases gives a force to the burden of the song, which cannot fail to excite the most apathetic audience. The "Gipsy Song" we have not yet heard in public, but can imagine that it would prove extremely attractive in performance. The treatment of the piece is exceedingly dramatic, the first tenors and basses giving out a subject, in G minor, unharmonised, the other voices answering in short phrases of a quaint and rugged character, in admirable sympathy with the words. The last verse starts in full four-part harmony, an unexpected major chord at the conclusion giving additional interest to a composition which requires but to be known to be thoroughly appreciated. These songs will indeed prove a most welcome addition to our rapidly accumulating stock of part-music.

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Album pour Piano; Dédié à la Jeunesse. Par Stephen Heller. Books 1, 2, 3, and 4.

THESE charming little pieces, although dedicated to the young, require a trained mind and a trained hand for their due interpretation. With German composers there is no writing down to the pupil—the pupil must be educated up to the music; and by thus shadowing forth the classical style, students are taught to think in the early stages of their progress, and to prepare themselves gradually for the more advanced works of the great writers. In Book 1 we scarcely know where to commence or where to end our praise. "Doux Reproches," a graceful little Allegretto, tells its story with a fidelity which fully warrants the author in affixing to it so suggestive a title: the phrases are extremely eloquent and refined, and an excellent effect is gained by the plagal cadence at the conclusion. "Chasseur en Herbe," is a spirited little sketch in A major, somewhat reminding us of Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song" (as it is called), in the same key, but having a distinct character of its own. The "Barcarolle," too, in B minor, is very original and melodious throughout, and, if well played, cannot fail to become a favourite. Book 2 contains two short sketches, remarkable for character and meaning, the first called "Curieuse Histoire," and the second "Enfant qui pleure," both, however, demanding something beyond mere note-playing from the executant. "La Muette" may also be cited as an excellent little piece, though not equal to the two already mentioned. Book 3 consists of five pieces entitled "Tziganyi" (Bohémiens), Nos. 2 and 4 being in our opinion the best, the latter, especially, having an exceedingly attractive subject, the effect of which is aided by the obstinate syncopated bass. From the fourth Book we are inclined to select "Le Cor d'Oberon," and No. 1 of three pieces entitled "Elfes," as being the most effective, although the others are thoroughly worthy of their companions. As we have already indicated, the first Book can scarcely be overpraised: but there is so much real merit in the entire work that we earnestly counsel all who are not wedded to the school of vapid commonplace to possess themselves of the four books, which, as we see by the title-page complete the series.

LAMBORN COCK.

Allegro Grazioso (in G.) From a Sonata, for the Piano-forte. By Stephen B. Kemp.

KNOWING that young composers have to feel their way in publishing Sonatas, we cannot be surprised that Mr. Kemp modestly puts forward an "Allegro Grazioso" as a letter of introduction, with an intimation that something of more importance remains behind. His writing in this piece shows that he has every reason to expect a cordial welcome amongst the fast increasing number of classical English composers, for his thoughts flow clearly, and his style is evidently based on good models. His principal subject is attractive, and is treated throughout with a tenderness which proves that he respects it. The harmonies are good, the modulations natural and well conducted, and the passages lie sufficiently well under the hands to show that the composer is a trained pianist. We especially like the concluding portion of the piece, where the theme, first given, accompanied by arpeggios, to the right hand, dies off in fragments for the left hand. We shall be glad again to meet with Mr. Kemp, and next time we hope in a work of more pretension.

Deuxième Impromptu, pour le Piano-forte. Par Charles Gardner.

THIS Impromptu is a favourable specimen of melodious and careful writing. We like the first subject, with its arpeggio accompaniment, but scarcely see the reason for the constant changing of hands; surely it would be better if the right hand were to play every note of the melody—at least to the half of the fourth bar. The second theme is tuneful, but somewhat trifling; and the return to the opening subject seems rather abrupt. The piece is however graceful and elegant throughout, and does infinite credit to its composer. Mr. Gardner is so good a writer that we shall be glad if he will follow the lead of many of his countrymen who are now printing the title-pages of their compositions in the English language.

The Call of Spring. A Song for Children. Melody and Words by Eleanora Louisa Hervey.

THIS unpretentious little musical poem—modestly styled a "Song for Children"—is much better than many songs for grown people daily manufactured by those who have so gained the ear of the public as to defy the ordeal of criticism. Mrs. Hervey is her own composer; but in the skill with which the accompaniments move with the air, we seem to be conscious of the supervision, at least, of a practised musician. The song is simplicity itself—the harmony indeed merely delicately colouring the melody—yet there is a freshness in both the poetry and music which cannot fail to recommend the composition to refined listeners. The compass of the voice part is sufficiently limited to be sung easily by children, with whom the song will doubtless become a favourite.

Evensong. Song. Words by Mrs. Harriet Parr. Music by T. Ridley Prentice.

THIS song, written for a contralto voice, has a melody in good sympathy with the words, although from the want of contrast, it will require very good singing to make it effective. The low key-note pedal gives a sombre tone to the commencing bars; but a fresh effect is gained by the unexpected change of key, on the words "Far outweighs them every one." The harmonies are well written and musician-like throughout. Mr. Prentice has been lucky in securing the services of an excellent artist for the rendering of his composition in public, for we find that the song has already been sung by Madame Patey.

CHAPPELL AND Co.

Rolando. Brilliant March, for the Piano-forte. Composed by G. A. Osborne.

THIS is scarcely perhaps what aspiring amateurs would term a "brilliant" piece, but it is nevertheless an excellent March, and one which can scarcely fail to please. The principal subject, in E flat major, is bold and well marked, the second theme, in B major, from its quiescent and melodious character, forming a good contrast. The B natural enharmonically changing to C flat re-introduces the March with much effect; but we think a short and vigorous coda would have concluded the piece more satisfactorily.

The Bridal Lay. A Cantata, with Piano-forte accompaniment. The Libretto by H. Piercy Watson. Composed by Edward Rogers.

ALTHOUGH this Cantata is dedicated (by permission) to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, and written in commemoration of his recent marriage, there is nothing whatever in the libretto especially allusive to the event, so that it would be equally available as a celebration of any other wedding, where the parties concerned are sufficiently musically inclined. Mr. Rogers has evidently studied the requirements of amateurs, and perhaps even presumed upon the fact of everybody being too happy to be over critical when his music is performed; so that we have an amount of "prettiness" prevailing throughout the work which might perhaps pall upon the taste of an audience too stern to be moved by the genial circumstances of the surroundings. The best pieces in the Cantata are the opening Chorus, the "Chorus of Maidens"—in which some good effects are introduced in the accompaniment—the Duet between the Bride and Bridegroom (No. 7), the Prayer in the Church, the Quartett (No. 12), and the Finale. Many of these movements, however, want colour; they are too uniformly melodious, the choral portions, especially, being like harmonised songs; but, as we have already said, they would amply satisfy the majority of listeners, and this may be all that the composer aimed at. One or two harmonies, however, we should like to see altered; as, for instance, in the first tenor solo, where between the fifth and sixth bar, the voice jumps in fifths—C, E—with the bass—F, A; and again, in the same piece, where, in the fifth bar, page 14, the bass moves upwards in fifths on the accented parts of the bar.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

CATHEDRAL CHOIRS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—The Præcentor of Chichester Cathedral has brought forward a very important subject in your valuable paper for May. The Rev. gentleman's quotations show that some of our Cathedral choirs in the 14th century were not what they should have been; and I think we may infer from the letter generally that all is not right with us. After a long period of four centuries, one would expect to find a state of things as near perfection as possible. But dissatisfaction is loudly expressed of the vocal performances in some of our Cathedrals. Is it that those engaged do not enter with a will into their duties? Or, are men chosen for those sacred offices who were not fitted from the commencement for them? Or, again, is there that respect and kindly feeling extended towards us which, as Christians, we all look for, and which, I believe, would do more towards our rendering our sacrifice of praise in a manner acceptable to the Almighty than many a sermon from the pulpit?

Why is it that good salaries and necessary relaxation from duty are offered only in London and one or two other places? My impression is that our choral services should have but one object: and those engaged should be placed in a position to carry out faithfully that object. The Rev. Mr. Walcott has given us excellent advice, and I sincerely hope we may all profit by it, so that a record very different to that of the 14th and 15th centuries may be left for those who may succeed us.

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,

SOLMIZATION OF THE MINOR SCALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I am desirous of ascertaining what is the prevailing practice among teachers of singing on the moveable-do system as regards the Solmization of the Minor Scale. The Tonic-Sol-fa method, while it makes so much of tonal relationship in the major scale, strangely enough ignores it altogether in the minor scale except for purposes of harmony; and I notice that some teachers of the moveable-do system follow the same plan. Will any of your readers kindly inform me whether, so far as they know, this practice is the rule or only the exception?—whether, that is to say, in Sol-fa-ing from the ordinary notation on the moveable-do plan, the Tonic of the Minor Scale is called do or la; and, if the former, what are the names given to the 3rd, 6th, and 7th notes of the scale respectively?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
W. H. GILL.

THE DOUBLE AIR IN HYMN TUNES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In answer to my letter I find there are two in your last number. As to the first, I wish to say, that out of four tunes in the "Hymns Ancient and Modern," which I have examined for the purpose, three will bear the double air without injury to the music—namely, 99, 135, and 320; while in 331 the case is the reverse, but the double air shows to great advantage in the seventh line of 332. I say again, those who cannot abide the double air, when it does not exist in the instrument, but proceeds from the congregation, ought never to use a stop like the double diapason, neither ought they to tolerate unison singing. Our duty is plain, namely, to permit the double air, in order that the congregation may join heartily and without difficulty in the Church Service. Now, as to the second, its author at first misunderstood my letter. Secondly, he has wandered from his point to one which has little to do with Church singing in our day. Thirdly, he fails to see my argument in the latter part, and therefore imagines that none can possibly exist. I advise him, therefore, that when next he tries to answer a letter he would read it over many times, in order that he may thoroughly understand its subject and argument.

I remain, Sir, yours respectfully,
THOMAS VINCENT.

A REPLY TO MR. HINTON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—The letter which appeared in the April number of the Musical Times from a gentleman who has a right to sign himself both A.B. and Mus. B., is a fair challenge to your readers, and I hope to see the glove picked up by many well qualified to discuss the various subjects on which he has given such a decided opinion. Not having seen the May number of your paper, I know not what replies may have already appeared, but I venture to ask space to criticise one of Mr. Hinton's assertions, leaving to others better qualified than myself the heavier part of the fight. First, I deny the truth of the assertion "that instrumental performers, particularly players on stringed instruments, become passionately fond of their instruments from the difficulties they have surmounted in acquiring them (often, indeed, let us charitably suppose mostly unconsciously), and become an intolerable bore to others not so circumstanced." This long sentence requires to be studied before one attempts to answer its assertions. Does the writer mean that fiddlers and pianists get fond of their instruments because they had great difficulties in finding money to pay for them? Hardly, because, let us strain our charity as much as we can, we shall scarcely be able to believe that any body obtains a fine instrument "with difficulty," yet remains unconscious of his efforts and their reward. No; I imagine the writer means to say that players get fond of their instruments on account of the labour and study it has cost them to produce the music they draw from them. Now, there is no doubt that fiddlers do get attached to their fiddles, and nothing is more natural. First of all the instrument is the most perfect of instruments. It can be put into perfect tune which is more than we can say for the pianoforte; and he or she who plays it, tunes it, and is never obliged to torture his or her nerves by playing on an ill-tuned instrument, as so many organists and pianoforte players are often obliged to do. Secondly, it is a small portable instrument that can be carried about by the player, and is on that account a companion,—almost like the dog, that lives with you year by year, with the additional advantage of giving no trouble, and of never dying. If it has not the power of loving you like a dog, it enables you to do something better than play the passive part of being loved, it enables you to conjugate the verb "amo" actively, and that is a good deal for a thing made of wood and catgut to do for one! But to speaking seriously. Granted that fiddlers are passionately fond of their instruments, why should that make them "become an intolerable bore to others not so circumstanced?" Are there no singers and talkers fond of hearing their own voices, and are there not many amateur vocal performers far greater bores than any tolerable violin player could manage to make himself? Our critic's next sentence tells us that "we may refer the origin and continuance of most of the string quartets and quintets (while omitting the works of the great masters who excelled in every thing they took in hand), to this peculiarity;" this "peculiarity," being, I presume, the variety or the weakness of fiddlers, big and little, who would rather sit scraping away at a quartett than do any thing else on earth. Well, a good quartett in the hands of four good performers is about the most enjoyable of all musical performances to the players themselves, and that is one of its charms to some listeners. The quartett has in it the germs of the symphony, and the initiated feel it. It is pleasant to the player also, because it is without the fatigue and anxiety attending an orchestral performance, and has more excitement, as well as more rest than solo playing. For amateurs the quartett has more sociability than whist or billiards—as much interest as conversation, while it gives physical exercise like walking, riding, or rowing. Is it not reasonable that such a game should be reckoned well worth playing? I feel I must not intrude longer on your columns, or I should be willing to examine every paragraph in your correspondent's letter. I hope that which I have said in behalf of "the strings" may be some consolation to fiddlers suffering under the lash of the B.A. and Mus. B. And I hope, too, that by the time the B.A. becomes a Master, and the Mus. B. a Doctor, he may see reason to modify a good many of his present opinions.

M. H.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ANDOVER.—On Tuesday, the 19th ult., the second Annual Festival of the choirs in the Andover Choral Union was held in St. Mary's Church. The number of vocalists was about 200, all of whom had been under the careful training of Mr. J. W. Chuter, the organist of Andover, for the past three months. The service was intoned by the vicar of Andover. Dr. Wesley's Chant Service was very well rendered, and the Anthem, "Teach me, O Lord" (Attwood), was a marked feature in the music. The hymns, all very suitable to the occasion, were most effectively sung; and the general opinion was that the performance of the service was equal to that of any in this diocese. The Lord Bishop of Winchester preached the sermon. An offertory was collected amounting to £12 12s. 6d., which, considering the church was crowded, might be reckoned very small. The interior of this handsome edifice has lately been entirely re-fitted with new open seats, a handsome chancel, with oak stalls, &c., at a cost of something like £1,400, and an anonymous gift of £70 in the offertory will provide a handsome stone pulpit.

BATH.—The Abbey Choral Society gave its first concert at the Guildhall, on Monday evening, the 4th ult., in aid of the fund for the restoration of the Abbey. The Banqueting Room was well filled. The programme consisted of Barnett's Ancient Mariner, and a selection of glees, part-songs, &c. Mr. Salmon kindly gave the services of his band to ensure the more effective execution of the Cantata, which was on the whole fairly rendered. In the second part of the programme, a Madrigal, composed by Mr. Pyne, made a favourable impression upon the audience. Mr. Milson lent the piano used on the occasion, and Mr. Huff acted as pianist.

BEDDINGTON, SURREY.—At a concert given here on the 7th ult., part of Sir Michael Costa's Oratorio Eli was performed, followed by a selection of secular music. The choruses and part-songs were sung by the Beddington and Carshalton Choral Society, and the solo vocalists were Miss Julian, Miss Houghton, and Mr. G. T. Carter (of Westminster Abbey), the instrumentalists being Mr. Watson, violin, Mr. James Coward (organist of the Crystal Palace), Mr. Walter Fitton (Potter Exhibitioner, R.A.M.) pianoforte, and Mr. C. E. Miller (of Croydon), harmonium. The solos, especially, were much to be commended, and the choruses, with one or two exceptions, were very steadily sung. The chief features of the second part of the programme were Beethoven's First Sonata, for pianoforte and violin, excellently played by Messrs. Fitton and Watson, and Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso" performed by Mr. Fitton. The conductor was Mr. G. C. Burry, organist of the Parish Church, who is to be highly complimented on the marked success which attended his efforts.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Amateur Harmonic Association gave the first of the fourth series of subscription concerts, at the Town Hall, on the 7th ult. The principal vocalists were Mrs. A. J. Sutton, Madame Barnett, Mr. Henry Guy, and Signor Gustave Garcia. The band, numbering about forty performers, was a well-appointed one, Mr. T. M. Abbott occupying the post of principal first violin. Mr. A. J. Sutton conducted, and Mr. Stimpson presided at the organ. Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio, St. John the Baptist, formed the first portion of the programme. The performance of this work was most satisfactory, and its many beauties were thoroughly appreciated; all the vocalists were highly efficient, and the accompaniments were admirably played.

BISHOP STORTFORD.—Miss Amy Perry gave her annual concert in the Assembly Room of the Corn Exchange, on the 19th ult. The vocalists were Miss Ellen Glanville, Miss Julia Derby, and Mr. Albert James, all of whom were highly successful and gave much satisfaction to the audience. Miss Amy Perry played Mendelssohn's "Andante and Rondo" (Op. 25) and "Highland gems" No. 1. (Pape), and, with Herr Stromeyer, the Overtures to Otello and La Cenerentola. The last-named gentleman also contributed two violin solos. The hall was well filled.

BOXFORD, SUFFOLK.—An amateur concert was given here on the 6th ult., in aid of the fund for a new Organ, now being constructed for the Parish Church, by Messrs. Hill and Co. Several glees and part-songs were well given by the members of the church choir, and other volunteers. Miss Rosa Smythies and Mr. Hitchcock won well-merited applause for their songs. Mr. Martin S. Skeffington (hon. organist of St. Barnabas', Kensington), officiated as conductor and also contributed some songs. Miss Beatrice Perry (the daughter of the vicar), presided at the pianoforte, and in her admirable playing of the accompaniments displayed an unusual aptitude for the responsible post she occupied.

BRADFORD.—A concert in aid of the widow and children of the late Mr. Stephen Scholey was given in St. George's Hall, on the 18th ult., when Handel's Messiah was performed. The principal vocalists were Miss Crichton, Miss Pauline Haddock, Mrs. Lincey Nalton, Mr. Wm. Coates, and Mr. Thornton Wood. The chorus comprised 300 voices, and included the members of the Bradford Old Choral and Bradford Festival Choral Societies, as well as a valuable contingent from other choral societies in the neighbouring towns and villages. The band, which numbered about seventy performers, was composed almost exclusively of instrumentalists whose acquaintance with Mr. Scholey was of the most intimate character, many coming from a considerable distance to pay this mark of respect to the deceased musician. The Bradford Amateur Orchestral Society, which for several years past has had the valuable aid of Mr. Scholey's conductorship, furnished an efficient nucleus. Mr. W. H. Tate has succeeded Mr. Scholey as conductor to the Society. Mr. Alfred Moorhouse presided at the organ, Mr. George Haddock led the band, and Mr. Broughton conducted. If the financial result of the concert be at all commensurate with its success as a musical performance, there will be good cause for satisfaction.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.—The first Choral Festival held in this Colony took place on Thursday evening, April 9th, at St. John's Church, in the City of Victoria, Vancouver's Island, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Wilson, choirmaster. The choir, which was augmented for the occasion, numbered 50 voices. The service was intoned by the Rev. S. Mason, and the lessons were read by the Rector, the Rev. Percival Jenks, and the Rev. F. Gribbell. The service commenced by the choir singing Handel's "Lift up your heads." The Psalms were chanted to Hayes and Mornington, and the Cantate and Deus were sung to Bridgewater in A. First anthem, "I will lift up mine eyes," second, "Behold how good and joyful," both by Dr. Clarke-Whitfield. An able sermon was preached by the Lord Bishop of Columbia, after which the choir sang, "The heavens are telling." Miss Ada Wilson (a late pupil of Dr. Naylor's, of Scarborough, England) presided at the organ, and played with considerable ability for the introductory voluntary, "With verdure clad," and at the conclusion, "The Wedding March" (Mendelssohn). The service throughout was most successful, and the offertory amounted to two hundred dollars.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.—The Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, at the fifth and last concert of the season, offered a programme unusually rich in variety and attractiveness, beginning with Schubert's Symphony in C, which under the baton of Mr. Thomas, was finely rendered, as were also Wagner's "Vorspiel die Meistersinger," Brahms's variations on a theme from Haydn; and Beethoven's Leonora overture, No. 3. Madame Ilma di Murska, although suffering from severe indisposition, gave Beethoven's great Scena and Aria, "Ah perfido," with much effect. The pianist of the evening was Mr. Richard Hoffman. His selections were Mendelssohn's "Serenade and Allegro Gajoso," with orchestra, and three of Chopin's dances. Mr. Hoffman's playing is characterised by a certain refinement and delicacy of touch which are peculiarly needful for the Mendelssohn and Chopin music, while, at the same time, he is master of all the resources of the piano. Mr. Hoffman's reception was enthusiastic, and the applause which followed his very artistic rendering of the "Serenade" showed a just appreciation of his efforts.

CARBROOK, near SHEFFIELD.—On Tuesday, the 19th ult., a very successful concert was given by the Attercliffe and Carbrook Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. C. Howard. The programme comprised Mozart's Twelfth Mass, besides glees and songs. The Kyrie, Gloria, and Santus, were very well rendered, as was also Pinsuti's part-song "Good night, beloved," and the song "The Arab's farewell to his steed," by Mr. Maidment. During the concert a presentation of a handsome photographic album and an illuminated address was made to the Rev. H. R. Holme, in acknowledgment of his services as conductor of the Society for five years.

DOVER.—The Harmonic Union, assisted by amateur musical friends, gave a concert in the Wellington Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 5th ult. The programme comprised an overture by the band, part-songs, madrigals, glees in chorus, songs, &c. Mr. W. H. Longhurst acted as conductor, and also accompanied the solo singers on the pianoforte. The part-songs, madrigals, and choruses were all well given, several being enthusiastically encored. Captain Germon, Miss Fisher, Miss La Coste, and Gunner Read, were very efficient in the music allotted them. On the whole the entertainment was eminently satisfactory, and will no doubt induce the Society to arrange an occasional performance of Oratorios.

EASTBOURNE.—On Thursday the 30th April, Mr. E. A. Bishop organist of St. Saviour's District Church, gave a concert in the Assembly Rooms, before a large audience. The programme was well selected, comprising part-songs, vocal solos, and pianoforte solos. The vocalists were Miss Poyntz, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Albert Goodban, all of whom were very favourably received. Mr. Bishop was highly successful in his pianoforte solos, several being re-demanded.—On the 14th ult. the Choral Society gave a public practice, the principal item in the programme being Sir Sterndale Bennett's May Queen. This was very well performed, the solos being taken by Miss Carlisle, Miss Maas, Mr. Coles, Mr. Welch, and Mr. Bristow. The second part of the programme consisted of solos by Miss Tichehurst, Miss Carlisle, Mr. Thwaites, and Mr. Esam. Mr. H. W. Hardy conducted, and the performance generally gave much satisfaction to the audience.

EMSCOTE, WARWICK.—The organ in All Saints' Church having been recently enlarged by Messrs. Hill and Son, was re-opened on Wednesday afternoon, April 29th. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Canon Baynes, Vicar of St. Michael's, Coventry, and the service, which was fully choral, was rendered in a most impressive manner. Mr. Frank Spinney, F.C.O. presided at the organ, and at the conclusion of the service, gave a recital from the works of Beethoven, Handel, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Costa, Best, and Batiste.

FARNHAM, SURREY.—A very successful concert was given by the members of the Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. E. A. Sydenham, the organist of St. Andrew's, on the 1st ult., in the Corn Exchange. The first part of the programme consisted entirely of sacred music, selected from Handel, Bach, Mendelssohn, Beethoven, and Barnby. The selection from Bach's Passion music received a rendering seldom surpassed by amateur societies, the leads being taken up with great precision. The second part of the concert was miscellaneous. A duet, for violoncello and piano, by Mr. Sydenham, was played by the composer and Colonel Paget; and Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," was well rendered by the Hon. Mrs. Gage. The accompaniments were played by Miss Bessie Nash, Miss Constance Julius, and Mr. Lewis Tiley.

GLASGOW.—A performance of Mr. F. H. Cowen's Rose Maiden was given on the 29th April, in the Queen's Rooms, by the members of the Lyrical Society. Miss Kemlo Stephen took the part of the Rose Maiden, and Miss Boyle was the contralto. The narrative portion of the Cantata, arranged chiefly in the form of recitatives for the tenor, was taken by a member of the Society. The tone of the chorus was good throughout, and the performance most creditable to the Society. Mr. P. S. Terras conducted, and Mr. Berry, organist of Trinity Church, accompanied.

GLOUCESTER.—A concert was given by the Choral Society, in the Shirehall, on Monday, the 4th ult., when the Oratorio Judas Maccabaeus was performed. Two vocalists—Miss Larkcom of London, and Mr. Kearton of Wells—made a very gratifying début before a Gloucester audience. Mr. Kearton sang the tenor music in finished style, especially the song "Sound an alarm," and Miss Larkcom was also highly effective in the soprano part. The bass solos were entrusted to Mr. Brandon, who rendered them full justice. Mr. J. A. Matthews played the accompaniments on the organ, as the Society engaged no band at this concert. The chorus was equally balanced, and it was evident that the singers had profited by the instruction of their conductor, Mr. John Hunt. The concert, which was the last of the season, was well attended.

GREENOCK.—The eighteenth annual private concert of the Choral Society took place on Thursday evening, the 14th ult., in the Town Hall, which was well filled. The first part of the programme consisted of Bennett's Woman of Samaria, which was very fairly rendered. The alto solo, "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out," was admirably sung, as was, also, the unaccompanied quartet, "God is a spirit," the latter deservedly encored. The accompaniments were played by Mr. Peace, of Glasgow University, the Society's organist. In addition to the accompaniments, Mr. Peace played the Overture to the Occasional Oratorio, and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." Some partsongs by various composers, were remarkably well rendered, especially Barnby's "Silent night," Smart's "How sweet is summer morning," and Garrett's "Good night, farewell." Mr. Middleton conducted.

HARPENDEN, ST. ALBANS.—The second concert of the season was given on the 1st ult., in the large room of the National School, by the Harpenden Harmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. C. B. Kaye (late of Durham Cathedral). The programme comprised glees, trios, duets and solos, and duets for piano and harmonium. The instrumentalists were Miss S. Spackman, and Miss Coales, of Luton, assisted by Mr. C. B. Kaye. The entertainment was a complete success, and great credit is due to Mr. Kaye for the pains taken in bringing the Society to its present excellence.

HIGH WYCOMBE.—A successful performance of Barnett's Cantata Paradise and the Peri, was given by the members of the Choral Society, on the 6th ult. Several numbers were re-demanded, including the duet, the two quartetts, and the final chorus. The concert was under the direction of Mr. H. N. Biffin, the conductor of the Society.

HITCHIN.—On Tuesday evening, the 28th April, the members of the Choral Society gave a concert of sacred music in the Town Hall. The solos and duets were sung by Madame Suter, Miss Barnett, Mr. Wallace Wells, and Mr. R. Hilton. The airs and choruses were selected from Handel's Oratorio Judas Maccabaeus, and were exceedingly well performed. Miss Rowton was a very efficient accompanist. Mr. Bellamy, organist of Langford Church, presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Carling, Mus. Bac., Oxon, conducted.

HONLEY.—On Whit-Sunday, the annual festival in connection with St. Mary's Church took place, special sermons being preached afternoon and evening. The choir was largely augmented for the occasion, and the execution of each service was highly creditable to all engaged in it. The tunes were No. 302 from the Hymnary, Nos. 320 and 323 from Hymns Ancient and Modern, and Dr. Dykes's Elvet. The Psalms were chanted to Ouseley in E, and Barnby in E. The Cantate, No. 80, Nunc dimittis, No. 214, from Ouseley and Monk's Psalter Chants, The Magnificat to Palestrina in D. The Deus to an arrangement of the 1st Tone, in unison. The anthem was "Praise the Lord, and call upon His Name" (Sir George Elvey). Mr. J. C. Beaumont, the organist and choirmaster, presided at the organ, and played with much effect Haydn's "God preserve the Emperor," with variations; Adagio from Mendelssohn's Sonata, No. 1; slow movement from Spohr's Quartet in G minor; and "Let their celestial concerts" (Handel). In the evening the church was crowded in every part.

HUNTINGDON.—A concert was given in the Corn Exchange, on Thursday, April 30th, by Mr. A. J. Smith, organist of All Saints. The principal singers were Miss Lucie Issitt, Miss Lillie Ding, Mr. Dalzell, and Mr. John Ding. Mr. T. Embury (Bandmaster) performed an air and rondo for clarinet, of his own composition. The choir of All Saints sang several part-songs very effectively, and Master Scate (one of the choristers) gave a very good rendering of Bishop's "Tell me, my heart."

LINCOLN.—The Choral Society gave a successful performance of Handel's Messiah on April 28th, under the direction of Mr. W. Mason, the solo vocalists being Miss Jessie Royd, Mr. Mason, Mr. Dunkerton, and Mr. Christian. Dr. Mason presided at the organ.

LYNN, NORFOLK.—The Philharmonic Society gave its last concert of the season, on the 1st ult., when Barnett's Ancient Mariner was performed with much success. The soloists were Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Dones, Mr. Stedman and Mr. Thurley Beale. In the second part several songs were encored, and an effective rendering of the new part-song by Henry Leslie, the "Lullaby of life," was an especial feature in the programme. Mr. J. Bray was leader of the band, and Mr. B. J. Whall was a most efficient conductor.

MANCHESTER.—On Thursday evening, the 30th April, the new organ of the Coupland Street United Presbyterian Church was formally opened with a musical recital given by Mr. J. F. Bridge. The organ has been built by Messrs. Alexander Young and Son, Manchester. The important qualifications of the instrument were fully tested by Mr. Bridge, who played selections from Handel, Merkel, Lemmens, Gade, Guilmant, Stephen Heller, and F. E. Gladstone, besides an Introduction and Fugue of his own.

MINEHEAD.—A concert was given in the old School-room on the 12th ult., under the direction of Miss Wise, L. A. M., for the purpose of raising funds to defray the cost of cleaning the organ of the Parish Church. The first piece in the programme was a trio by Miss Wise on the violin, Miss Thistle on the harmonium, and Mr. W. Buxton on the pianoforte, and a harp solo, "Caprice de Concert," was also played by Miss Wise with her usual taste. Several solos and part-songs were rendered with much effect, and the concert was in every respect highly successful. On the following evening there was a repetition of the programme at half-prices.

NEW SOUTHGATE.—The members of the Choral Society gave their final concert of this season on Thursday evening, the 30th April, when an excellent programme was presented. The unaccompanied part-songs were rendered with precision and delicacy of execution. Several songs and duets were well sung, and violin solos by Mr. C. J. Klitz, and concertina solos by Mr. J. W. Rock, met with the applause they merited. Mr. J. Harman Judd presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Henry J. Baker conducted.

OXFORD.—The Cantata composed by Mr. John Abram for the degree of Mus. Doc., was performed in the Sheldonian Theatre, on the 6th ult. The work is entitled The Widow of Nain, and was received with every demonstration of approval by a large audience. The Cantata was excellently rendered by the choir of New College, the Cathedral, &c., and at its conclusion Dr. Abram received the congratulations of Dr. Corfe, who presided for the Professor of Music.

PERTH.—On Tuesday, the 5th ult., the Euterpean Society, conducted by Mrs. Hempel, gave the second rehearsal of the present season. The programme was very attractive, and the performance excellent. Spohr's Last Judgment formed the first part, the solos, duet, and quartets being given by members of the Society. Mozart's motett, "Splendete Te Deus" and Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" were the principal works in the second part. Mr. Richmond, from Dundee, assisted at the harmonium.—On Friday, the 8th ult., the Perth Choral Society gave a concert, consisting solely of a performance of Cowen's Rose Maiden. The solos were given by amateurs, with the exception of the soprano, Miss Margaretta Smythe, from Glasgow, filling that part. The piano and harmonium were presided over by Messrs. Kinross and Richmond (both of Dundee) respectively. Mr. Hirst conducted.

RELFORD.—The second "dress rehearsal" for the present season was given by the members of the Choral Society, in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 28th April, when Mr. Barnett's Cantata of The Ancient Mariner, was performed. The solo singers were the Misses Wright and Spencer, Mr. Denman, Mr. Dimock, and Mr. Bradshaw. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. F. W. Wells for his accompaniments. Mr. Ward presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Hamilton White conducted. The second part of the rehearsal consisted of a miscellaneous selection.

RUSHDEN.—On Thursday, the 30th April, Handel's Oratorio, the Messiah, was given in the Temperance Hall, by the Higham Ferrers and District Choral Society, the soloists being Miss Ellen Glanville, Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Jamblin and Mr. Skinner. Miss Glanville's rendering of the several airs was much admired and elicited great applause. Mr. W. J. Lamb conducted with his usual ability. The choruses were given in a very creditable manner, and the concert was a great success.

SELKIRK.—The Choral Union brought its second session to a close by the performance of Handel's Messiah, in the Established Church, on Thursday, the 14th ult. Mr. F. K. Stroh conducted, and the solo parts were taken by Miss Catherine Armstrong (soprano), Madame Laubach (contralto), Mr. Heathcote (tenor), and Mr. McCall (bass). Accompanist Mr. C. Guild. The choruses were rendered by the members of the Union in a manner which gave great satisfaction.

SHEFFIELD.—On Friday, the 8th ult., Mr. Charles Harvey gave a concert in the Albert Hall, Miss Rose Hersee, Madame Lablache, Mr. W. Morgan, and Signor Celli being the vocalists, and Mr. Levy solo cornet. Miss Hersee received a most flattering welcome; and her song, "Sing, birdie, sing," being encored, she sang "Charlie is my darling." Madame Lablache sang Sullivan's "Sleep, dearest, sleep," and "Il Segreto," from Lucrèzia Borgia, with good effect. Mr. Morgan gave great satisfaction, as did also Signor Celli, who was encored in the new song, "Jack and I." Mr. Levy was encored in each of his three solos, and his playing of the obbligato to Brahms's air, "The Death of Nelson," sung by Mr. Morgan, was one of the chief features of the concert. The hall was well filled by a fashionable audience.

STAFFORD.—On Monday evening, the 27th April, a considerable number of the leading members of the congregation of Christ Church assembled in the National Schools, Gaol Road, on the occasion of a presentation to Mr. W. A. Marson, in acknowledgment of his valuable services as honorary organist for the past nine years. The Vicar (the Rev. H. K. Eaton) presided, and, in making the presentation on behalf of the congregation, spoke warmly of the value of Mr. Marson's services and of the zeal and excellent spirit which had animated him. Amid hearty applause he handed Mr. Marson a handsome gold lever watch (supplied by Mr. Mummy) and a costly gold chain from Paris, the whole being of the value of thirty-three guineas. The watch bore the following inscription:—"Presented to Mr. W. A. Marson by the congregation of Christ Church, Stafford, as a testimonial of sincere regard and in acknowledgment of his services as honorary organist for the past nine years." Mr. Marson feelingly acknowledged the kindness and liberality which had for so many years been shown him by the congregation of Christ Church, and assured them that their handsome recognition of his services would incite him to even greater zeal.

STRATFORD, ESSEX.—The West Ham Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Barnett's Cantata, Paradise and the Peri, in the Town Hall, on the 21st ult. The soloists were the Misses F. and G. Jones, Mr. Colson Phillips and Mr. Atherton Latta. The choir numbered about 70 voices, and the choruses were well sung, especially "Tis he of Gazna," and the Finale. Amongst the miscellaneous music in the second part of the programme, Cowen's Bridal Chorus, from the Rose Maiden, and a part-song by the conductor may be particularly noticed. Mr. J. S. Bates conducted. The proceeds of the concert, which is the last of the season, are to be given to a local charity.

ST. LOUIS, U.S.—The Oratorio Society of St. Louis recently gave two grand Oratorio Concerts in the Second Presbyterian Church, corner of Lucas Place and Seventeenth Street. The works selected were the Creation and the Messiah, which were performed in a style seldom equalled, and certainly never excelled by any musical performance in this city. Miss Huntington of Springfield, Illinois, and Mr. A. Bischoff, of Chicago, were the soprano and tenor respectively, and were received with great favour. Mrs. Ingham sang the alto solo with precision and finish, and to Messrs. Edward and Barnard Dierkes were assigned the bass parts. They acquitted themselves well. Prof. Creswold was the organist, and Prof. Malmene, Mus. Bac., Cantab., filled the responsible position of director. As a mark of the high estimation of Professor Malmene's efforts for the introduction in St. Louis of the standard works in sacred music, several members of the Oratorio Society have expressed a desire to tender him a complimentary benefit concert, which was advertised to take place on the 14th ult.

WESTERHAM.—On Thursday, the 30th April, the Harmonic Society, gave a concert in the Town Hall, the principal attraction in which was the performance of Mr. Francis Howell's Oratorio, The Captivity, a work which has already been given by the Festival Choral Society at Birmingham and elsewhere. The principal vocalists in the Oratorio were the Misses Lockyer, Mrs. Randall, Miss Goodall, Mr. Horace Buck, and Mr. Fogden, all of whom were highly effective. Mr. Howell, Miss Grover and Miss Jewell presided at the organ, pianoforte, and harmonium respectively, and the composition was throughout most ably interpreted. The second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Bate played an impromptu on the organ, especially erected for the occasion, which elicited much applause. Not only artistically, but financially, the concert was the most successful yet given by the Society.

WHITEHAVEN.—On Friday evening, the 1st ult., Mr. G. Greaves, of Whitehaven, formerly private organist to Sir Watkin W. Wynn, Bart, M.P., gave a recital on the organ in Holy Trinity Church, in aid of the debt on the school harmonium. The programme contained some of the best works of Rinck, Meyerbeer, Handel, &c. Mr. Greaves has earned for himself a well-deserved reputation as a skilful musician; and his able interpretation of the great masters makes his performance a genuine treat. The choir sang several anthems with much precision, the solos by Mr. W. Gair, of Trinity Church choir, and Mr. W. Gair, of St. James's choir, being well rendered. The solo by Miss Shillito required a voice of wider range. Miss Shillito was, however, highly effective in her duet with Miss Christy.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, LANCASHIRE.—An excellent concert was given on Monday evening, the 4th ult., in the National Schools, by the members of the Highfield Musical Society, under the conductorship of Mr. R. B. Carmichael. The programme consisted of Locke's music to Macbeth, and a good selection of songs, duets, glees, &c. The soloists were Mesdames Carmichael, Chapman, and Clay, Messrs. Atherton, Williams, Fowler, and C. A. and D. Webster. The accompanists were Miss Bretton and Mr. C. W. Evans. There was a large audience.

YARMOUTH.—The Great Yarmouth Musical Society gave its second concert of the season in the Drill Hall on the 21st ult. The principal work performed was Mendelssohn's First Walpurgis Night, the part of the Arch-Druid being well sustained by Mr. Christian. In the second part the most successful pieces were Mrs. Wells's "Should he upbraid" (Bishop), and Mr. Carter's "Good night, beloved" (Balfie), both of which were encored. The concert concluded with a selection from Weber's Preciosa. The band and chorus performed their parts most creditably, and the concert was much appreciated by a large audience. Mr. H. Stonex conducted, and Mr. W. Dixon and Mr. R. F. Wilkins respectively presided at the harmonium and led the band.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

W. HATTERSLEY and Co., 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield.

These Instruments are manufactured from the very best, well-seasoned Materials, in double veneered cases, and upon improved principles, and contain all the latest improvements invented by W.
Hattersley, and although the cost of their construction is thereby considerably increased, the fact of their being manufactured for their own retail sale only (and not for the trade), enables them to sell their Harmoniums at the same price as the ordinary and much inferior
Harmoniums sold by other music dealers.

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON
GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious.
Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction.
The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26,
North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—

THE MUSICAL TIMES,

JULY 1, 1874.

TOUCHING UP THE MASTERS.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

As though the music of our day did not contain enough elements of discord, we have lately seen a new controversy started and taken up with an eagerness that would have done honour to the polemics of the Middle Ages in view of a new dogma. I do not wish to underrate the value of controversy. It is from the conflict of opinion that the spark of truth arises, just as the agitation of water keeps it pure and life-sustaining. But we may carry this sort of thing too far. What became of the principles of religion when theologians were discussing how many angels could stand upon the point of a needle, and other equally important subjects? What does society owe to the men who, blind to practical considerations, are for ever pottering over the fabric of an impossible Utopia? There must be some limit to controversy about our art if music is to flourish as it ought, and I confess to looking upon every fresh apple of discord as a baneful fruit. Personally, therefore, I enter into the new quarrel with reluctance, but there is no help for it. The heartiest lover of peace must sometimes draw the sword, and he would be no friend to music who, under present conditions, could stand tamely by and see its choicest interests assailed. A new rule is being taught among us, according to which it is lawful and right to take the composition of a great master and adapt it to the increased resources of a subsequent time. This, however, is no sudden revelation of a strange doctrine. Like most other things of the kind, it is simply the formal elevation to accepted theory of an irregular practice, just as, in Common Law, an aggregate of precedents acquire the binding force of a statute. From time immemorial musical men have touched up the masters according to their notion of what those worthies ought to have written, and generations of singers, with the sublime impertinence of their class, have turned the noblest inspirations into show pieces for the behoof of their own petty and ephemeral selves. But all this has been done under indulgence, and with a consciousness that, however expedient, it is, in principle, not to be justified. Between such a condition of things and that now sought to be established, lies a very wide interval indeed. It is one thing to wink at wrong-doing, and quite another to give it the sanction of law. Here, then, we who desire to conserve the best interests of music take our stand. We say, "Continue your irregularities, if you have no better taste, but do not ask for their sanction as a matter of principle."

It is on the question of principle that this new movement must chiefly be met, because there the conservative position is absolutely unassailable. Herr Richard Wagner, and those who think with him, may come to us with their asseverations—proofs, if you will—that what they propose to do is expedient, our answer is, "You have no right to do anything at all, and we decline to accord you a locus standi in the matter." I will go further, and say that the liberty sought is of such a nature that no consensus of opinion could possibly legalise it. Robbery remains a crime, even though public judgment pronounce it an act of morality, and the right to tamper with works of art lies equally beyond human will. Those works are guarded by a sublime non possumus, and he who violates them commits more than a social offence, because society has not the power to condone it. So clear does all this seem to me, that I can hardly imagine the need of demonstration; but there is such an amazing confusion in men's minds now-a-days about the most obvious things, that it may be well to take as little as possible for granted. Let me, then, place before the reader a great work of art, no matter what—the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, the "Descent from the Cross," the "Apollo Belvedere" or St. Paul's Cathedral. There it stands, the embodiment of its author's ideas so far as his skill could carry them out,—a creation which genius, in laying down its tools, proclaimed to be a finished thing. To whom does it still belong? The brain that devised and the hand that executed it are dust. You may re-score the symphony with no fear of Beethoven's frown, and you may add a new dome to the Cathedral without dread of Sir Christopher Wren. But genius never loses the right of property in its works. A gifted man's creations belong to his fame; they are more sacred to his memory than the monument over his grave; for be it remembered that, in such cases, human life and the privileges belonging to it are not determined by the "article of death." According to French law, you may libel a dead man, and be called upon by his representatives to make amends for the act. So, in matters of art, you may defraud and insult those who have been dust for centuries. I ask, then, when the question arises of touching up an old master, who has the right to do it? It is of no use to urge, as some have done, that the case of music stands apart from that of all other arts. I admit a difference, and quite recognise the fact that to tamper with a famous picture or statue is much more serious in its results than to propose changes in a composition—changes which may be adopted or not, and which, even when adopted, leave the work in its integrity for those who care to have it so. But the principle involved in both cases is precisely the same, and it is on the basis of principle that I am at present contending. The man is a thief who steals a diamond, and so is he who robs his neighbour of a postage stamp, the only difference between them being one of degree. It may be necessary to insist more upon this fact, because, in all probability, many who listen with perfect complacency to proposals such as Wagner has made with reference to the Ninth Symphony, would lift their hands in horror were they asked to acquiesce in touching up a Raphael out of respect to modern ideas, or flesh-tinting, à la Gibson, the Venus di Medici. However the fact may be hidden at first sight, this is really to draw a distinction between things that do not differ; and I seriously contend that, if you can establish a right to alter the musical master-piece, you, at the same time, prove a claim to meddle with the master-piece of painting or of sculpture. Why not? The analogy is perfect at all points, and the arguments used in the one case exactly apply to the other. For example, some Wagner of painting may come forward, and, looking at an "old master," observe:—"In the instance of this picture, it is obvious that the drawing and grouping are not quite such as the artist would have adopted had he lived in a later age, and it is also evident that he has failed wholly to realise his own ideas in the matter of colour. By doing so-and-so, we can remedy these defects, and present to the world an art-work such as the old master would have executed had he lived in the present advanced and enlightened age." Were any man, however eminent, silly enough to talk like this, he would probably be made the subject of a commission in lunacy, and, with all convenient speed, shut up where he could do no harm. Yet, mirabile dictu, Wagner is not only permitted to be at large after proposing changes in the Ninth Symphony, but a lot of otherwise sane people pat him on the back, and express their astonishment that his directions are not acted upon. I can only explain this marvellous inconsistency by reference to the general laxness of principle in regard to "printed matter"—a laxness which almost legalises the offence of borrowing books and never returning them. Litera scripta manet, indeed! The reading should be, Litera scripta non manet; for authors write upon sand, and the very winds of heaven make sport with their handiwork; while the greater the genius the more surely will all the literary potterers gather round its creations, each with his ideas as to what might, could, or would have been intended. Let us guard the treasures of music from such well-meaning, but most mistaken, not to say immoral, folk. Give them an inch, and they will take more than an ell; wherefore the cry should be a stern "Hands off" when they come suspiciously near a master-piece. Let them be told not to meddle with other people's property, and told with the voice of authority, for we are its legal guardians. The great creations of musical genius exist for all. They are like some breezy, upland common, over which the gorse throws its golden glory unmolested, and the fern spreads its fronds untouched, which everybody is free to enjoy, and all are bound, in the general interest, to protect from meddling hands.

A familiar story says that when Queen Elizabeth visited a certain Cornish borough, the mayor waited upon her with twelve substantial reasons for not ringing the church bells, the first being that there were no bells to ring. Her Majesty, it is said, begged the civic functionary not to trouble himself about the remaining eleven; and, if I have convinced my reader that retouching the old masters is bad in principle, he may decline to follow me into the question of expediency. Nevertheless, that question must be faced, because there are many who will yield to expediency, when they will submit to nothing else. In the first place, let me invite attention to the subjoined extract from the Autobiography of Hector Berlioz:

"Before my departure for Italy, I added the correction of musical proofs to my means of living. The publisher, Troupenas, having given me, among other things, the scores of Beethoven's symphonies, which M. Fétis had looked over before me, I found those masterpieces full of the most impudent changes—affecting even the author's ideas, and annotations more presumptuous still. Everything which, in Beethoven's harmony, did not agree with the theory of M. Fétis, was changed with incredible boldness. À propos of the holding of the clarinet upon E flat, above the Chord of the 6th—D flat, F, B flat—in the Andante of the C minor symphony, M. Fétis had even written on the margin, 'This E flat is evidently an F; it is impossible that Beethoven has committed so gross an error!' In other words, It is impossible that such a man as Beethoven could be other than in accord with M. Fétis. In consequence, M. Fétis had put an F in place of the characteristic note of Beethoven: destroying thus the evident intention of that piercing tenue which only merges into the F later, after having passed through the E natural, producing thus a little chromatic ascending progression, and a crescendo of the most remarkable effect. Already irritated by other corrections of the same nature, useless to cite, I was exasperated by this. . . . I went immediately in search of Troupenas, and said, 'M. Fétis insults Beethoven and common sense. His corrections are crimes. The E flat, which he takes away in the Andante of the C minor symphony, is a magical touch—celebrated in all the orchestras of Europe; the F of M. Fétis is a platitude. I warn you that I will declare the inaccuracy of your edition, and denounce the act of M. Fétis, and that your professor will soon be treated as he deserves by all who respect genius, and scorn pretentious mediocrity.' . . . The result was that Troupenas had to restore the original text, and that M. Fétis thought it necessary to publish a big lie (gros mensonge) in his Revue Musicale, asserting that the rumour which accused him of having corrected the symphonies of Beethoven was without the slightest foundation."

I do not quote this extract simply because it tells an à propos story of two distinguished men, but because it points a significant moral. Admit the principle of "correcting" masterpieces, and where is its practice to end? Admit even that certain corrections are improvements, what guarantee have you that others will not be just the reverse? In point of fact, safety lies only in a stern adherence to the principle of letting things alone. You cannot hold examinations and confer diplomas in the art of touching up the old masters, and if one skilful man is permitted to try his hand a thousand bunglers may claim the right to try theirs. In the result what will become of your masterpieces? You have opened a Pandora's box to get at a present from Jove, and let loose a multitude of evils, while Hope cannot be found at the bottom. This brings me face to face with the conspicuous example of retouching on which its advocates chiefly rely—the re-instrumentation by Mozart of Handel's Messiah, &c. We must all admit the wonderful success of that effort, but in the degree of its success has been the resultant mischief. Mozart approached the work with diffidence and timidity, as his previous additional accompaniments to Acis and Galatea prove, but "fools rush in where angels fear to tread," and the great master simply showed the way for a lot of musical "roughs." No composer was safe afterwards, and Mozart himself suffered. "Illustrious masters," wrote Berlioz, "have taken the liberty to correct the instrumentation of their predecessors, upon whom they have thus bestowed the charity of their science and taste. Mozart instrumented the Oratorios of Handel. Divine justice willed, later, that Mozart's Operas should in their turn be instrumented in England, where they are abused by trombones, ophicleides, and big drums." The French composer and critic goes on to say—"Spontini acknowledged adding, with much discretion, it is true, wind instruments to those found in the Iphigénie en Tauride of Gluck. Two years after he complained with bitterness to me of the excess of this kind of thing—of the abominable additions to the orchestra of the poor dead who could no longer defend themselves against such calumnies. 'Tis shameful; frightful,' he cried. 'They will correct me also when I am in my grave!' To which I sadly responded, 'Alas! dear master, you also corrected Gluck?'" So one mischief breeds another, and a little fire can kindle a great matter. It has been said that there are no small sins, and the remark is profoundly true, for sins that appear small become large by facile increment. They are easy to imitate without being dangerous, save in their aggregate results, and hence they spread freely on every hand. We must estimate such offences by their general working, and not by particular cases; wherefore, we do well to consider the practice of "correcting" the masterpieces of music from the broadest possible stand-point. So looked at, it is plain that every single instance, even that in which the end appears to justify the means, deserves stern condemnation. No matter if another Mozart come forward to bestow, as Berlioz remarks with cutting irony, upon another Handel the charity of his skill and taste. The true interests of art cannot afford to permit the gift. If anybody still doubts let him glance at the state of things already existing among us, and mark the fast-growing license with which our musical masterpieces are treated, and how their integrity is endangered by a rage for emendations. Should this go on the time will come when the text of Beethoven will be as much in dispute as that of Shakespeare, and Dryasdust will find a new field of labour in hunting up and comparing early editions in order to get at the truth. Let nobody deride the possibility of such a result, for it is the natural and logical outcome of the practices now sought to be legalised.

I do not intend to discuss here the particular example of correction which has excited recent controversy; preferring to take up my position upon general grounds. And in conclusion, I shall adopt a passage which Berlioz, in his Monodrame, puts into the mouth of Lelio:—"But the most cruel enemies of genius are those sad inhabitants of the Temple of Routine, who sacrifice to their stupid goddess the most sublime of new ideas; those young theorists of twenty-four years, living in the midst of an ocean of prejudices, persuaded that the world finishes with the borders of their isle—those old libertines who order music to caress and divert them, not admitting that the chaste muse can have a nobler mission; and, above all, those profanators, who, having put their hand upon original works, make them submit to horrible mutilations, which they call corrections and amendments. A malediction on them. They work upon art a ridiculous outrage. Such are the vulgar birds of our public gardens, which perch arrogantly upon the noblest statues, and strut about proud and satisfied, when they have soiled the brow of Jupiter, the arm of Hercules, and the breast of Venus."

AN Association is now in the course of formation for the study of the art and science of music, precisely on the principles which regulate the many other learned Societies of London. No concerts or musical performances of any kind are to be given, but the object of the meetings will be to read original papers and to discuss all matters relating to the art. Dr. Stainer, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, will act as Secretary to the Society; and as the names of several eminent musical professors, as well as those of many holding the highest rank in the scientific world, are already enrolled, there is every reason to believe that this new undertaking will be crowned with complete success.

THE three performances of Verdi's new Requiem at La Scala, in Milan, have attracted enormous audiences, and the composer, who conducted the first representation, was overwhelmed with honours. Many of the movements were re-demanded, and several were repeated. We hear also that the work has been produced in Paris, where it was equally successful. London is slow in recognising any novelty, even when its worth has been assured by competent critics; but the fast increasing number of Festivals in our provincial towns will soon render us independent of the metropolis in this respect; and, as in the case of Mr. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," Signor Verdi's new Mass may first be heard in England very many miles from the city which should be foremost in promoting the healthy progress of art in this country.

ALL who reverence the name of the composer of the "Messiah" will, we are sure, be glad to learn how noble are some of the uses to which his works are applied. A paragraph in a daily paper, describing the entry of the winner of the Derby into Swindon and the village of Wroughton, where he was trained, informs us that "on the arrival of George Frederick, at the station, the great horse was met by a large crowd of people, and immediately serenaded with a brass band. Handel's music was selected to do honour to the victor, who was greeted by the same strains which are performed to celebrate the triumphs of distinguished generals or other public benefactors." Recollecting our musical reception of the Shah and the Czar, it seems but right that so grand a conqueror as "George Frederick" should be welcomed with similar honours; and what music could be better suited for the occasion than that of his great namesake George Frederick Handel? We are not told which of the composer's pieces was selected by the Wroughton minstrels; but, considering how the English people are driven blindly to the worship of any temporary idol, we can scarcely imagine a more appropriate composition than "All we like sheep."

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

ALL who wish success to the grand triennial gatherings at the Crystal Palace, which have firmly held their ground since 1859, must we are sure have been glad to find that the selection for this year embraced a wider range of compositions than it has hitherto done. True the Festival is still one for the exclusive glorification of Handel, and those who anxiously looked for the "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt" have not been disappointed; but the day which occurs between the performances of these two great Oratorios was provided with a programme, the second part of which was, for the first time, entirely devoted to the composer's secular works; and, considering that a large portion of "Acis and Galatea" was given, as well as some excerpts from Dryden's Ode, "Alexander's Feast," &c., there can be little doubt that, to the majority of the audience, this was a most welcome innovation. Nothing new can be said of the magnificent appearance of the now familiar "Handel Orchestra," with its vast army of vocalists and instrumentalists, under the command of that experienced General, Sir Michael Costa; but it may be mentioned that the careful manner in which the space devoted to the performance has been enclosed by screens has produced results which we could scarcely have anticipated, for certainly on no previous occasion has the music been so concentrated; and considering the exalted position assigned to us, and other members of the critical body—on the principle, we presume, that sound, like smoke, ascends—our opinion should be of some value. The "Rehearsal," which took place on the 19th ult., as far as the public is concerned, was another "Selection day," for some of the best pieces to be performed during the Festival were given with all that perfection which might confidently be expected from a body of artists so admirably trained. The first day of the Festival was Monday, the 22nd ult., when the "Messiah" was selected for performance. Unfortunately Mr. Sims Reeves was prevented by indisposition from appearing, but his place was ably supplied by Mr. Vernon Rigby. The soprano solos were divided between Madlle. Titiens and Madame Sinico, and those for the contralto between Madame Trebelli-Bettini and Madame Patey. In "Rejoice greatly," Madlle. Titiens's fine voice told with much effect; and the air, "But who may abide"—known to have been written by Handel in the Dublin copy of the Oratorio for an alto voice—was very properly given to the contralto, and sung with good expression by Madame Trebelli-Bettini, although we confess not to like her so well in oratorio as in operatic music. Madame Sinico created a highly favourable impression in "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and Madame Patey was as artistic as ever in the air, "He was despised." Signor Agnesi's fine delivery of "The people that walked in darkness," and Mr. Santley's rendering of "Why do the nations" and "The trumpet shall sound" (in the latter of which Mr. T. Harper's obbligato was, as usual, an important feature) were deserving of the warmest praise. Nothing could exceed the precision with which the choruses were given, "For unto us" perhaps being most remarkable for that perfect balance of tone so difficult to attain with such an enormous volume of sound. The "Hallelujah," too, went finely; and the choruses "He shall purify," and "Worthy is the Lamb," must also be mentioned as successful instances of readiness and decision on the part both of the members of the choral body and their indefatigable conductor. The Oratorio was preceded by the National Anthem, the last verse of which, given with full chorus, band and organ, was extremely effective. On the following Wednesday, the "Selection day," the programme was, as we have already mentioned, divided into a sacred and a secular part. The sacred portion commenced with the Overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," which was finely played, although we cannot sanction some alterations—we presume suggested by the conductor—which were made in the March. This was followed by a selection from "Saul," including the three fine choruses, "How excellent Thy Name," "Envy, eldest born of Hell," and "Gird on thy sword," the last one never having before been given at these Festivals. No praise can be too great for the manner in which these grand choral pieces were sung, every point being brought out with a clearness which proved how thoroughly the music had been studied by the choir. Madame Trebelli-Bettini's rendering of the air, "O Lord, whose mercies," from the same Oratorio, was earnest and expressive, and the "Dead March," which had to be repeated, created an impression upon the audience beyond the power of words to describe. Mr. Santley's delivery of the air, "How willing my paternal love," from "Samson," was succeeded by a selection from "Jephtha," including the grand chorus, "When His loud voice," and the Recitative, "Deeper, and deeper still," and air, "Waft her, angels," given with the utmost fervour of expression by Mr. Sims Reeves, who received so warm a welcome from the vast assemblage as to convince him, we trust, how widely extended has been the public sympathy for him during his recent severe and protracted indisposition. "If guiltless blood" (excellently sung by Madlle. Titiens), and the chorus, "Righteous heaven," were the only extracts from "Susanna," and the air, "Lord, to Thee each night," from "Theodora," displayed Madame Trebelli-Bettini's admirably trained voice to much advantage. The "Gloria Patri," from the "Utrecht Jubilate," coming after so many grand choruses, scarcely produced the impression which it ought to have done. The long holding notes for the choir, with the moving orchestral accompaniment, in the opening, have a fine effect; and the second chorus, "As it was in the beginning," starting with the bold unison phrase for Tenors and Basses; unaccompanied, answered, after a few bars of choral and orchestral harmony, with the Sopranos and Altos, also in unison, give much eloquence to the words; and the contrapuntal power displayed as the movement progresses, is of the highest order. We hope that we may not have to wait for the next Handel Festival before we have a hearing of the whole of this fine work. The fourth Concerto for Organ and Orchestra, which commenced the second part, was played by Mr. W. T. Best, with a reverence for the genius of the composer which cannot be too much commended. In every respect this was a most finished performance (his own cadenza, especially, being admirably in keeping with the work), and fully merited the enthusiastic applause with which it was greeted. The selection from "Acis and Galatea" was an exceedingly judicious one. The two choruses, "O, the pleasure of the plains," and "Wretched lovers," commenced unsteadily, but were afterwards grandly sang. Mr. E. Lloyd created an extraordinary effect by his really fine singing of the air, "Love in her eyes," being recalled to the platform amidst acclamations; Madame Lemmens-Sherrington gave "Hush! ye pretty warbling choir," with her usual success, and Mr. Santley would have been irreproachable in "O ruddier than the cherry," had he not ended upon the key-note an octave higher than it is written, which, to our mind, thoroughly alters the whole feeling of the song. Disappointment was felt at the omission of the air, "Love sounds the alarm," which was to have been sung by Mr. Sims Reeves; but everything else was given according to the programme, which included the chorus, "From Harmony," the characteristic March, and the air and chorus, "The Trumpet's loud clangour" (from Dryden's "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day")—the solo in the latter piece well sung by Mr. Vernon Rigby—"Ah! mio cor!" for Madlle. Titiens, "Where'er you walk," for Mr. Cummings, and "Revenge! Timotheus cries," for Signor Agnesi, besides the chorus, "The many rend the skies," and the trio and chorus, "See the conquering hero comes," the principal parts in which were sung by Madlle. Titiens, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, and Madame Trebelli-Bettini. The performance of "Israel in Egypt" on Friday, the 26th ult., formed a fitting termination to the Festival. The choir showed no signs of fatigue during the whole of the trying choruses of this most exacting work, and the result was one of the most perfect representations of the Oratorio yet given. The principal parts were sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Kerr Gedge, Signor Foli, and Mr. Santley. The labours of Sir Michael Costa have been great during the preparation for, and the execution of, the elaborate works which have been selected for the Festival, but he has been fully rewarded by the result, for in an artistic point of view we believe this to have been the best series of performances yet given; and that it may also prove to have been so in a pecuniary sense we sincerely hope, not only from a consideration for those who promote the undertaking, but for the sake of securing the continuance of a national musical demonstration, such as we believe cannot be equalled by any other country in the world.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

HAD Mr. Balfe foreseen that poor English Opera would in a short time be banished so effectually that it would be found necessary to pretend to be an Italian in order to gain re-admission into England, he would no doubt have composed his "Talisman" in the fashionable lyrical tongue, instead of allowing it to be translated afterwards. "Il Talismano," in its foreign dress, as produced at Her Majesty's Opera on the 11th ult., cannot but have struck the majority of the audience as extremely absurd; for, unlike "Lucia di Lammermoor," in which Scott's characters are re-christened and made to sing purely Southern music, no listener can shake off the feeling that an English libretto composed by an Irishman is a very different thing from one in his native language composed by an Italian. The excitement of a first night, and the circumstance of the principal character being sustained by Madame Christine Nilsson—who has evidently thrown her best energies into the task—must not blind us to the fact that, as a work of art, it can scarcely hope to live. Long before this Opera was composed Mr. Balfe may be said to have written himself out; for, although in his latter compositions gleams of his former talent occasionally appeared, there can be little question that not one of these works would have built up that fame which—partly owing to the dearth of English operatic composers in his early days—he so rapidly acquired. That he had facility—and that of the most remarkable kind—we freely admit; but facility is not genius—although, both in creative and executive artists, it is very often mistaken for it—and the numerous works thrown off by him during the many years he was before the public, the titles of which even have passed from our recollection, afford a sufficiently convincing proof that an extensive popularity gained at the outset of a career is too often an effectual bar to anything like steady artistic progress. It is of course a pleasurable task—especially when large sums have been expended upon scenic display, and eminent vocalists fill the principal characters—to pen a kindly and encouraging notice of an Opera, falling into raptures over two or three pieces, and passing over the dreary load of music in which these few glittering gems are embedded; but a duty is not always a pleasure; and those who write in the cause of true art are bound to respect only that which tends to advance its real mission in the world, and to throw aside that which in the slightest degree retards its progress. Why this new Opera is called “Il Talismano” it would be difficult to say, seeing that there is nothing about a talisman throughout the libretto; and to show how very small a portion of it is founded upon Scott’s novel, we may also mention that Saladin appears only in the first Act. Some skill however has been shown by Mr. Arthur Matthison, the author of the book, in laying out the scenes for musical illustration; and had Mr. Balfe’s setting of the several telling situations been sufficiently good to rivet the attention of the audience, it would no doubt have compensated in a great measure for the want of interest in the story. In very few places however has he done more than a clever “arranger” would have accomplished had he been entrusted by the management to provide at a few days’ notice suitable music for the sensational points of a melodrama: indeed, if we mention the scene in the Queen’s tent, the grand duet between Sir Kenneth and Edith, “Quest anel,” and the Finale to the second Act, we believe we have named all the pieces which rise above mediocrity, although we are bound to admit that in many parts we have excellent examples of the composer’s knowledge of dramatic effect, and eight-bar phrases of melody in some of the songs which—although but a faint reflection of the old “Balfeian” type—will very probably make a little fortune for the music-seller. Notwithstanding that the nature of the subject seems to demand an Overture of some pretension, the curtain rises after a mere Prelude, the scene representing the sandy plains in the vicinity of the Dead Sea, so beautifully painted as to elicit on the first night a storm of applause. There is much character in the Scena of the deformed Slave Nectabanus; but the scene in the Chapel, where some religious music is attempted, utterly failed to interest the audience, the crude organ solo, which serves as an introduction to the Hymn “Salve Regina,” by no means disposing the listeners to anything like a feeling of devotion, and the Hymn itself (which was not well sung) proving how thoroughly the composer was working against his true style. The tenor solo, “Candido fiore,” which immediately follows, saved the curtain from descending with but faint recognitions of success, for although exceedingly common-place, it is pleasingly instrumented, and the theme is tuneful enough to remind the admirers of what Balfe could do before his powers were on the wane. The second Act contains the best music of the Opera. The brilliant military scene where Richard contemptuously tears down the Austrian Standard, offers some fine opportunities for the skill of the composer, but here we have nothing but disappointment, for beyond noise and meaningless choral display nothing is even attempted. Ample amends however is made for this failure by the music in the Queen’s tent, which, as we have already said, rises to a higher level than any other portion of the Opera. The Romance “La guerra appena” (excellently sung by Madlle. Marie Roze, and re-demanded), the duet “Quest anel”—to which we have before alluded—and the whole of the Finale, display a power which contrasts strangely with the weakness too evident in situations which, although of vital consequence, seem to have been passed over by the composer as comparatively unimportant. The third Act calls for but slight notice, for with the exception of a showy Rondeau, given to perfection by Madame Nilsson, and encored, there is nothing but music of the most commonplace character until the final fall of the curtain, an event which seemed anxiously longed for by the singers as well as the audience. Respecting the manner in which the Opera was placed upon the stage we have nothing but praise. The scene of the Dead Sea plains, with the setting sun; that of the Mound, on which the banners of the allied crusading powers are floating, and the interiors of the tents, are all masterpieces; and the dresses and properties are gorgeous in the extreme. Madame Nilsson, as Edith Plantagenet, achieved a success which, as we have already indicated, was due more to her own excellent acting and singing than to the music itself; and Signor Campanini was as gallant a Sir Kenneth as could be desired, making his greatest effect in the duet with Edith, but doing his very best for those purely English ballads which could not but recall the days of Mr. W. Harrison, when native Opera was struggling for a place with its formidable rival. Madlle. Roze, as the Queen, Signor Rota, as the Lion-hearted King, and Signor Catalani, as Nectabanus, laboured zealously to ensure the success of the work, and their efforts were received, as they deserved, with marked applause. Great praise too, is due to Sir Michael Costa, whose watchfulness throughout the Opera ensured that steadiness of execution which was really remarkable for a first night. Mr. Mapleson has done well to redeem his faith with the subscribers by bringing forward this work with so powerful a cast and with all the accessories so necessary for its perfect presentation; but for the sake of the reputation of the composer, we are sorry that it was produced. Rossini, like Mr. Balfe, in the latter part of his career aimed at the composition of an Opera of a higher class than those by which he had earned his fame; but in doing so the former proved his strength, and the latter his weakness. Rossini changed his style and wrote “Guillaume Tell”; Balfe changed his style and wrote—“Il Talismano.”

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Two new tenors have been added to the company at this establishment during the past month, Signor Piazza, who as Elvino in “La Sonnambula,” created a highly favourable impression, and Signor Marini, who made his début as Arnoldo in “Guillaume Tell,” singing the whole of the music, especially the declamatory portions, with excellent effect, but with perhaps a slight tendency occasionally to force his voice beyond its legitimate power. His duet with Mathilde was especially good; and if he have the good sense to correct certain defects, there can be little doubt that he may continue to strengthen his position as a satisfactory and reliable exponent of a line of characters which for two or three seasons has been but indifferently filled. We may also mention Madame Vilda’s return, after an absence of eight years, with a voice much increased in power and flexibility, both her singing and acting in the character of Norma eliciting the warmest marks of approbation. The only other new appearance has been that of Madlle. Clemence Calasch, as Siebel, in “Faust,” but excessive nervousness utterly prevented her from displaying whatever qualifications she may possess for the position to which she aspires.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE fifth concert of this Society was given on the 1st ult., when an excellent programme was provided, an interesting feature in which was the artistic performance of the pianist, M. Jaell, whose touch and phrasing throughout the evening were the theme of universal admiration. Beethoven’s Concerto in C, No. 1, and Schumann’s Concertstück were well chosen for the display of his exceptionally fine powers, the “Allegro” of the latter work creating a positive enthusiasm. The orchestral pieces included Haydn’s “Surprise” Symphony, and Beethoven’s Symphony in C minor. At the sixth concert, on the 15th ult., Rheinberger’s Overture, “Taming of the Shrew,” made a sufficiently good impression to warrant us in desiring a second hearing, which we trust may be granted next season. Without a guide-book, it is of course difficult to follow the composer through his musical illustrations of the varied incidents in the play; but this of course applies, more or less, to all "programme music." The two movements of Beethoven's unfinished Symphony in B minor, and Beethoven's ever-welcome "Pastoral" delighted all who did not crave after novelty.

 The Editors of the CATHEDRAL PSALTER beg to acknowledge the receipt of a large number of communications in response to a paragraph in the previous number of the MUSICAL TIMES. It is desirable that all persons sending contributions to the proposed collection of Chants should retain copies, as the Editors cannot undertake to return any manuscripts.*

THE second Pianoforte Recital of Madame Essipoff, which was given at St. James's Hall, on the 13th ult., strengthened the hold she has already obtained over the London public, although exception may fairly be taken to some of her readings of the classical works. Her execution of Chopin's Berceuse, and an Intermezzo by Von Bülow, delighted all hearers; and in Schumann's "Carnaval," she so thoroughly entered into the spirit of the composer as to elicit a burst of applause, as enthusiastic as it was well deserved. The audience included many of the most eminent musicians.

THE Concertina and Pianoforte Recitals of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Blagrove, which have been given at the Beethoven Rooms, must be mentioned as amongst the most enjoyable of the many entertainments of this class so constantly taking place during the London season. At the second concert, on the 4th ult., one of the most important items in the programme was Sir Sterndale Bennett's Pianoforte Sonata, "The Maid of Orleans," which was rendered by Mrs. Richard Blagrove, with a fluency of execution and a reverence for the intention of the composer, deserving of the highest praise; and Dussek's Sonata in B flat, afforded an excellent opportunity for the display of the united talents of the concert-givers. The Recitals have been exceedingly well attended.

WE are hearing various styles of pianoforte playing during the present season, and all tastes, therefore, from the lover of the pure and classical method to that of what—for want of a better name—we must term the "higher development" school, cannot but be amply gratified. Amongst the new comers must be mentioned M. Duvernoy, whose Recitals have been of the utmost interest. His rendering of Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," and of various pieces by Scarlatti, Chopin, Mendelssohn, Weber, &c., besides some of his own compositions, thoroughly proved his right to be accepted as a sound and intellectual performer, a fact which was fully acknowledged by the warm demonstrations of approval with which he was greeted.

THE second subscription concert of the Welsh Choral Union was given at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 16th ult., before a large audience. The band of harps—always a feature at the performances of this Society—was highly effective, and the singing of Miss Edith Wynne was, as usual, much admired. Miss Therese Castellan created a decided impression by her excellent rendering of De Beriot's "Fantaisie de Ballet," on the violin, and she was re-called to the platform amidst the warmest applause. Mr. John Thomas conducted the concert with much ability.

SOME Russian lady vocalists have been singing with much effect at St. James's Hall during the past month. Their voices blend well together, and their performances are sufficiently novel and characteristic to warrant us in predicting that, should these concerts be continued, they will prove one of the prominent attractions of the season. The accompanist is M. Nils Chrisander.

DR. SLOMAN'S Cantata, "Supplication and Praise," which was produced at the Albert Hall, on the 17th ult., scarcely received a sufficiently good rendering by Mr. William Carter's choir and the small band engaged for the occasion, to warrant us in pronouncing an opinion on its merits. The solos were well given by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Signor Foli. The second part was miscellaneous.

MISS ISABEL WAITE, a promising pianist, late of the Royal Academy of Music, gave a concert at Onslow Hall, Brompton, on the 17th ult., when she performed with much success Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (No. 3, Op. 29) and Dussek's Sonata in B flat, for violin and pianoforte, in which she received the valuable co-operation of Mr. H. Holmes. She also took part in two trios, in all of which—as well as in some less important solos—she elicited most encouraging and well deserved applause. Several vocal pieces were also given, which were well accompanied by Mr. Thoulless.

MR. CHARLES GARDNER gave his annual morning concert on the 13th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms. One of Mr. Gardner's most important solos—Rheinberger's "Drei Kleine Concert-stücke"—created a profound impression; and we must also mention his admirable performance of the pianoforte part of Silas's trio in C major, in which he was ably assisted by Mr. H. Holmes (violin), and Signor Pezze (violoncello). The vocalists were Miss Lucy Franklin, Miss Sophie Ferrari, and Mr. Vernon Rigby.

A SERIES of statuary of some interest is now being completed at the yard of Mr. Simpkin, Sculptor, Manchester, consisting of fourteen life-sized figures, designed to surmount the stone piers which stand above the aisle roof of the Band Pavilion of the new Winter Gardens at Southport. This building is to be used as a Promenade Concert-room, in which will be executed the highest class of music. The series is intended to illustrate the history of music from the earliest records of the art down to recent times, by representing the various musical characters spoken of in ancient and modern works, showing as far as possible, by means of the instruments and accessories introduced, the state of music at the various epochs of the world. A full description of these figures has been furnished to us, which we regret to say the space at our disposal will not allow us to insert; but we may mention that they have been judiciously chosen as representatives of the age which they are designed to illustrate; and that, when completed and placed in position, they will doubtless prove a powerful attraction to musical as well as to non-musical visitors.

MR. H. R. EYERS gave a concert at Westbourne Hall, on the 10th ult., which was attended by a large and appreciative audience. Amongst the pieces selected for the display of Mr. Eyers's excellently trained choir we may mention Sir Sterndale Bennett's Chorus, "Therefore with joy shall ye draw water," from the "Woman of Samaria;" Schubert's 23rd Psalm, for female voices, "The Lord is my Shepherd;" Mendelssohn's Psalm for an eight-part choir, "Judge me, O God;" and the same composer's "Vintage Song," from "Loreley," all of which were given with much precision and warmly received, the last two being re-demanded. An interesting feature in the selection was Schubert's Sonatina in D (No. 1, Op. 137), for pianoforte and violin, which was well played by Mr. Eyers and Mr. Elmenhorst; and a good word must also be said for Mr. Elmenhorst's violin solos, one of which was encored. The principal vocalists were Miss Jessie Jones and Mr. W. H. Cummings, both of whom contributed with much success to the attraction of a programme which reflected the utmost credit upon the taste and judgment of the concert-giver.

MR. E. SILAS gave an evening concert on the 6th ult., at St. George's Hall, the programme of which contained, amongst other interesting items, some excellent compositions by the bénéficiaire, all of which were most warmly received. His Trio in C, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello is undoubtedly one of the finest works he has yet produced; and our only wonder is that, whilst the wildest creations of the modern German school are constantly presented at our Chamber Concerts, so artistic and melodious a composition as this should be comparatively passed over. The "Andante" is charmingly written for the strings, in combination with the pianoforte; and the "Scherzo"—so fanciful in its details, and so clear in construction—created a perfect storm of applause. The Trio was extremely well played by the composer, Mr. H. Holmes, and Signor Pezze. Mr. Silas also performed some smaller pieces of his composition, one of which—"Rococo" ("an old-fashioned trifle"), a quaint little sketch, but full of a beauty which can never fade—so delighted the audience that its repetition was insisted upon. In the execution of all the compositions named—and also in the pianoforte part of a Quartet, by Kufferath, in which he was joined by Mr. Holmes (violin), Mr. Blagrove (viola), and Signor Pezze (violoncello)—Mr. Silas displayed a fluency of execution and an unobtrusive power of expressing the minutest shades of feeling quite refreshing in these days of "higher development." The vocalists were Madame Edna Hall, Miss Marion Severn, and Signor Garcia, the last of whom in a clever song by the concert-giver, called "The Life Chase," elicited the most enthusiastic applause. The accompanist was Mr. G. Minson.

MENDELSSOHN'S Oratorio "St. Paul," was given by the Brixton Choral Society, on the 1st ult. The solo vocalists were Miss Jessie Jones, Madame Poole, Mr. Dudley Thomas, Mr. F. Rumsey, and Mr. Thurley Beale, all of whom were highly efficient. The choruses on the whole were well rendered. Mr. William Lemare conducted, and Mr. William Byrom presided at the organ.

At the anniversary meeting of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read, held at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 12th ult., a very excellent programme was exceedingly well rendered by the pupils, under the conductorship of Mr. Edwin Barnes, their able instructor. The unaccompanied quartets, "God is a Spirit" ("Woman of Samaria"), "The Lord is nigh" ("Prodigal Son"), and selections from the works of Mozart and Mendelssohn were sung with great accuracy of tune and time, and the performance of Bach's Pedal Fugue in G minor, by Mr. Price, reflected the highest credit on the training he had received. The Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen presided.

The completion of the second series of ten Organ Recitals by Mr. F. E. Gladstone, given on Wednesday afternoons, at the Dome, Brighton, should not pass without a word of recognition. Occupying about an hour each Recital, and the selection consisting exclusively of high class compositions, we can scarcely imagine any more enjoyable entertainment; and we trust that the Brighton public will sufficiently appreciate Mr. Gladstone's labours to justify him in continuing performances which cannot but prove most valuable to the progress of real art.

A VERY successful concert was given by Madame Schneegans, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 2nd ult., assisted by Mesdames Talbot-Cherer, Thaddeus Wells, and Poole, Messrs. Stedman, Thurley Beale, and Mr. Santley, as vocalists, M. Paque (violoncello), and Mr. W. E. Bendall (pianist), Mr. Fountain Meen acting as accompanist. Madame Schneegans thoroughly enlisted the sympathies of the audience by her excellent rendering of two compositions by M. Gounod, and the other ladies were also very successful in the music allotted to them. Mr. Santley's songs were received with much enthusiasm. Mr. Stedman was re-called for his rendering of Mendelssohn's "Garland," as was also Mr. Beale for "I'm a Roamer." Mr. W. E. Bendall's playing of Wagner's "Spinning Chorus," by Liszt, was warmly appreciated. The room was well filled.

A CONCERT was given on the 27th May, at the British School Room, Allen Street, Kensington, by Mr. M. R. Lochner. Hummel's trio in F was performed by Mr. Viotti Collins (violin), Mr. Walter Pettit (violoncello), and the concert-giver (pianoforte), and solos were also contributed by each of the above-named gentlemen, Mr. Lochner playing an Impromptu of Schubert's, and Robert Schumann's Novelette in F. The vocalists were Madame Florence Lancia, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Pearson, and Mr. George Fox, all of whom were highly successful. Mr. E. M. Lott and Mr. M. R. Lochner acted as conductors.

WE understand that the Committee of the forthcoming Leeds Musical Festival has decided that the following works, selections, and pieces, shall be performed, subject, of course, to the approval of the conductor, Sir Michael Costa: "St. Paul," selections from "Israel in Egypt," "Hymn of Praise," "St. John the Baptist," "Stabat Mater," the "Messiah," Overture "Euryanthe," Symphony "Jupiter," Overtures "Masaniello," Bennett's "Paradise and the Peri," Overture "La Gazza Ladra," "Funeral March of a Marionette," March and Chorus "Tannhäuser," Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony," Cantata "Bride of Dunkerron," Overture "di Ballo," Overture "Merry Wives of Windsor," and Overture "William Tell." Rapid progress is being made in the selection of vocalists and band; and there appears every prospect of the Festival being in all respects a complete success.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS'S evening concert, given on the 23rd ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms, attracted a large and fashionable audience. The programme, as usual, contained some excellent specimens of Welsh music, all of which were highly appreciated. The encores were numerous, the concert-giver's songs "Anita" (Mr. E. Lloyd) and the "Harper's Grave" (Miss Edith Wynne), as well as his spirited and characteristic chorus, "Let the hills resound," being re-demanded, with an unanimity which must have been highly gratifying to the composer. Besides the vocalists already mentioned, Miss Mary Davies and Madame Patey contributed songs with much success, and the choral music was admirably sung by Signor Randegger's choir. Mr. Richards's solos were a Study by Moscheles, a Lied by Mendelssohn, and two pieces of his own, the latter of which—an elegant Scherzo, called "The Birds and the Rivulet"—was encored. He also took part in Mendelssohn's "Andante con variazioni," for pianoforte and violoncello, in which he was ably assisted by Signor Pezze. The concert, which was conducted by Signor Randegger, was in every respect a decided success.

NOVELLO, EWER AND Co.

"The Lord is my Shepherd." An Anthem composed by the Rev. John B. Dykes, M.A., Mus. D.

THIS is a setting of the whole of the 23rd Psalm, which differs from other meritorious musical renderings of the same text, in respect of its far greater length and more elaborate structure. It is not equal to many other productions of the same talented author. It is of extraordinary length for Church purposes, and on this account should possess extraordinary interest. The first movement, Larghetto, is for the full choir. There follows a tenor solo in a different measure, "He shall feed me in a green pasture," at the end of which there is a happy recurrence of the opening words for the chorus, with the musical phrase to which they before were set. This and the preceding movement are in F, and we have then a bass solo, which begins in F minor and ends in A flat, "Yea, though I walk through the valley." The constant motion of the inner parts, which marks all these three sections of the work, gives them great uniformity of character, and this makes them somewhat tedious in effect. Next comes a quintett, interspersed with phrases for the chorus, "Thou shalt prepare a table," in the strangely extraneous key of E, which is by far the best piece of writing in the whole. A charming melody prevails throughout, the harmonies are refined, but not far-fetched, and the effect will be most pleasing. The opening, and several interludial passages for the organ, are founded on an ancient Eucharistic melody, "Adoro te devote," as illustrative of the words, but there is little skill in its development. Lastly, we have a chorus, "But Thy loving-kindness," in the key of F: the transition to which from the foregoing is violent, and has no warrant in the words. The movement is long and laboured. A fugue, so to speak, begins on the words, "And I will dwell;" but the subject of this is wrongly answered. Beginning on C, the dominant of the key, the answer should of course enter on F, the tonic, and proceed by a 2nd to E, in response to the 3rd, C A, of the subject; but it starts upon G, which is quite away from the tonality. This necessitates a modulation into G major, to introduce the second answer in the bass part, which key is quite irrelevant. The further conduct of the fugue is unskilful, and this is not the only sign of want of artistry in the course of the Anthem—for instance, the false relation between the E of the alto and the E flat of the bass (page 3, score 2, bar 2); the sounding of E, in a chord of the dominant 7th upon C, while the voice has D E (page 8, score 1, bar 1); the repetition of high notes for the tenor voice, such as the G on “righteousness” (page 8, score 5, bar 4); the generally low writing for the bass solo in the 3rd movement, and the progression D E in the bass, against the D F E in the top part, where the intervals 8, 9, 8, have a far worse effect than two 8ths in consecution. The deserved high esteem in which the author is held, exacts a minuter examination of his work than it would be necessary to make of the production of a less distinguished writer, and it must unfortunately be owned that the evidence of his musicianship does not rise with the importance of the task he undertakes. A successful hymn may come from natural talent, by what is called inspiration; but the design and, far more, the execution of an extensive and complicated composition, can only come from talent developed by sheer study, and this is scarcely compatible with the pursuit of music as a relaxation from another profession.

“This is the Day.” Full Anthem for Four Voices. By William Crowther Alwyn.

THIS was composed for the Church of St. Alban's, Holborn, and performed there, with full orchestra, on Easter-day, 1872. It is most apt for the occasion: glad in expression, concise in extent, well-arranged for the voices (if we except an A, which is above the reach of the average of boys), and brilliant in effect. The adaptation for the organ of the instrumental parts is more florid than is common in English Church Music, but is well suited to the means at command. There can be no reason why the almost limitless capabilities of the modern organ should not be applied as much to the uses of the English Church as of the Roman; were this judiciously done, in music to which florid effects were natural, there would be great access of life in our ecclesiastical performances, and the present is a capital example of the good account to which the ornamental form of instrumental accompaniment may be turned.

Cor Jesu, Salus in Te Sperantium. Motett for three equal voices, Solo and Chorus with Organ and Harp accompaniment. Composed by Wilhelm Schulthes.

THIS is a simple, smooth, melodious setting of the hymn which last year's Pilgrimage brought prominently into notice. The harmony is in keeping with the principal melody, having a slight savour of the chromatic; just enough to give it the sentimental air which marks much of the music of the Roman Church. The music is repeated for a second verse, and then comes a Gloria Patri, which maintains the character of the foregoing in entirely different matter. By “equal,” the author means to signify ladies' voices of unequal compass—one part ranging moderately high, another decidedly low. There are some pretty effects from the alternation of phrases for three solo singers, with others for the full choir; and there are also effects from the combination of the harp with the organ, that are certain of pleasing. It is desirable, when any portions of the score are distinguishable in quality of tone from the others, that they should make, if not complete, at least satisfactory harmony in themselves; and this is not always the case with the parts for the voices, when separated from the accompaniment: the weakness—not to say fault—is avoided in an arrangement of the same music for two female and two male voices, when the bass vocal part fills up far more sufficiently than can the organ, the blanks of the other three. Yet a third arrangement of the piece assigns the chief melody to voices in unison, reserving the harmony for the organ accompaniment, when, of course, the subject of complaint cannot appear. The hymn is set for the Religious of the Sacred Heart, at Roehampton; but its acceptance is likely to extend far beyond the limits of that one pious institution.

Twelve Latin Hymns, for Vespers and Complin. With Organ Accompaniment, by Wilhelm Schulthes, Op. 8r.

THESE are set in a style that is greatly liked by English members of the Roman Communion, and much in use in their places of devotion. The melodies are graceful, easy, and decidedly pleasing; and the harmonies are for the most part natural, and as far from commonplace as from over-elaboration. In this latter respect of harmony, however, the collection is not immaculate, if we may regard as stains upon its purity the two fifths between the top and bottom notes of the organ-part, in bar 3 from the beginning of No. 1, and those other two, in bar 3 from the end of the same hymn, where the second 5th is disguised to the eye—though certainly not to the ear—by the notes being named B natural above F flat, and thus apparently constituting an interval for which musicians have no title. The superficial merit of the music ought to ensure its wide acceptance; how seriously does it behove a composer then, who is likely to have many hearers, not to corrupt their taste by familiarising them with such irregularities—and this a composer, too, whose title-page tells him to have had the experience of eighty previously-printed works.

An Introduction and Six Variations on the Russian National Melody. Composed for the Organ by C. G. Verrinder.

FORTY years ago and four, the Czar Nicholas commanded the disuse of our English tune, “God save the King,” which for some eighty or ninety years before 1830 had been the National Hymn of Russia; and he ordered the adoption, in its place, of a melody composed by Alexis Lwoff, a colonel in the Imperial army, and a native of Revel, in Esthonia, who was born in 1799. No music is more strongly marked in character than the national songs of Muscovy, and no better proof than these can be needed of the indigenous musicianship of northern nations; but none of this character invigorates the tune of Colonel Lwoff, which, with its modulation into the keys of the 3rd and the 6th, and the intervening return to the original tonic, can never become an air of the people; or, if it ever did so, it would be more naturally adopted by southerners, who lazily melodize with such thoughtless fluency, that they can neither remember the tunes of a past generation, nor stamp those of the present with permanence—more naturally by them, than to the hardy denizens of the north, whose every production carries its individual mark. This gentle, in some sort refined, and in many respects amateurish, melody, has come into large notice of late, in consequence of the new relationship between this country and Russia. We need not wonder then that musicians exercise their ingenuity and their scholarship upon its arrangement; and while we wonder not, let us not in all cases be compelled to admire. In the piece before us, the tokens of painstaking cannot be questioned; but, to take pains is not always to give pleasure. The short-sighted harmonies that abound in the Introduction bespeak consideration of the sound of a single chord, regardless of its effect in relation to the context; and some of the changes of key betray a like circumscription of judgment. The first three Variations exact no remark. The 4th, inscribed “Fughetta,” has the subject in canon between the tenor and treble parts, with occasional points of free imitation in the others; while from the 11th bar to the end the pedals have the entire theme by augmentation. It cannot justly be called skilful to employ such technical devices as these unskilfully; but so indeed are they applied, we regret to say, in the present instance. Witness, the frequent poverty of the harmony; some undesirable progressions of parts (the consecutive 4ths, $\begin{smallmatrix} E & D \\ B & A \end{smallmatrix}$ with the bass, for instance, between bars 8 and 7 from the end) and the general dulness of the effect. The copious Finale displays the theme under a different fugal aspect; then presents it in a new key with harmony of note against note; and lastly, amplifies it to a considerable extent. Alas, that so much trouble should have been spent to so

The musical score is written for voice and piano. It consists of two systems of staves. The first system has three vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The second system has three vocal staves and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are written below the vocal staves. The piano part is written in the lower staves of each system. The score includes various musical notations such as treble and bass clefs, key signatures (one sharp), time signatures, and dynamic markings (cres., dim., p, pp, f, mf, a tempo).

The lyrics for the first system are:

little purpose! In the canonic variation (No. 4) the lines from note to note clearly distinguish the several parts when they cross each other; but nothing can make clear in sound the progression of parts that are greatly entangled, and such clearness is necessary to the realisation of the composer's design. It is a great mistake of organ-players—and organ-writers are prone to the same error—to put down as many notes belonging to the harmony as can be touched at once, thickening thus the effect, it is true, but clouding the part-writing.

Prelude and Fugue in D minor, for the Organ, by G. F. Hatton.

A CLASS of music is often written for the organ, which would be accounted dry were it assigned to any other means of exposition to an audience, but which has considerable interest from the variety of effects it yields, by reason of the diversity of its passages and the different quality of the stops employed for it. To this class, the present piece belongs; were the same amount of matter put into a pianoforte sonata, a string quartet, or an orchestral symphony, one might feel that it wanted subject and was deficient in melody; but, the character of the ideas and their distinction are such as we frequently meet in organ music, and the work is to be judged as that for which it is intended, not by any other standard. The prelude, Andante con moto, reaches to half the length of the work, which the fugue, moderato, completes in 11 pages. In the former, the twice recurrence of the key of A minor might have been avoided with advantage, and almost any other key employed in preference to one that had already been exhausted. The fugue is fluently worked. The piece was composed for the pianoforte, and it has been most effectively adapted for the organ by Mr. W. T. Best, who gives thus a testimonial to its merit. It will be well worth the study of any one who is devoted to the instrument, and who wishes for practice in all its resources. The author is the son of the well-known Mr. J. L. Hatton, whose just fame is an inheritance of which any young musician may be proud. He may be congratulated on the importance of this early essay of his powers and on its success; let us trust that the best works of his father will be his constant emulation.

Pensées Intimes, pour le Pianoforte. Par Jacques Blumenthal.

THE composer of these clever little sketches has, judiciously we think, not invited too elaborate criticism by giving fantastic titles to each, but has contented himself with merely numbering them, leaving the pieces to speak for themselves. If therefore a "poetic basis" is necessary for the true appreciation of music, it must in this case be supplied by the listener; and as we have heard one of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte" called by one person a "Drinking Song," and by another a "Funeral March," we can imagine that there will be a variety of opinions upon the real meaning of each. No. 1, in A flat, although melodious and well written, is scarcely perhaps equal to its companions either in the originality of the theme or its treatment. The phrase, in the relative minor, is uninteresting; and we care not for the progression of dominant sevenths, with the chromatic inner part, which occurs twice, as if the composer liked it. No. 2 has an excellent subject, with a characteristic accompaniment. Here, too, we have contrast, the syncopated bass before the return to the original melody, being an agreeable change from the prevailing flow of semiquavers. No. 3 may also be commended for many good points; but the composer improves as he progresses. No. 4, an Adagio, in G minor, with an accompaniment syncopated almost throughout, is extremely beautiful, a Song "without words," indeed, but so eloquent as to invite the hearers to supply them. A good effect is gained, after the pause on the dominant harmony, by the concluding phrase, marked "Lento assai," which ends in the tonic major. No. 5 will unquestionably be the favourite, and is good enough, we think, to be published separately. A melodious subject singing at the top of a triplet accompaniment for the right hand, with a simple bass, runs throughout the piece; but the harmonies are so cleverly varied as to prevent any sense of monotony. We particularly admire the manner in which the gradual progression to the dominant seventh, for the return to the opening theme, is managed; and may also cite the last few bars of the coda as a most effective point. No. 6, in A major, has a light and playful subject, which is well contrasted with a legato melody, accompanied with arpeggios, divided between the two hands. Occasional changes in the character, and even in the tempo, give much variety to this piece, which makes a fitting termination to the series. We are glad to find a composer of Herr Blumenthal's reputation daring to be as simple and unpretentious in a work marked "Op. 83."

CRAMER, WOOD AND CO.

Minuet in G minor.

O let me dream that dream again. Song. Words by Mrs. M. A. Baines.

Fallen Rain. Song. Words by R. W. Dixon.

Composed by William Metcalfe.

EXPERIENCE in critically examining a large number of modern musical compositions proves to us that the great difficulty with writers is to combine the inventive power with grammatical accuracy; for, as a rule, composers either give us an attractive melody feebly accompanied, or parade their knowledge of the resources of harmony to cover a weak melody. Mr. Metcalfe, although belonging to the latter of these divisions, shows so much musical feeling that we select his pieces for notice, believing that he is sufficiently in earnest to profit by kindly-meant advice. His Minuet starts with a melody which inspires us with hope; but as he proceeds the passing notes and chromatic progressions accumulate to such an extent that the theme is almost overwhelmed. The major subject would be highly effective if it could be allowed to assert itself; but here again the harmony becomes an encumbrance, and in the return to the minor it is even more complicated. We may also mention that the difficulties to amateurs will be increased by the omission of accidentals—as, for instance, the natural before the E, in the melody of bar 7—for it can scarcely be expected that persons unacquainted with the chords can supply these by ear. The first song on our list contains many good points, but the fatal habit of harmonizing every note distresses the singer, and in many parts of this composition thickens the melody to an extent which will materially interfere with its effect upon the listener. "Fallen Rain" is a very much better song. The accompaniment here forms an integral portion of the piece, and no patches of harmony interfere with the onward march of the subject. The song shows that Mr. Metcalfe can do better things if he can learn to reserve his power: we know that this is a difficult task, but a study of literature, as well as music, will prove that the great authors are those who indicate their knowledge, and the small ones those who display it.

Grand March, "Crusader," by Charles W. Smith.

THIS March, by the Pianist to Mr. and Mrs. German Reed, is well-written throughout; but what it has to do with a "Crusader" we cannot imagine; certainly the title would lead us to expect something at least with more character. The subject is scarcely bold and striking enough for a March; but it is harmonized with care and contains no perplexing difficulties. We prefer the theme in the subdominant, and a good effect is gained on the return to the original key by the alteration in the accompaniment to the melody. We perceive that this piece is also published for an orchestra.

C. JEFFERYS.

Bourrée in F.—Gavotte in B flat.—Bolero in A minor.—Tarantelle in B flat.—Polonaise in C.—Passepied in B flat.
Composed by Michael Watson.

ALTHOUGH we are much inclined to favour the revival of those forms of composition into which the classical authors threw their genius, it must always be recollected that they wrote in the language of their day, and there is a danger therefore of modern composers—like modern dramatic writers, who take the Elizabethan plays for a model—producing works, the chief merit of which is that they reflect with extreme fidelity the ideas and fashions of an age which has passed away. If Bourrées, Gavottes, Passepiéds, and other such graceful antiquities, however, are to be resuscitated, we think Mr. Watson's group of compositions entitled to much attention, both from teachers and performers; for they are all extremely melodious, well-written, and thoroughly characteristic. The Bourrée and Gavotte are good musician-like pieces; and the Passepiéd has a subject which cannot fail to recommend itself, from its excessive tunefulness: the theme in the relative minor contrasts well with the opening melody, and the entire composition is full of life. Of the Bolero, Tarantelle, and Polonaise, we can also speak in high terms. All these National dance-tunes have been so often, and so successfully treated by some of our best composers, that it is difficult of course to write anything new; but Mr. Watson deserves much credit for the clearness with which he has expressed his ideas, and we can conscientiously say that for tuition his pieces will be highly valuable.

LAMBORN COCK.

"O Deus! ego amo te" (O God! my spirit loves but Thee.) Motett for a Choir, composed by J. G. Callcott.

THIS piece is dedicated to Mr. Henry Leslie, of whose choir the composer is the highly efficient accompanist. It is matter for surprise that one who has such experience in vocal effects as Mr. Callcott must have in attending the constant practices of that well-trained company of singers, should have so little judgment in vocal distribution as his motett evinces: let us instance the writing for the basses, which is often far lower than the majority of singers can render audible, descending more than once to the lowest D. There is an air of dryness, of labour and of pretence about the whole. The adapter of the English version, Mr. F. Xavier, has made an unlucky choice of the word "ignominious" for vocal use: the vocabulary for which is more circumscribed than for ordinary speech, and cannot admit certain formal terms, and others that are common-place; his repetition also of "for me the cruel," before the word "nails," jeopardizes the sense, and has an inkling of the ludicrous in its effect.

THOMAS MURBY.

Lessons and Exercises in Singing at Sight. By E. W. Searle, Teacher of Singing at the Working Men's College, London.

So thoroughly has it now become the custom to ignore the necessity of teaching the absolute sounds of a scale to class-singers, that Instruction-books are constantly published with exercises, and even part-music, written in the present notation, without any sharps and flats at the signature, the key-note being secretly given to the teacher at the commencement of the piece. The little Treatise before us is moulded on this plan; and, strange indeed does it look to see the triads of E, B, and A (without sharps or flats) marked "Doh chord, Soh chord, and Fah chord." Such a cross between two systems as this can scarcely we think receive the approbation of musicians. We can quite understand the "fixed Do" method—where the absolute sound to be sung is written—and we can equally comprehend the "moveable Do" method—where the relative sound is written—but to see one sound and sing another is a compromise which can hardly be allowed, even if it offer a tempting facility to those who are content to sing as parrots speak. Mr. Searle is, however, evidently in earnest; for his instructions show the result of much thought, and he has no doubt had practical experience of the result of his method. His Exercises are well fitted for their purpose, and the Duets and Rounds are simple and tuneful. But what can he mean by calling 6-8, 6-4, and 12-8 rhythms triple? Surely a compound triple rhythm cannot be derived from a simple double one. But we are still more surprised when we find that in Example 102 the student is told (in 6-8 rhythm) to beat "two in a bar:" can two be beaten in "Triple rhythm?"

R. LIMPUS.

Childish Fancies. Twenty short Pieces, in various keys, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Charlton Templeman Speer, æt. 13.

WE have no hesitation in saying that, for a boy of 13, this is a very remarkable collection of Sketches. There is certainly nothing very startling in any one of the twenty Pieces; but they show a clearness of design, and an individuality of thought which promise well for the future; and not their least recommendation is that they evidently spring from a musical organization which is developing itself in a healthful and natural manner. The only little bit of affectation—if we may call it so—is that in the pieces written 4-8 and 2-4 there is no perceptible difference of rhythm, and therefore we cannot be made to see why 2-4 would not do for all of them. From the various numbers we may select for special commendation No. 3, "A Vintager's Chorus"—No. 5, "A Hunting Song"—No. 8, "Volkslied"—No. 9, "Alla Marcia" (a very original little Piece, in F sharp minor)—No. 11, "Rippling Water"—No. 16, "A Spring Song"—No. 18, "Gigue," and No. 20, "Caprice" (the last a composition of more than the average length) but we may say that there is really not a common-place thought throughout the book. We presume that at bar 16, page 39, a note is omitted in the Bass—probably B—for we can scarcely imagine that the single F is intended. As the composer of these "Childish Fancies" was recently elected to the "Sterndale Bennett Scholarship" at the Royal Academy of Music, he will have every chance of steadily progressing in an art of which—if he be not spoilt by indiscriminate praise—he is no doubt destined to become a bright ornament.

JOSEPH MASTERS.

The Canticles, set to short Chants. By Frederick Helmore.

A NEW form of Chant is here employed, of which we fail to perceive the musical beauty or the practical advantage. It consists of but two, instead of the ordinary three bars, in the first part; and of but three, instead of the ordinary four bars, in the second part. This increases the inevitable monotony that springs from the manifold repetition of any form of chant, and it prevents the possibility of melodic interest, which cannot be conveyed within so small limits. The author or editor has taken the liberty of compressing the favourite Chant in C by Humphrey, within the Venetian boot of his circumscribed limits, and has thus squeezed all the life out of it, and all the beauty; and he coolly prefaces the mangled remains with the words, "From the Grand Chant," which are vague and offer no excuse. The mutilation becomes less "grand," certainly, if not less Humphrey, by being transposed into B flat. In No. 2, the 7th from A remains to be the 8th from G with excellently bad effect. In No. 4, we dislike the sound of the bare 4th—a second inversion without the interval of the 6th. The descent of the leading-note in the final cadence is common if not universal in the series. Many such points as these might be cited, but that the nature of the publication would not warrant the cost of space. There is nothing ecclesiastical in the style of the harmony, which has all the freedom, but little of the beauty of the modern school. The work may gratify the fancies of a particular clique of churchmen, but it can be of no serious service.

WEEKES AND CO.

The Voice of the Waves. Words by Mrs. Hemans. Music by A. Godwin Fowles.

WE feel convinced that the author of this "descriptive song" imagines that he has written a really good composition, for there is so little timidity in the manner of approaching his subject, and so decisive a method of throwing off his harmonies that consciousness of power is apparent throughout. But "consciousness of power" does not always prove the possession of it; and in this case we cannot but believe that the song has been sung at the pianoforte and noted down in fragments, so strangely does it hang together when criticised as a whole. Commencing with a commonplace recitative in B minor, we are launched at once into a melody which, in the course of eight bars, is in D major, G minor, B♭ major and back again in D major, conveying a restless feeling by no means in sympathy with the words. The harmonies are crude, but the mode of noting them still more so: for instance, the modulation from B♭ to D is made by means of A♯, E♯, D♯, G♯, a chord which we should be frightened to attempt to figure. Does not Mr. Fowles know that this should be B♭, D♯, F♯, G♯, and that is nothing else but what is commonly called the "German sixth," a simple method of effecting this modulation which has been used for years by theorists in every country. The best part of the song is where the moving accompaniment of quavers occurs, on the 4th page; but the whole piece shows that composing music and making music are by no means the same thing.

BERTINI, SEYMOUR AND Co.

I Pifferari, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Walter Spinney.

MR. SPINNEY has given us a tuneful, but not particularly original, theme in B minor, which we think would have been better written in its true time—12-8. The second subject is good; but the feeble sequence of sixths somewhat mars its effect. The fingering is so profuse that the merest tyro cannot go wrong; but even experienced players will be puzzled to know how a slur extending over four bars is to be reconciled with the direction "Allegro staccato." The composer would do well to re-consider this matter should his piece reach a second edition; and we may also mention that the eye would be less distressed if the leading fingers only were printed.

WILLIAM H. BONER AND Co., PHILADELPHIA.

Grand Chant Te Deum, in C, compiled from authentic sources, by F. H. Hodges.

THERE is one plausible reason for singing the Te Deum to a chant, namely, that an ordinarily dull congregation may learn its top melody by heart from manifold repetition, and so be enabled, before the conclusion of the canticle, to take part in the performance. This reason is superseded in the arrangement before us, for it comprises eight changes of chant, so that the people will no sooner get one tune into their heads than it gives place to another; and these changes are sometimes divided by an organ interlude of the length of a bar or more, so that the unschooled singers will not know where to sing and where to cease. The text is unfit for chanting, of which there is quite sufficient as applied to the daily Psalms; and we deprecate therefore any appropriation of this canticle to the chant form. There is a pleasant relief in a solo passage in triple measure, to the words, "When Thou tookest," &c.; but what is to become of congregational singing while this goes forward? A bad instance of false relation occurs in this solo, where A natural in the bass follows a chord of F minor. In the chant applied to "The glorious company," &c., we object to the reciting note of one strain and the closing note of another being a discord. Otherwise, the compilation is technically correct.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DOUBLED AIR.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Conscious that I have had my say and ought to trouble you no more on this subject, I would yet beg to be allowed a few words of rejoinder to your correspondent, Mr. Vincent. This gentleman has at last discovered a tune that will not bear the double air without "injury to the music." Now, one defective link will render a whole chain worse than worthless; and one little leak may sink the stateliest ship. So, in admitting that out of four tunes he has examined, one can never be sung without danger of injury from the double air, your correspondent virtually concedes the whole argument I have advanced.

But then, as Mr. Vincent shows, there is a dilemma. He says, and he says again, that "those who cannot abide the double air . . . ought never to use a stop like the double diapason," since the last named doubles all the parts. Here I may say that I do not think many organists care to use the 16ft. manuals, except for solo-playing; but I cannot thus escape the difficulty. Rarely is an organ sounded without 8ft. and 4ft. stops being used together, and thus is universally perpetrated the offence (if such it be) of doubling all parts. Many a juvenile contrapuntist has been sorely puzzled by this; and I can imagine such a one saying to his teacher, "You strictly enjoin me that I must employ no consecutive 5ths or 8ths; that I must not sound the major 9th below the 3rd, and ever such a lot more; yet, before you have sat down for five minutes at your organ you draw out stops that really produce all the progressions and combinations you forbid!" The maestro will probably tell him not to bother his brains with such speculations, but wait till he comes to the study of orchestration. He will then find, that although the rules he has learned are, with good reason, strictly binding when he is writing for voices only, or instruments of one class only; yet, with equally good reason, they permit considerable freedom when voices and instruments of various properties are to be heard together; and that two notes which create the harshest dissonance when clashed together by voices, may nevertheless conduce to an effect quite pleasing when distributed among instruments of differing timbre. A correspondent in your May number explained how different sorts of sound fail to render the best written harmony in a manner satisfactory to the ear. He might have added that they equally fail to make the worst dissonances keenly felt. To prove this point, let the tune 331, "Hymns Ancient and Modern" (which will not bear the double air sung), be correctly played upon 8ft. and 4ft. stops coupled and in tune. All the parts will then undoubtedly be doubled in the instrument; and yet the hearer will experience no unpleasant effect; the organ-builder having carefully imparted sufficiently different properties to all such stops, each of which is really a distinct instrument.

It is a fallacy then to argue that because the organ doubles all the parts, therefore the voices may do the same. Otherwise we might infer the desirability of introducing a number of voices, giving vent to a plurality of sounds—5ths, 8ths, 10ths, 12ths, 15ths, &c., above the written notes, simply because certain stops in the organ produce all these parts. This, of course, is the height of absurdity; but it is only the logical outcome of the fallacy I have herein endeavoured to refute.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. CONWAY BROWN.

Aldershot, June 16, 1874.

P.S.—I should like to know under what circumstances a double air "shows to great advantage in the 7th line, 332, "H. A. & M." It would certainly produce very bad harmony with the alto part. Supposing the latter, however, to have been sung by female voices (like Annie Laurie's) "low and sweet" and the double air to have been rather "robust," there would have been sufficient difference of quality to conceal the faults. I have known such to be the case in the last line of tune 24, "H. A. & M.," where the double air proceeds in 5ths with the alto.

SOLMIZATION OF THE MINOR SCALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Although I cannot, at the present moment, bring forward any statistics to my support, I think I may safely inform Mr. Gill that the great majority of authors of elementary works on Sol-fa-ing, with the moveable Do from the established Notation and most practical teachers adopt La as the key-note of the Minor Scale. That some theorists have advanced plausible objections to this plan I am aware, but I have never yet seen any of sufficient force to shake my faith in its great practical superiority. All that it is really necessary for young pupils to know is, that under some circumstances, the La occurs so often, and so prominently, that it has much of the usual effect of Do, and they will then be able to sing at sight as well in the Minor as in the Major mode. The chromatic scale, with sharpened sounds, may be conveniently Sol-fa'd with these names (ascending) do, di, re, ri, mi, fa, fi, so, si, la, li, ti, do; and with flattened sounds (descending) do, ti, tu, la, lu, so, su, fa, mi, mu, re, ru, do, pronouncing the vowels as in Italian. The Minor Scale might thus be Sol-fa'd (in ascending) do, re, mu, fa, so, la, ti, do; and (descending) do, tu, lu, so, fa, mu, re, do; but, in practice, the following names would prove much less puzzling (ascending) la, ti, do, re, mi, fi, si, la; and (descending) la, so, fa, mi, re, do, ti, la.

In the Tonic-Sol-fa Reporter for July 15th, 1870, there is a very able and exhaustive paper on this subject, which is worth the perusal of all "moveable do-ists."

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

A. ORLANDO STEED.

Long Melford, June 13th, 1874.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Your correspondent, Mr. W. H. Gill, cannot, I think, have gone very far into the principle of the Moveable Do system, or he would not ask the question he does in regard to Sol-fa'ing the Minor Scale from the ordinary notation. As a staunch upholder of the "Moveable Do" method, I fail to see the slightest difficulty. The Major Tonic being always "Do," it follows very clearly that the Minor Tonic cannot be any other than La, that Tonic being a Minor 3rd below its relative Major. I will call it, if you like, a Moveable La. Mr. Gill is of course aware that music, in the Minor mode, bears the signature of the Major. Just one example. Take a piece of music in E minor, the signature would imply G major; then G being "Do," the Minor Tonic, E, becomes La, and this principle is identical throughout. Can anything be clearer? Any teacher attempting any other modus operandi will sooner or later come to grief. I do not think I need further trespass upon your space; if, however, the subject requires more elucidation, I shall be pleased at any future time to give it, if desired.

Yours truly,

ORPHEUS.

MR. CLAY'S TREATISE ON HARMONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—In your paper for June there is a review on my Treatise on Harmony, which has recently been published, and whilst I am obliged to the gentleman for his remarks, I regret to say I think he has been too hasty in his perusal of the work; consequently, he has committed two or three errors, which I should be sorry to allow to pass unnoticed, and which therefore I hope you will afford me the opportunity, through the same medium, of correcting.

In the first place, in speaking of "Common Chords," and referring to my remarks thereon in Chapter I., he appears to forget that the prelude to that chapter is that "we shall now consider the Major mode;" hence he is oblivious to the fact that what is said there (and indeed in Chapters I. to IX.) refers exclusively to the Major mode. He refers to the Example where I have placed a 3rd and 5th over each degree in the Scale of C, and where it is said "although all these appear to the eye, at first sight, to be Common Chords, there will be found, upon examination, to be but three Major Common Chords, according to the foregoing definition, and these are marked with a *; all the others having Minor 3rds are not the chords we speak of now;" and he says, "if the others are not Common Chords, what are they?" Now, I didn't say they were not Common Chords; I said "they are not the chords we speak of now," i.e. Major Common Chords.

It was not my purpose to refer to the Minor mode, until I had explained so much of the Major as would lead me to point out where, by Modulation, &c.; the two modes were often intermingled: hence, in Chapter X., the Minor Mode is treated on in a similar manner to the Major in Chapter I., and I considered I was studying "logical arrangement" in so doing.

He further states, "if we understand Mr. Clay rightly, the student is to believe that whenever he uses a Minor Common Chord, he is in a Minor Key." Now, I may not exactly comprehend what he means, but I presume he will agree that Minor Chords belong to the Minor Mode, and if found in music written in a Major Key, it results simply from the frequent intermingling of one mode with another.

Again, after speaking of the Diminished 7th, my reviewer says "in the next chapter" (which would be Chapter XV.) "the Chord of the Added 6th—with the Subdominant given as its root—creeps in without the slightest explanation." Now he is in error here: because the Added 6th is first mentioned in Chapter IX., p. 35, and it appears he does not discover it till Chapter XV.

Again, speaking of the Augmented 6th, he says, he is led, from my remarks, to imply, that it is not a "Chromatic Chord;" whereas, in Chapter XIX., where it is first introduced, I say, "this will be more fully explained hereafter" (see "Chromatic Chords," Chapter XXI.), and the explanation is there given at p. 84.

Apologizing for trespassing on your valuable space to such a length,

I am, Sir, your obliged servant,

SAMUEL J. CLAY.

Stalbridge, Dorset, June 12th, 1874.

[We have printed Mr. Clay's letter precisely as we received it. In the first place, if the assertion that a Common Chord "consists of a note, its Major 3rd and Perfect 5th," does not mean that a note with its Minor 3rd and Perfect 5th is not a Common Chord, we think that some such supplementary information as the author has furnished us with is positively called for. In the second place, we say that, according to the book, the student is taught to believe that whenever he writes a Minor Common Chord, he is in a Minor Key; and it appears to us that when Mr. Clay talks of the "frequent intermingling of one mode with another," he merely confirms our statement. In the third place, he complains of our saying that in Chapter XV. the Chord of the Added 6th "creeps in without the slightest explanation," and tells us that it is first mentioned in Chapter IX. We knew that before: he there says, that in Example H, "the 5th and 6th in the Subdominant Chord are struck together," and that this combination "is called the Chord of the Added 6th;" if this is an "explanation," we are wrong in saying that it is not explained. Lastly, we could not imagine that a Chromatic Chord would be named and resolved two chapters before the meaning of Chromatic Chords is given; but if this is Mr. Clay's arrangement of his book, he is perfectly justified in telling us so. We can scarcely expect an author to agree with any review which does not contain unqualified praise; but whether we have, in this instance, "committed two or three errors"—as we are accused of having done—our readers may judge for themselves.—THE WRITER OF THE REVIEW.]

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

AYLESBURY.—The Church Choral Association celebrated its eighteenth anniversary on Thursday the 11th ult., the members mustering in the morning in the Parish Church, which, as on former occasions, had been tastefully and elaborately decorated. Being the festival of St. Barnabas, the day commenced with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 a.m. The service was preceded by a procession of the clergy and surpliced choristers, singing a processional hymn, each choir following its respective parochial banner. The service was intoned by the Rev. Percival S. Ward, senior curate of Aylesbury. The special features in this year's festival were the cathedral form of intonation of service; a new plan of singing in procession, half only singing at a time, thereby securing greater accuracy and the use of a recessional hymn, sung as the choirs left the church, in addition to the processional one as they entered it. The singing of the choirs was excellent, and Mr. Bateman, the choir-master and organist of St. Mary's, Aylesbury, deserves the greatest credit, both for his training of the various choirs, and his skilful management of such a large body of voices. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton. The afternoon service was also held in St. Mary's. The same plan of intonation was adopted, and the choral portions of the service were as well rendered as those in the morning. The collections in aid of the Association funds, morning and afternoon inclusive, amounted to £18 11s. 10d.

BEDFORD.—The second concert of the season of the Amateur Musical Society took place at the New Corn Exchange on the 16th ult., when an extremely good performance of Mendelssohn's First Walpurgis night was given. The solos were well rendered by Mr. Stedman and Mr. Wadmore. The choir, consisting of about 200 voices, sang in a most effective manner; and the band, assisted by Messrs. T. Watson, T. Carrington, J. Zerbin, sen., Quenton, and A. Collins, ably sustained the accompaniments. In the second part of the concert the most noticeable numbers were the chorus, "Oh! the flow'ry month of June" (William Jackson); quartet, "Austrian Hymn" (Haydn); played by Messrs. T. Watson, Carrington, Zerbin, and Quenton; barcarole, "Sulla poppa" (Ricci), by Mr. Wadmore, and a very effective part-song, "Spring," by Mr. P. H. Diemer, the conductor of the Society.

BOLTON.—A deputation from the Philharmonic Society waited upon Mr. Walch on the 9th ult., for the purpose of presenting him with an excellent oil painting of himself, executed by Mr. D. Winder, of this town, also a beautiful silver-mounted ebony bâton, as a memento of the Society's appreciation of his services as conductor for several years. In the unavoidable absence of J. R. Bridson, Esq., President of the Society, Mr. Briscoe made the formal presentation, and assured Mr. Walch that the warmest feelings were entertained for him throughout the Society, and the ready and general manner in which the members had subscribed these testimonials were proof of this. Mr. Walch, in accepting the portrait and bâton, wished the deputation to convey his best thanks to the members for their very handsome presents. He should ever remember with pleasure his connection with the Society, and wished it prosperity. He also hoped the new conductor might have united and hearty support, both from the members and the public.

BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND.—Madame Mallalieu's annual benefit concert took place at the School of Arts on Monday, 10th March, and was a great success. Rossini's Overture to Elizabetta and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" were brilliantly played by a full orchestra. Several vocal and instrumental solos and duets and some glees were well rendered. The bénéficiaire performed two pianoforte solos, Chopin's "Polonaise" (Op. 3) evoking special applause. Mr. R. T. Jefferies acted as conductor during the evening.

DEVIZES.—The Choral Society gave its last concert of the season at the Town Hall on the 4th ult., when an excellent performance of Farmer's Mass in B flat was given, under the direction of Mr. J. T. Abraham, and received with much applause by a highly appreciative audience. The programme also included a quartet from the Woman of Samaria, an "Ave Verum" of Gounod's, Spohr's duet, "Children, pray this love to cherish," and selections from Athalie and the Creation. Messrs. Hills and Shane ably led the band, and Messrs. Ply and Price accompanied.

DONCASTER.—The eleventh annual festival in connection with the Doncaster Church Choral Union took place on Thursday, the 28th May, at the Parish Church. The choirs entered the church singing the processional hymn. At the head was the choir-master, Mr. Eyre, and forming part of the procession were the churchwardens, the clergy of the district, and the preachers of the day. The number of choirs present was 28, and the number of voices they comprised, 478. Of these 228 were trebles, 27 altos, 61 tenors, 72 basses, and 90 females. The surpliced choristers numbered 250, and the unsurpliced 228. The processional hymn was taken from the Appendix to Hymns Ancient and Modern. The prayers were intoned by the precentor, and the lessons were read by the Rev. F. Pigou, the vicar. The chants in the Morning Service were all Gregorian. The anthem after the third collect was sung to the music of Sir F. Ouseley. The hymn before the sermon was set to an ancient melody taken from the Hymnarium Saris-buriense, and harmonised by the precentor. The morning sermon was preached by the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of York. The service in the afternoon commenced at four o'clock. The evening prayers were intoned by the Rev. H. F. Sheppard, and the lessons read by the Rev. W. A. Gray, vicar of Arksey. The evening Psalms and Canticles were sung to Anglican chants. The anthem for the afternoon, "O, taste and see," was sung to music by Sir John Goss. The preacher was the Rev. Daniel Moore, vicar of Paddington, and Golden Lecturer. The collections amounted to £33 6s. 10d.

GOUROCK.—A concert was given, in aid of the Ladies' Benevolent Society, on Thursday evening, the 4th ult., in the U.P. Church, in presence of a large and appreciative audience. The Rev. D. Macrae presided. The programme was miscellaneous. The duet from Donizetti's Belisario, "Liberi siete addio," by Mr. Methven and Mr. Currie, of Greenock, Sullivan's "Once again" (Mr. Methven), Mozart's "Qui sdegno," Handel's "Honour and arms" (Mr. Currie), and a duet by two young ladies, were rendered very effectively. Mr. Scott gave several solos on the pianoforte, which were much appreciated, and Mr. Lamb and the Rev. Mr. Macrae gave each an excellent reading.

HAGGERSTONE.—On Saint Columba Day (the 9th ult.), a new organ was opened at Saint Columba Church. The instrument contains twenty-six stops, and was built by Allen and Co., Bristol. There were recitals after the services of evensong on the 8th and 9th ult.

LEICESTER.—A performance of the Messiah was given on the 19th ult., in aid of the Indian Famine Relief Fund, under the patronage of the Duke of Rutland, the Mayor and the Members for the Borough and County. The band and chorus were selected from the Philharmonic and New Musical Society, under the direction of Mr. Nicholson. The solos were ably sustained by Madame Helena Walker, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. J. H. Robson, and Mr. Orlando Christian, and the choruses were executed with precision and effect. Mr. H. Farmer led the band, and Mr. Löhr officiated at the harmonium.

LIVERPOOL.—The sixth annual festival of the Liverpool Sunday School Union took place in St. George's Hall on the 29th May, before an audience which completely crowded the building. The choir was composed of 1000 children, all of whom were tastefully attired in holiday dress, forming a spectacle from the body of the hall which was at once attractive and imposing. Not the least noticeable feature of the festival was the high degree of discipline attained by the children under their conductor, Mr. J. B. Clarke. The programme was selected by Mr. W. T. Best, organist of St. George's Hall, who presided at the organ. The festival was in every way a success. The children were assisted by tenors and basses, all of whom are members of the Union, and most of them teachers in the various schools. Several encores took place during the evening, amongst which was Gounod's "Bethlehem."

MALVERN.—On Thursday evening, the 4th ult., a musical and literary entertainment was given in aid of the Barnard's Green Institute, to a large audience. In the course of the evening many excellent instrumental and vocal pieces were rendered. Mendelssohn's (G minor) Concerto and a selection from Gounod's Faust (both arranged for harmonium and pianoforte), were performed with good effect by Mr. W. D. Wilson and Mr. F. F. Rogers, the latter gentleman officiating as conductor. Mr. Rogers played two pianoforte solos, one a composition of his own, entitled "Marche de Concert," which obtained a hearty encore. The vocalists were Mrs. W. D. Wilson, Miss Sandys, and Mr. J. M. Evans. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. E. R. C. Hays and Mr. J. Hollis, for the excellent arrangements made for the reunion.

MORETONHAMPTSTEAD.—A Dulciana of fifty-six pipes has been added to the organ here, completing the design. The pipes are made of three-quarters pure tin and one quarter lead; all the other metal pipes in the organ being of the same rich composition. This metal is very light, hard, and bright, and produces a better musical tone than any other. The organ is a remarkably beautiful one, and has few equals anywhere. The builder is Banfield, of Birmingham.

NORWICH.—The second invitation concert of the Norfolk and Norwich Musical Union was given in St. Andrew's Hall on the 28th May. The concert commenced with Schubert's Overture Rosamunde, which was well rendered. This was followed by Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Cantata May Day, introduced, we believe, for the first time to a Norwich audience. The performance was highly creditable, Mrs. Banham sustaining the principal soprano part with care and finish. Mr. Arthur E. Bunnett made a successful début as a pianist in two movements, from Mozart's pianoforte Concerto in D minor. Dr. Bunnett's song, "The Dream," was well sung by Mr. H. Minns. A Trio in E flat for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was performed for the first time; also the composition of Dr. Bunnett. The second part of the concert commenced with Mendelssohn's fine setting for male voices of Schiller's Sons of Art, the solo parts being sung by Messrs. H. Minns, H. Thousless, J. R. Dutton, Tompson, and Armes. Dr. Bunnett conducted, Mr. Wilkins led the band, and Mr. Lain presided at the organ.

PETERBOROUGH.—On Tuesday evening, the 2nd ult., a concert of vocal and instrumental music was given by the Choral Society, before a large audience in the Drill Hall. The first part consisted of selections from the Oratorios of Samson and Judas Maccabæus, and the second part of secular music. The principal vocalists were Miss Jessie Jones, R.A.M., and Mr. Jones, Mr. Grundy, and Mr. Swift, of the choir of Peterborough Cathedral. "Let the bright Seraphim" was well and effectively rendered by Miss Jessie Jones, and Mr. Jones was very successful in "Sound an alarm." The choruses in the first part, accompanied by the band, were well sung, as were also several glees in the second part. The overtures to Samson and L'italiana in Algeri were well played by the band. Two ladies (amateurs) took part in the concert, Miss Jackson and Miss Brooksbank, both of whom were very efficient in the music allotted them. Accompaniments on the pianoforte and harmonium were entrusted to Mr. H. R. Löhr, of Leicester, and Mr. Thacker, organist of Thorney Abbey. The Society has only been recently organised, and gives much promise of future excellence.

PHILADELPHIA.—Mr. Richard Hoffman, from New York, has recently been playing here with great success. Mr. Hoffman was loudly encored in both his solos, Chopin's "Andante Spianato," and "Polonaise" in E flat (Op. 22). In the second part Mr. Hoffman played his new "Caprice de Concert" on themes from Mignon, and for the encore his own "Cuban Dance," which created a great sensation, being one of his most popular compositions in America.

PLYMOUTH.—The New Guildhall will be opened during the first week in August by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The pile of buildings, which include the Guildhall, will rank among the finest and most commodious public buildings in the kingdom, and will cost fifty or sixty thousand pounds. The new hall will not only rival the great Birmingham Town Hall but most others in our provincial towns, and will accommodate an audience of probably over three thousand persons. The opening festival will extend over two days, on which occasion the Plymouth Vocal Association will muster a band and chorus of about 360 performers; Elijah will be performed on one day, and the Creation on the next; and there will be also a miscellaneous concert. Mr. F. N. Löhr (who has brought the Vocal Association to such a state of efficiency) will be the conductor, and will have the direction of the musical arrangements. At the opening festival the band will consist of about eighty instrumentalists, including the soloists of the Royal Marine Band, and the principal orchestral players in the neighbourhood. It is anticipated that the inauguration of the Hall will be attended by a brilliant assemblage; and it will, undoubtedly, be the most important and interesting musical gathering that ever occurred in the West of England.

RAUNDS.—On Monday evening, the 8th ult., a concert was given in the Wesleyan Chapel, in aid of the New Organ Fund, the instrument (consisting of two complete manuals and 20 registers) having been opened on Sunday, the 7th ult., by W. H. Wale, Esq., Mus. Bac., F.C.C.O. The band and chorus numbered about 100 performers. Handel's Oratorio Samson was performed in a very efficient manner, the solos being entrusted to Miss Issitt (of the Leicester Oratorio Concerts), Mrs. Pollard (from Nottingham), Messrs. T. Nobles, W. Skinner, Pentelon, W. Nobles, Barrett, and Jamblin. Miss Issitt, in "Let the bright Seraphim," and Mrs. Pollard, in "Return, O God of Hosts," elicited special applause. The choruses were given in a precise and accurate manner. Mr. Sanderson, of Higham, led the band, which consisted of about 20 instruments, the oboe and bassoon being supplied by W. T. Rowlett, Esq., and T. A. Wykes, Esq., of the Anemoic Union; W. H. Wale, Esq., taking his place as before at the organ. Mr. W. J. Lamb, of Higham Ferrers, conducted, and under his direction the concert was a great success.

SLOUGH.—Mr. John Gower's evening concert took place in the hall of the Mechanics' Institution, on Friday, the 5th ult. The artists were Miss Grace Armytage (soprano), Mr. Smith, Mr. Mellor, and Mr. Christian. Mr. Liddle, organist at Clewer Church, contributed two solos on the violin. Mr. Gower accompanied on the pianoforte, and also played two solos, one of which was encored.

WALLINGTON.—Mr. Herbert Green's Ballad Concert on the 16th ult. was a great success, the School-room being filled by a highly fashionable audience. The members of the Choral Society, which, owing to Mr. Green's painstaking labours, has in so short a time been placed on a permanent basis, acquitted themselves admirably, especially in Sullivan's "Echoes" and Mendelssohn's "The Nightingale." The vocalists comprised Miss Louisa George, Mr. Evison, and Mr. Bunker. The instrumental features were Chopin's Waltz in A flat, capably played by Mr. Herbert Green, and loudly applauded; and a Trio for the pianoforte, played by Mr. Green, Miss Ansell, and Miss Robinson, two young pupils of Mr. Green. Mr. Alfred Pusey accompanied the part-songs most efficiently.

WOOLWICH.—On Friday evening, the 5th ult., Miss S. F. Mascall gave her Summer Festival Concert at the Town Hall, which was exceedingly well filled. A piano solo, "Le reveil des oiseaux," was played by Miss Mascall to perfection, and she was warmly applauded; she also accompanied the whole of the vocalists, and contributed a solo on the violin-piano. Mrs. Sallenger sang admirably, Bellini's "Se Romeo," and "One morning, oh so early." Mrs. G. H. Baker was very successful in all her songs. Of the gentlemen who took part in the evening's performance, it is only necessary to say that they acquitted themselves most creditably. The choruses all went steadily, one for ladies' voices only, entitled "Remembrance," composed by Miss S. F. Mascall, being especially well rendered.

WORCESTER.—At the annual meeting of the Worcester Musical Society, held on the 26th May, Mr. J. W. Isaac, the President, and all the officers were unanimously re-elected. The report, which was read by Mr. Spark, the Hon. Sec., showed that the Society is in a highly flourishing condition, and the promoters of the Association have every reason to be proud of the success of their efforts.

YORK.—On the 9th ult. the Amateur Musical Society gave its second annual entertainment in aid of the funds of the York Dispensary in the Corn Exchange, before a highly influential and numerous audience. The programme comprised overtures, part-songs, readings, &c. A feature in the evening's entertainment was the singing, for the first time, of a new hymn written by Mr. John Brown, and set to a very fine tune by Mr. George Dennis, a member of the Society, which was enthusiastically received and re-demanded. Miss Duffill distinguished herself in her playing of Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," and Mr. Walter Tenniswood was very successful in a Tarantelle by Ascher. Mr. Duffill conducted. It is gratifying to add that there will be a balance of between nine and ten pounds to hand over to the Dispensary.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. W. Fossey Bradshaw (assistant organist to Mr. Albert Lowe), to the Lock Chapel, Harrow Road. —Mr. Sparrow (organist of Redditch Parish Church, and late of Aston Church, Birmingham), to Ruabon Church, and private organist to Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, Bart., M.P.—Mr. Henry J. W. HATTERSLEY and Co., 10 and 12, Bow-street, Sheffield.
These Instruments are superior to all other Makers, English or Foreign.

Every Instrument voiced and thoroughly tested before leaving the establishment by Mr. Wm. Hattersley.

These Instruments are manufactured from the very best, well-seasoned Materials, in double veneered cases, and upon improve-principles, and contain all the latest improvements invented by W.
Hattersley, and although the cost of their construction is thereby considerably increased, the fact of their being manufactured for their own retail sale only (and not for the trade), enables them to sell their Harmoniums at the same price as the ordinary and much inferior
Harmoniums sold by other music dealers.

Books of Designs and above 200 testimonials free by post or upon application.

Special attention is called to the DRAWING-ROOM MODELS, as being the most perfect Harmoniums ever manufactured, having a

CAUTION.—Being in London, and finding that a number of imitations of my now celebrated SHORT IRON
GRAND PIANOS are offered to the public as the genuine Instruments, I think it due to the Musical Profession, Amateurs, and the Trade, to make the following statement:—Nine years ago, after much thought and labour, I succeeded in completing the short Grand, adopting the cross-string principle of Steinway, to lessen
the size, and making many improvements in the sound-board and action; and it is well known to the musical world of Germany that I was the originator of these Pianos. Since that time additional improvements have been effected, the sale has gradually increased, and at the present time I have more than 250 workmen engaged exclusively on their manufacture. The acknowledged superiority of these Pianofortes to any other description of the same size has caused them to be closely imitated by various makers; and, in one instance, the name "Beethoven Grand," which I originally used as a distinctive trade mark, but have since abandoned, has been adopted; and with unexampled modesty, the public is now invited to accept the copy as the original, and to consider the genuine as spurious.
Among the numerous testimonials I have received (including five medals), I may be permitted to mention that his Majesty the King of Saxony, who takes great interest in Art and Manufactures, and is in addition an excellent musician, honoured my manufactory with a visit on February 25th last, and was pleased to express his entire satisfaction.
The Depot for my Pianofortes in London is at Mr. FLAVELL'S, 26,
North Audley Street, W., where they may be seen in great variety.—
